(44) Heading 9902.38.11 (relating to mixtures of dicofol and application adjuvants).
(45) Heading 9902.39.14 (relating to cross-linked polyvinylbenzyltrimethylammonium chloride).
(46) Heading 9902.40.11 (relating to bicycle tires, inner tubes, and rim strips).
(47) Heading 9902.51.01 (relating to certain wools).
(48) Heading 9902.61.00 (relating to certain knitwear fabricated in Guam).
(49) Heading 9902.70.13 (relating to certain kitchenware).
(50) Heading 9902.73.12 (relating to cable or inner wire for caliper brakes).
(51) Heading 9902.73.15 (relating to bicycle chains).
(52) Heading 9902.84.44 (relating to machines designed for heat-set, stretch texturing of continuous man-made fibers).
(53) Heading 9902.84.48 (relating to circular knitting machines and parts).
(54) Heading 9902.84.51 (relating to knitting needles).
(55) Heading 9902.85.12 (relating to generator lighting sets for bicycles).
(56) Heading 9902.87.14 (relating to caliper brakes).
(57) Heading 9902.29.27 (relating to tetraamino biphenyl).
(58) Heading 9902.29.88 (relating to cyclosporine).
(59) Heading 9902.66.03 (relating to frames for hand-held umbrellas).
(60) Heading 9902.26.14 (relating to synthetic rutile).
(61) Heading 9902.57.01 (relating to needlecraft display models, primarily hand stitched, of completed mass-produced kits).
(62) Heading 9902.29.52 (relating to 2,5-dimethoxyacetanilide).
(63) Heading 9902.29.61 (relating to 3-(4'-aminobenzamido)phenyl-β-hydroxyethylsulfone).
(64) Heading 9902.29.25 (relating to 4-chloro-2-nitroaniline).
(65) Heading 9902.29.07 (relating to 2-[(3-nitrophenyl)-sulfonyl]ethanol).
(66) Heading 9902.29.42 (relating to 4-chloro-2,5-dimethoxyaniline).
(67) Heading 9902.29.45 (relating to 3.4-diaminophenetole dihydrogen sulfate).
(68) Heading 9902.84.42 (relating to certain narrow weaving machines).
(69) Heading 9902.84.45 (relating to certain wool carding and spinning machinery).
(70) Heading 9902.84.50 (relating to certain lace braiding machines).
(71) Heading 9902.29.86 (relating to 2,4-dichloro-5-sulfamoylbenzoic acid).
(72) Heading 9902.25.04 (relating to graphite).

SEC. 1202. AROMATIC COUPLERS AND COUPLE INTERMEDIATES.

Headings 9902.29.01 and 9902.37.07 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States (19 U.S.C. 3007) are each amended by striking out "12/31/90" and inserting in lieu thereof "12/31/92".

SEC. 1203. CERTAIN HOSIERY KNITTING MACHINES.

Heading 9902.84.47 is amended—
(1) by striking out "12/31/90" and inserting in lieu thereof "12/31/92",
(2) by striking out "single cylinder fine gauge and all double cylinder" and inserting in lieu thereof "and parts thereof", and
(3) by striking out "or 8447.20.60" and inserting in lieu thereof ", 8447.20.60, or 8448.59.10".

SEC. 1204. PARTS AND ACCESSORIES OF COPYING MACHINES.

Heading 9902.90.90 is amended—
(1) by inserting "and accessories" after "Parts",
(2) by inserting ", and parts and accessories and accessory and ancillary machines which are intended for attachment to an electrostatic photocopier and which do not operate independently of such photocopier (provided for in subheading 8472.90.80)" after "(provided for in subheading 9009.90.00)", and
(3) by striking out "12/31/90" and inserting in lieu thereof "12/31/92".

SEC. 1205. TOY JEWELRY, CERTAIN SMALL TOYS AND NOVELTY GOODS.

Heading 9902.71.13 is amended to read as follows:

"	9902.71.13	Toy jewelry provided for in subheading 7117.19.10, 7117.19.50, 7117.90.40 (except parts) or 7117.90.50 (except parts) valued not over 5¢ per piece; and articles (except parts) provided for in heading 9502, 9503, or 9504 or subheading 9505.90 (except balloons, marbles, dice, and diecast vehicles), valued not over 5¢ per unit	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1206. JACQUARD CARDS.

(a) EXISTING SUSPENSION.—Heading 9902.48.23 is amended—
(1) by striking out "4823.90.85" in the article description and inserting in lieu thereof "3926.90.90, 4823.30.00, 4823.90.85,", and
(2) by striking "12/31/90" and inserting in lieu thereof "12/31/92".
(b) CARDS TO BE USED AS JACQUARD CARDS.—Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.39.27	Cards, not punched, suitable for use as, or in making, jacquard cards (provided for in subheading 3926.90.90, 4823.30.00, or 4823.90.85)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1207. C-AMINES.

Heading 9902.29.29 is repealed.

SEC. 1208. CORNED BEEF IN AIRTIGHT CONTAINERS.

Heading 9902.16.02 is amended—
(1) by striking out "3%" and inserting in lieu thereof "Free"; and
(2) by striking out "12/31/89" and inserting in lieu thereof "12/31/92".

SEC. 1209. MENTHOL FEEDSTOCKS.

Heading 9902.29.05 is amended—
(1) by striking out "20 percent" in the article description and inserting in lieu thereof "30 percent", and
(2) by striking out "12/31/90" and inserting in lieu thereof "12/31/92".

SEC. 1210. SURGICAL GOWNS AND DRAPES.

Heading 9902.62.10 is amended to read as follows:

"	9902.62.10	Spunlaced or bonded fiber fabric disposable gowns of manmade fibers for use in performing surgical procedures (provided for in subheading 6210.10.40) and spunlaced or bonded fiber fabric disposable surgical drapes of manmade fibers (provided for in subheading 6307.90.70)	5.6%	No change (E*, IL) 3.3% (CA)	26.5%	On or before 12/31/92, except that in the case of goods originating in the territory of Canada, the effective period is on or before 12/31/98	".

Subpart B—New Provisions

SEC. 1301. CALCIUM ACETYLSALICYLATE (CALCIUM CARBASPIRIN).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.07	Calcium acetylsalicylate (provided for in subheading 2918.22.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1302. BENDIOCARB.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.08	2,2-Dimethyl-1,3-benzodioxol-4-yl methylcarbamate (Bendiocarb) (provided for in subheading 2932.90.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1303. CERTAIN GLASS BULBS.

Chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.70.11	Monochrome glass envelopes with both (1) gray, tinted skirted faceplates, and (2) either a video display diagonal of 14 inches and under or a transmission level of 37% or less (provided for in subheading 7011.20.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1304. OCTADECYL ISOCYANATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.09	Octadecyl isocyanate (provided for in subheading 2929.10.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1305. MOLTEN-SALT-COOLED ACRYLIC ACID REACTORS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.84.19	Molten-salt-cooled acrylic acid reactors and their associated parts, accessories, and equipment, imported as an entirety (provided for in subheading 8419.89.50, 8419.90.30, or 8419.90.90)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1306. DIMETHYLBENZYLIDENE SORBITOL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.10	Dimethylbenzylidene sorbitol (provided for in subheading 2932.90.41)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1307. 4,4'-ISOPROPYLIDENEDICYCLOHEXANOL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.11	4,4'-Isopropylidenedicyclohexanol (provided for in subheading 2906.19.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1308. SULFACHLOROPYRIDAZINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.12	Sulfachloropyridazine (provided for in subheading 2935.00.39)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/90	".

SEC. 1309. THIOTHIAMINE HYDROCHLORIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.13	Thiothiamine hydrochloride (CAS No. 2443-50-7) (provided for in subheading 2934.10.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1310. PARAMINE ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.14	1,4-Diaminobenzene-2-sulfonic acid (CAS No. 88-45-9) (provided for in subheading 2921.59.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1311. SUCRALFATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new subheading:

"	9902.30.57	Sucralfate (provided for in subheading 2940.00.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1312. ANTHRAQUINONE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.16	Anthraquinone (provided for in subheading 2914.61.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1313. THEOBROMINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.17	Theobromine (provided for in subheadings 2939.90.10 and 2939.90.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1314. CHLORHEXANONE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.18	Chlorhexanone (provided for in subheading 2914.70.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1315. NAPHTHALIC ACID ANHYDRIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.19	Naphthalic acid anhydride (provided for in subheading 2917.39.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1316. K-ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.20	1-Amino-8-hydroxy-4,6-naphthalene-disulfonic acid, monosodium salt (CAS No. 85294-32-2) (provided for in subheading 2922.21.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1317. BROENNER'S ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.21	2-Naphthylamine-6-sulfonic acid (CAS No. 93-00-5) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1318. D SALT.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.22	2-Naphthylamine-1,5-disulfonic acid and the monosodium salt (CAS Nos. 117-62-4 and 19532-03-07) (provided for in subheading 2921.42.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1319. NEVILLE AND WINTER'S ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.23	1-Naphthol-4-sulfonic acid and the monosodium salt (CAS Nos. 84-87-7 and 6099-57-6) (provided for in subheading 2908.20.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1320. ANIS BASE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.24	3-Aminomethoxy-benzanilide (provided for in subheading 2924.29.25)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1321. NAPHTHOL AS TYPES.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.25	3-Hydroxy-2-naphthanilide (CAS No. 92-77-3); 3-Hydroxy-2-naphtho-o-toluidide (CAS No. 135-61-5); 3-Hydroxy-2-naphtho-o-anisidide (CAS No. 135-62-6); 3-Hydroxy-2-naphtho-o-phenetidide (CAS No. 92-74-0); 3-Hydroxy-2-naphtho-4-chloro-2,5-dimethoxyanilide (CAS No. 4273-92-1); and N,N'-bis(acetoacetyl-o-toluidine) (CAS No. 91-96-3) (provided for in subheading 2924.29.14)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1322. CEFTAZIDIME TERTIARY BUTYL ESTER.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.60.10	(6R, 7R)-7-[(Z)-2-(2-Aminothiazol-4-yl)-2-[(2-tert-butoxycarbonyl)prop-2-oxyiminol acetamido]-3-(1-pyridinium-methyl)ceph-3-em-4-carboxylate (Ceftazidime tertiary butyl ester) (provided for in subheading 2934.90.25)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 6/30/92	".

SEC. 1323. CERTAIN PLASTIC WEB SHEETING.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of the U.S. notes thereto the following new note:

"10. For purposes of heading 9902.56.03, the term 'nonwoven fiber sheet' means sheet comprising a highly uniform and random array of polyester fibers of 1.5 to 3.0 denier, thermally bonded and calendered into a smooth surface web having—

"(a) a thickness of 3.7 to 4.0 mils;

"(b) a basis weight of 2.5 oz. per sq. yd.;

"(c) a machine tensile strength of 30 lb. per sq. in. or greater;

"(d) a low cross-direction tensile (approximately ⅓ of MD tensile strength); and

"(e) a Frazier air permeability of 1.0 to 1.5 cfm per sq. ft."; and

(2) by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.56.03	Nonwoven fiber sheet (provided for in subheading 5603.00.90)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1324. MAGNETIC VIDEO TAPE RECORDINGS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.85.24	Video tape recordings of a width exceeding 6.5 mm but not exceeding 16 mm, in cassettes of United States origin as certified by the importers, and valued at not over $7.00 per pre-recorded cassette unit (provided for in subheading 8524.23.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1325. MIXED ORTHO/PARA TOLUENESULFONOMIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.26	Mixed ortho/para toluenesulfonamide (provided for in subheading 2935.00.47)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1326. 2,6-DICHLOROBENZONITRILE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.27	2,6-Dichlorobenzonitrile (provided for in subheading 2926.90.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

(b) WITH INERTS.—Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.38.13	Mixtures of 2,6-dichlorobenzonitrile (90%) and inerts (up to 10%) (provided for in subheading 3808.30.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1327. 1-[1-((4-CHLORO-2-(TRIFLUOROMETHYL)PHENYL) IMINO)-2-PROPOXYETHYL]-1-H-IMIDAZOLE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.28	1-[1-((4-Chloro-2-(trifluoromethyl)- phenyl)imino)-2-propoxyethyl]-1-H-imidazole (provided for in subheading 2933.29.30)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1328. CERTAIN CHRISTMAS ORNAMENTS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.95.05	Christmas ornaments other than ornaments of glass or wood (provided for in subheading 9505.10.25)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1329. FROZEN CARROTS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.07.10	Carrots, frozen (provided for in subheading 0710.80.70)	2.2¢/kg	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1330. IMPACT LINE PRINTERS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.84.65	Impact line printers using band drive mechanisms and capable of printing speeds of not less than 1,300 lines per minute (provided for in subheading 8471.92.65)	No change	No change	3.75%	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1331. AMINO ACETANILIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.29	4-Aminoacetanilide (CAS No. 122-80-5) (provided for in subheading 2924.29.45)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1332. 6 AMINO-2-NAPHTHENE SULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.30	6-Amino-2-naphthalenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 93-00-5) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1333. 8 AMINO-2-NAPHTHENE SULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.31	8-Amino-2-naphthalenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 119-28-8) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1334. 5 (AND 8) AMINO-2 NAPHTHALENE SULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.32	Mixtures of 5- and 8-amino-2-naphthalenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 119-28-8) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.30)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1335. 5 AMINO 2 NAPHTHALENE SULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.33	5-Amino-2-naphthalenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 119-79-9) (provided in subheading 2921.45.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1336. 1-NAPHTHYLAMINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.34	1-Naphthylamine (CAS No. 134-32-7) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1337. 4 AMINO-1-NAPHTHALENE SULFONIC ACID, SODIUM SALT.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.35	4-Amino-1-naphthalenesulfonic acid, sodium salt (CAS No. 130-13-2) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1338. 1,4 DIHYDROXYANTHRAQUINONE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.36	1,4-Dihydroxy-anthraquinone (CAS No. 81-64-1) (provided for in subheading 2914.69.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1339. 7 NITRO NAPHTH [1,2] OXADIAZOLE 5-SULFONIC.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.37	7-Nitronaphth-[1,2] oxadiazole-5-sulfonic acid (CAS No. 84-91-3) (provided for in subheading 2934.90.06)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1340. 4-CHLORO-α-α-α-TRIFLUORO-O-TOLUIDINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.38	4-Chloro-α,α,α-trifluoro-o-toluidine (CAS No. 445-03-4) (provided for in subheading 2921.43.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1341. 7-AMINO-1,3-NAPHTHALENESULFONIC ACID, MONOPOTASSIUM SALT.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.39	7-Amino-1,3-naphthalenesulfonic acid, monopotassium salt (CAS No. 842-15-9) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1342. 2-AMINO-4-CHLOROPHENOL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.40	2-Amino-4-chlorophenol (CAS No. 95-85-2) (provided for in subheading 2922.29.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1343. 2,4-DIAMINO BENZENE SULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.41	2,4-Diaminobenzene-sulfonic acid (CAS No. 88-63-1) (provided for in subheading 2921.50.51)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1344. 2,5 DICHLORO-4-(3-METHYL-5-OXO-2 PYRAZOLIN-1-YL) BENZENESULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.42	2,5-Dichloro-4-(3-methyl-5-oxo-2-pyrazolin-1-yl)-benzenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 84-57-1) (provided for in subheading 2933.19.424)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1345. 7-HYDROXY 1,3-NAPHTHALENE DISULFONIC ACID-DIPOTASSIUM SALT.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.43	7-Hydroxy-1,3-naphthalene-disulfonic acid, dipotassium salt (CAS No. 842-18-2) (provided for in subheading 2908.20.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1346. O-ANISIDINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.44	o-Anisidine (CAS No. 90-04-0) (provided for in subheading 2922.22.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1347. 1-AMINO-2-BROMO-4-HYDROXYANTHRAQUINONE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.45	1-Amino-2-bromo-4-hydroxy-anthraquinone (CAS No. 116-82-5) (provided for in subheading 2922.50.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1348. 2-CHLORO-4-NITROANILINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.46	2-Chloro-4-nitroaniline (CAS No. 121-87-9) (provided for in subheading 2921.42.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1349. (1,3,3 TRIMETHYL-INDOLINE-2-YLIDENE) ACETALDEHYDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.47	(1,3,3-Trimethyl-indoline-2-ylidene)-acetaldehyde (CAS No. 84-83-3) (provided for in subheading 2933.90.39)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1350. 2,3 DIHYDRO 1,3,3 TRIMETHYL-2-METHYLENE-1H-INDOLE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.48	1,3,3-Trimethyl-2-methyleneindoline (CAS No. 118-12-7) (provided for in subheading 2933.90.39)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1351. 2[(4 AMINOPHENYL) SULFONYL] ETHANOL HYDROGEN SULFATE ESTER.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.49	2[(4-Aminophenyl)-sulfonyl]ethanol, hydrogen sulfate ester (CAS No. 2494-89-5) (provided for in subheading 2930.90.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1352. 7-ANILINO-4-HYDROXY-2 NAPHTHALENE SULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.50	7-Anilino-4-hydroxy-2-naphthalenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 119-40-4) (provided for in subheading 2922.29.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1353. 1,4-DIAMINO-2,3 DIHYDROANTHRAQUINONE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.51	1,4-Diamino-2,3-dihydro-anthraquinone (CAS No. 81-63-0) (provided for in subheading 2922.30.30).....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1354. CASTOR OIL AND ITS FRACTIONS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.15.15	Castor oil and its fractions (provided for in subheading 1515.30.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1355. 0,0-DIMETHYL-S-[(4-OXO-1,2,3-BENZOTRIAZIN-3-(4H)-YL)METHYL] PHOSPHORODITHIOATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.52	0,0-Dimethyl-S-[(4-oxo-1,2,3-benzotriazin-3-(4H)-yl)methyl] phosphorodithioate (provided for in subheading 2933.90.18)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1356. SUSPENSION OF DUTY ON CERTAIN MACHINES FOR USE IN THE MANUFACTURE OF WHEELS FOR BICYCLES AND ON CERTAIN BICYCLE PARTS.

(a) MACHINES.—Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.84.79	Wheelbuilding, wheeltruing, rim punching, tire fitting and similar machines for use in the manufacture of wheels for bicycles (provided for in subheading 8479.89.90).....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

(b) CERTAIN PARTS.—Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new headings:

"	9902.87.15	Bicycle handlebar stems wholly of aluminum alloy, valued over $2.15 each (provided for in subheading 8714.99.90).....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92
	9902.87.16	Bicycle handlebar stem rotor assemblies (provided for in subheading 8714.99.90).....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1357. L-ALANYL - L-PROLINE, ALSO KNOWN AS ALA PRO.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.53	L-Alanyl-L-proline (provided for in subheading 2933.90.50).....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1358. TFA LYS PRO IN FREE BASE AND TOSYL SALT FORMS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.54	Trifluoroacetyl-L-lysine-L-proline in free base and tosyl salt forms (provided for in subheadings 2922.49.50 and 2922.49.30, respectively)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1359. CERTAIN TIMING APPARATUS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.91.06	Apparatus for measuring, recording, or otherwise indicating intervals of time, with clock or watch movements, battery or AC powered and with opto-electronic display only (provided for in subheading 9106.90.80).....	3.9% on the apparatus + 5.3% on the battery	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1360. CIPROFLOXACIN HYDROCHLORIDE, CIPROFLOXACIN, AND NIMODIPINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new headings:

"	9902.30.55	Nimodipine (provided for in subheading 2933.39.35)..	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92
	9902.30.56	Ciprofloxacin and its hydrochloride salt (provided for in subheading 2933.59.27).....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1361. CERTAIN FURNITURE AND SEATS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.94.01	Furniture, seats, and parts thereof, of cane, osier, bamboo or other similar materials, including rattan (provided for in subheading 9401.50.00, 9401.90.25, 9403.80.30, or 9403.90.25)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1362. WICKER PRODUCTS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.46.02	Wicker products (provided for in subheading 4602.10.11, 4602.10.13, 4602.10.19, 4602.10.40, or 4602.10.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1363. (6R-(6A,7B(Z)))-7-(((2-AMINO-4-THIAZOLYL)((CARBOXY-METHOXY) IMINO) ACETYL) AMINO)-3-ETHENYL-8-OXO-5-THIA-1-AZABICYCLO(4.2.0) OCT-2-ENE-2-CARBOXYLIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.58	(6R-(6a,7B(z)))-7-(((2-Amino-4-thiazolyl)((carboxymethoxy) imino) acetyl) amino)-3-ethenyl-8-oxo-5-thia-1-azabicyclo(4.2.0)- oct-2-ene-2-carboxylic acid (provided for in subheading 2941.90.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1364. N-(4-(((2-AMINO-5-FORMYL-1,4,5,6,7,8-HEXAHYDRO-4-OXO-6-PTERIDINYL) METHYL)AMINO)BENZOYL)-L-GLUTAMIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.59	N-(4-(((2-Amino-5-formyl-1,4,5,6,7,8-hexahydro-4-oxo-6-pteridinyl) methyl)amino)benzoyl)-L-glutamic acid (provided for in subheading 2936.29.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1365. (1)3-QUINOLINECARBOXYLIC ACID, 1-ETHYL-6-FLUORO-1,4-DIHYDRO-4-OXO-7-(1-PIPERAZINYL)-, ALSO KNOWN AS NORFLOXACIN.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.60	1-Ethyl-6-fluoro-1,4-dihydro-4-oxo-7-(1-piperazinyl)-3-quinolinecarboxylic acid (Norfloxacin) (provided for in subheading 2933.59.27)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1366. 2,2-DIMETHYLCYCLOPROPYLCARBOXAMIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.61	2,2-Dimethylcyclopropyl-carboxamide (provided for in subheading 2924.29.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1367. N-AMIDINO-3,5-DIAMINO-6-CHLOROPYRAZINECARBOXAMIDE MONOHYDROCHLORIDE DIHYDRATE, ALSO KNOWN AS AMILORIDE HYDROCHLORIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.62	N-Amidino-3,5-diamino-6-chloropyrazinecarboxamide, monohydrochloride dihydrate (Amiloride hydrochloride) (provided for in subheading 2933.90.36)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1368. CHEMICAL LIGHT ACTIVATOR BLEND.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.63	Mixtures of dimethyl phthalate, t-butanol, hydrogen peroxide, and sodium salicylate (provided for in subheading 3823.90.29)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1369. GRIPPING NARROW FABRICS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.58.06	Fastener fabric tapes of man made fibers (provided for in subheading 5806.10.20)	7%	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1370. BPIP.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.64	N,N'-Bis(2,2,6,6-tetramethyl-4-piperadinyl)-1,6-hexanediamine (CAS No. 612-55-7) (provided for in subheading 2933.39.47)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1371. MBEP.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.65	Monobutyl-p-ethylphenol (provided for in subheading 2907.19.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1372. 2-ETHYLANTHRAQUINONE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.66	2-Ethylanthraquinone (provided for in subheading 2914.69.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1373. RHODAMINE 2C BASE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.67	Rhodamine 2C base (CAS No. 41382-37-0) (provided for in subheading 2932.90.45)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1374. POLYMIN P AND POLYMIN P HYDROCHLORIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.39.11	Polymin P and Polymin P hydrochloride (provided for in subheading 3911.90.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1375. POLYMIN SNA 60.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.39.12	Polymin SNA 60 (CAS No. 28825-79-8) (provided for in subheading 3911.90.30)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1376. ORNITHINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.68	L-Ornithine, ethyl ester (L-2,5-Diamino-pentanoic acid) (CAS No. 84772-29-2) (provided for in subheading 2922.49.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1377. TEICOPLANIN.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.69	Teicoplanin (provided for in subheading 3003.20.00 or 3004.20.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1378. ACETOACET-PARA-TOLUIDIDE (AAPT).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.70	Acetoacet-para-toluidide (provided for in subheading 2924.29.09)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1379. ACETOACETSULFANILIC ACID, POTASSIUM SALT (AA SULFANILIC ACID POTASSIUM SALT).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.71	Acetoacetsulfanilic acid, potassium salt (provided for in subheading 2924.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1380. 6-METHYLURACIL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.72	6-Methyluracil (provided for in subheading 2933.59.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1381. ETHYL 2-(2-AMINOTHIAZOLE-4-YL)-2-HYDROXYIMINO- ACETATE (ATHAET).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.73	Ethyl 2-(2-aminothiazole-4-yl)-2-hydroxyiminoacetate (provided for in subheading 2934.10.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1382. ETHYL 2-(2-AMINOTHIAZOLE-4-YL)-2-METHOXYIMINO- ACETATE (ATMAET).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.74	Ethyl 2-(2-aminothiazole-4-yl)-2-methoxyiminoacetate (provided for in subheading 2934.10.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1383. 4,4'-METHYLENE-BIS-(2,6-DIMETHYLPHENYLCYANATE).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.75	4,4'-Methylenebis-(2, 6-dimethylphenylcyanate) (provided for in subheading 2907.29.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1384. 2,2'-BIS(4-CYANATOPHENYL-1,1,1,3,3,3-HEXAFLUOROPROPANE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.76	2,2'-Bis(4-cyanatophenyl)-1,1,1,3,3,3-hexafluoropropane (provided for in subheading 2929.90.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1385. 4,4'-THIODIPHENYL CYANATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.77	4,4'-Thiodiphenyl cyanate (provided for in subheading 2930.90.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1386. 1,1-ETHYLIDENE-BIS-(PHENYL-4-CYANATE).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.78	1,1-Ethylidenebis-(phenyl-4-cyanate) (provided for in subheading 2929.90.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1387. HYDROCARBON NOVOLAC CYANATE ESTER.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.79	Hydrocarbon novolac cyanate ester (provided for in subheading 3911.90.30)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1388. 4,4'-METHYLENE-BIS-(3-CHLORO-2,6-DIETHYL ANILINE).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.80	4,4'-Methylenebis-(3-chloro-2,6-diethylaniline) (provided for in subheading 2921.42.30)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	"

SEC. 1389. 4,4'-METHYLENE-BIS-(2,6-DIISOPROPYL ANILINE).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.81	4,4'-Methylenebis-(2,6-diisopropyl-aniline) (provided for in subheading 2921.42.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1390. L-CARNITINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.82	L-Carnitine (provided for in subheading 2923.90.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1391. DIPHENOLIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.83	4,4-Bis(4-hydroxyphenyl)pentanoic acid (CAS No. 126-00-1) (provided for in subheading 2918.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1392. 2,6-HNA.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.84	6-Hydroxy-2-naphthoic acid (provided for in subheading 2918.29.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1393. ADC-6.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.85	3-Amino-2-(1-hydroxyethyl)-pentanedioic acid, 5-methyl ester (provided for in subheading 2922.50.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1394. DIFLUNISAL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.86	2',4'-Difluoro-4-hydroxy-3-biphenylcarboxylic acid (Diflunisal) (provided for in subheading 2918.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1395. TRIFLUOROMETHYLANILINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.87	3-(Trifluoromethyl-aniline (CAS No. 98-16-8) (m-Aminobenzotrifluoride) (provided for in subheading 2921.43.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/90	".

SEC. 1396. TAMOXIFEN CITRATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.88	Tamoxifen citrate (provided for in subheading 2922.19.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1397. FENOFIBRATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.89	2-[4-(4-Chlorobenzoyl)phenoxy]-2-methylpropanoic acid, isopropyl ester (Fenofibrate) (provided for in subheading 3004.90.60)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1398. 6-T-BUTYL 2,4 XYLENOL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.90	6-t-Butyl-2,4-xylenol (provided for in subheading 2907.19.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1399. 2,4-DIAMINO-6-PHENYL-1,3,5-TRIAZINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.91	2,4-Diamino-6-phenyl-1,3,5-triazine (provided for in subheading 2933.69.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1400. IOPAMIDOL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.92	Iopamidol (provided for in subheading 2924.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 9/30/91	".

SEC. 1401. IOHEXOL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.93	N,N'-Bis(2,3-dihydroxypropyl)-5-[N-(2,3-dihydroxypropyl)-acetamido]-2,4,6-triiodoisophthalamide (Iohexol) (provided for in subheading 2924.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 9/30/91	".

SEC. 1402. p-HYDROXYBENZALDEHYDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.94	p-Hydroxybenzaldehyde (provided for in subheading 2912.49.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1403. IOXAGLATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.95	N-(2-Hydroxyethyl)-2,4,6-triiodo-5-[2-(2,4,6-triiodo-3-(N-methylacetamido)-5-(methylcarbamoyl)benzamido)acetamido]-isophthalamic acid (Ioxaglic acid) (provided for in subheading 2924.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 9/30/91	".

SEC. 1404. 7-ACETYL-1,1,3,4,4,6-HEXAMETHYLTETRAHYDRO- NAPHTHALENE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9902.30.96	7-Acetyl-1,1,3,4,4,6-hexamethyltetrahydronaphthalene (provided for in subheading 2914.30.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92	".

SEC. 1405. MODELING PASTES.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

PART 3—EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 1601. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, the amendments made by this subtitle shall apply with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after October 1, 1990.

(b) RETROACTIVE APPLICATION FOR CERTAIN LIQUIDATIONS AND RELIQUIDATIONS.—

(1) Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, upon proper request filed with the appropriate customs officer after September 30, 1990, and before April 1, 1991, any entry—

(A) which was made after the applicable date and before October 1, 1990, and

(B) with respect to which there would have been no duty, or a lesser duty, if any amendment made by section 1102, 1103, 1108, 1201(53), 1203, 1207, 1305, 1324, 1325, 1329, 1330, 1359, 1369, 1411, 1412, 1419, 1426, or 1430 applied to such entry, shall be liquidated or reliquidated as though such amendment applied to such entry.

(2) For purposes of this section—

(A) The term "applicable date" means—

(i) if the amendment described in paragraph (1)(B) is made by section 1412, April 30, 1986,

(ii) if such amendment is made by section 1324, December 31, 1987,

(iii) if such amendment is made by section 1330, October 1, 1988,

(iv) if such amendment is made by section 1102, 1103, 1108, 1203, 1325, 1329, 1359, 1369, 1411, 1419, or 1426, December 31, 1988,

(v) if such amendment is made by section 1305, July 1, 1989,

(vi) if such amendment is made by section 1201(53) or 1207, December 31, 1989, and

(vii) if such amendment is made by section 1430, January 31, 1990.

(B) The term "entry" includes any withdrawal from warehouse.

(c) BROOMS.—The amendments made by section 1107 shall apply with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the date that is 15 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

Subtitle B—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 1701. CERTAIN FORGINGS.

Notwithstanding sections 304 and 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Treasury, within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, shall, upon request filed with the appropriate customs officer, reliquidate entries numbered 85414397-7, 85414495-0, 85414647-9, 85414649-5, 85414983-2, 85414995-5, 85415031-3, 85415122-8, 85415244-7, 85415496-6, 85415619-7, 85415683-8, and 85415828-9, filed at the Port of Portland, Oregon, and, upon such reliquidation, shall refund the additional marking duties that were collected upon such entries pursuant to such section 304.

SEC. 1702. BI-LEVEL RAIL PASSENGER CARS.

Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1514) or any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Treasury shall admit free of duty each bi-level rail passenger car that was—

(1) entered after March 14, 1988, and before January 1, 1989, and classified under item 690.15 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States; and

(2) designed for, and is for the use of, the Department of Transportation of the State of Florida.

If the liquidation of the entry of any such rail car has become final before the date of the enactment of this Act, the entry shall, notwithstanding any other provision of law, be reliquidated in accordance with the provisions of this Act and any duties paid with respect to such entry shall be refunded.

SEC. 1703. CERTAIN EXTRACORPOREAL SHOCK WAVE LITHOTRIPTER.

Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1514) or any other provision of law, upon request filed with the appropriate customs officer within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, entry numbered 86-707943-6, dated November 10, 1985, shall be reliquidated as duty-free and any duties paid with respect to such entry shall be refunded.

SEC. 1704. FOREIGN TRADE ZONES.

Section 3(b) of the Act of June 18, 1934 (19 U.S.C. 81c(b)), is amended by striking out "before January 1, 1991" and inserting in lieu thereof "on or before December 31, 1992".

SEC. 1705. CERTAIN ENTRIES OF DIGITAL PROCESSING UNITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, upon proper request filed with the appropriate customs officer within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, any entry of a processing unit that—

(1) was entered under item 676.15 or 676.54 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States;

(2) would not, if classified under item 675.15, have been subject to temporary duties under item 945.83 or 945.84 of the Appendix to such Schedules; and shall be liquidated or reliquidated as free of duty and the Secretary of the Treasury shall refund any duties paid with respect to such entry.

(3) was made after January 16, 1986, and before July 2, 1987;

(b) PROCESSING UNIT.—For purposes of this section, the term "processing unit" means a digital processing unit for an automated data processing machine, unhoused, consisting of a printed circuit (single or multiple) with one or more electronic integrated circuits or other semiconductor devices mounted directly thereon.

SEC. 1706. NUCLEAR MAGNETIC SPECTROMETER.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall admit free of duty a Phillips Medical Systems 4 tesla nuclear magnetic resonance (NMR) spectrometer for the use of the University of Alabama at Birmingham. If the liquidation of the entry of the spectrometer becomes final before the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding any other provisions of law, shall—

(1) within 15 days after such date, reliquidate the entry in accordance with the provisions of this Act, and

(2) at the time of such reliquidation, make the appropriate refund of any duty paid with respect to the entry.

SEC. 1707. FOREIGN REPAIR OF VESSELS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 466 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1466) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) The duty imposed by subsection (a) of this section shall not apply to—

"(1) the cost of any equipment, or any part of equipment, purchased for, or the repair parts or materials to be used, or the expense of repairs made in a foreign country with respect to, LASH (Lighter Aboard Ship) barges documented under the laws of the United States and utilized as cargo containers, or

"(2) the cost of spare repair parts or materials (other than nets or nettings) which the owner or master of the vessel certifies are intended for use aboard a cargo vessel, documented under the laws of the United States and engaged in the foreign or coasting trade, for installation or use on such vessel, as needed, in the United States, at sea, or in a foreign country, but only if duty is paid under appropriate commodity classifications of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States upon first entry into the United States of each such spare part purchased in, or imported from, a foreign country.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to—

(1) any entry made before the date of enactment of this Act that is not liquidated on the date of enactment of this Act, and

(2) any entry made—

(A) on or after the date of enactment of this Act, and

(B) on or before December 31, 1992.

SEC. 1708. CERTAIN METHANOL ENTRIES.

Notwithstanding section 514 or 520 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Treasury shall—

(1) reliquidate as free of duty—

(A) Entry No. 85322102-3, dated June 21, 1985, and

(B) Entry No. 85603168-9, dated September 20, 1985, made at New York, New York, that consists of methanol, and

(2) refund any duties paid with respect to such entries, if the appropriate certification of actual use for such entries is submitted to the appropriate customs officer by no later than the date that is 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1709. CERTAIN FROZEN VEGETABLES.

Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, upon request filed with the appropriate customs officer within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall—

(1) liquidate or reliquidate as free of duty any entry, or withdrawal from warehouse for consumption, made after December 31, 1989, and before May 1, 1990, of—

(A) cut and frozen green beans (provided for in subheading 0710.22.40 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States), or

(B) frozen and off the cob whole kernel sweet corn (provided for in subheading 0710.40.00 of such Schedule), that is the product of a foreign country to which nondiscriminatory (most-favored-nation) trade treatment applies, and

(2) refund any duties paid with respect to such entry or withdrawal.

SEC. 1710. CERTAIN FILMS AND RECORDINGS.

Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, upon request filed with the appropriate customs officer within 180 days of the date of enactment of this Act, any entry, or withdrawal from warehouse for consumption, of any article described in items 960.50 through 960.70 of the Appendix to the Tariff Schedules of the United States (as in effect on August 11, 1985) which was made after August 11, 1985, and before January 1, 1987, shall be liquidated or reliquidated as though such entry or withdrawal had been made on August 11, 1985 and the Secretary of the Treasury shall make the appropriate refund of any duties paid with respect to such entry or withdrawal.

SEC. 1711. CERTAIN DISTILLED SPIRITS IN FOREIGN TRADE ZONES.

Subsection (c) of section 3 of the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 999, chapter 590; 19 U.S.C. 81c(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "domestic" before "denatured distilled spirits",

(2) by inserting "which have been withdrawn free of tax from a distilled spirits plant (within the meaning of section 5002(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986)" after "distilled spirits",

(3) by striking out "Notwithstanding" and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) Notwithstanding",

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of the fifth proviso of subsection (a), distilled spirits which have been removed from a distilled spirits plant (as defined in section 5002(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) upon payment or determination of tax may be used in the manufacture of production of medicines, medicinal preparation, food products, flavors, or flavoring extracts, which are unfit for beverage purposes, in a zone. Such products will be eligible for drawback under the internal revenue laws under the same conditions applicable to similar manufacturing or production operations occurring in customs territory.".

SEC. 1712. RELIQUIDATION OF CERTAIN ENTRIES AND REFUND OF ANTIDUMPING DUTIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1514) or any other provision of law—

(1) the entries listed in subsection (b) shall be reliquidated within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act,

(2) the importer of record of the entries shall not be liable for antidumping duties, and

(3) if any antidumping duties have been paid on the entries, either through liquidation or compromise under section 617 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1617), the Secretary of the Treasury shall refund the antidumping duties within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1713. SUBSTITUTION OF CRUDE PETROLEUM OR PETROLEUM DERIVATIVES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) Section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1313) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(p)(1) When the articles manufactured or produced under subsection (a) or (b), or duty paid imported articles, are stored in common storage with other articles of the same kind and quality that were otherwise manufactured or produced, drawback shall be paid on the articles withdrawn for export from such common storage (regardless of the source or origination of the articles withdrawn) if—

"(A) inventory records on a monthly basis (not daily or transaction by transaction) demonstrate sufficient quantities of imported duty-paid articles, or articles manufactured or produced under subsection (a) or (b), in the common storage against which such withdrawal shall be designated;

"(B) the drawback paid does not exceed the amount of drawback that would be payable hereunder had all of the articles withdrawn from common storage been imported and duty-paid, or manufactured or produced under subsection (a) or (b); and

"(C) certificates of delivery, or certificates of manufacture and delivery, establishing the drawback eligibility of the imported duty-paid articles, or articles manufactured or produced under subsection (a) or (b), when required, are filed with the drawback entry.

"(2) For purposes of this section, the term 'common storage' includes all articles of the same kind and quality stored in an area regardless of the number of bins, tanks, or other containers utilized.".

(2) The amendment made by this subsection shall apply to all drawback entries which were liquidated, under protest or in litigation, in accordance with C.S.D. 88-1, or relevant predecessor decision letter versions thereof, and shall be reliquidated in accordance with such amendment.

(b) DRAWBACK ON SUPPLIES.—Subsection (b) of section 309 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1309) is amended by inserting "imported articles," after "foreign-trade zone,".

SEC. 1714. AGGLOMERATE MARBLE FLOOR TILES.

(a) RECLASSIFICATION.—Chapter 68 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States (19 U.S.C. 3007) is amended by striking out subheading 6810.19.10 and inserting the following new subheadings with the article descriptions for such subheadings having the same degree of indentation as the article description for subheading 6804.22.60:

"		Floor and wall tiles:

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after October 1, 1990.

(2) RELIQUIDATION.—Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1514) or any other provision of law to the contrary, upon a request filed with the appropriate customs officer after September 30, 1990 and before April 1, 1991, any entry or withdrawal from warehouse for consumption of goods to which the amendment made by this section applies and that was made—

(A) after December 31, 1988; and

(B) before October 1, 1990;

and with respect to which there would have been a lower duty if the amendment made by this section had applied to such entry or withdrawal, shall be liquidated or reliquidated as though such entry or withdrawal had occurred on October 1, 1990.

SEC. 1715. ETHYL TERTIARY BUTYL ETHER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter I of chapter 99 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States (19 U.S.C. 3007) is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"	9901.00.52	Ethyl tertiary butyl ether (provided for in subheading 2909.19.10) and any mixture containing ethyl tertiary butyl ether	6.66¢/liter	No change (A, E, IL) 5.29¢/liter	6.66¢/liter	On or before 12/31/92 or the date before 12/31/92 on which Treasury regulation § 1.40-1 is withdrawn or declared invalid	"

(b) STAGED RATE REDUCTION.—Any staged rate reduction of a rate of duty set forth in heading 9901.00.50 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States that was proclaimed by the President before the date of enactment of this Act and would otherwise take effect after the date of enactment of this Act shall also apply to the corresponding rates of duty set forth in subheading 9901.00.52 of such Schedule.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the date that is 15 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1716. CANADIAN LOTTERY MATERIAL.

Section 553 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1553) is further amended—

(1) by redesignating the text of such section as subsection (a) of such section; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) Notwithstanding subsection (a), the entry for transportation in bond through the United States of any lottery ticket, printed paper that may be used as a lottery ticket, or any advertisement of any lottery, that is printed in Canada, shall be permitted without appraisement or the payment of duties under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, except that such regulations shall not permit the transportation of lottery materials in the personal baggage of a traveler.".

This amendment shall be effective fifteen days after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1717. METAL OXIDE VARISTORS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter II of chapter 99 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States (19 U.S.C. 3007) is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

and with respect to which there would have been a lower duty if the amendment made by this section had applied to such entry or withdrawal, shall be liquidated or reliquidated as though such entry or withdrawal had occurred on October 1, 1990.

TITLE II—CARIBBEAN BASIN ECONOMIC RECOVERY

SEC. 2001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Expansion Act of 1990".

SEC. 2002. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) a stable political and economic climate in the Caribbean region is necessary for the development of the countries in that region and for the security and economic interests of the United States;

(2) the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act was enacted in 1983 to assist in the achievement of such a climate by stimulating the development of the export potential of the region; and

(3) the commitment of the United States to the successful development of the region, as evidenced by the enactment of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act, should be reaffirmed, and further strengthened, by amending that Act to improve its operation.

SEC. 2003. REPEAL OF TERMINATION DATE ON DUTY-FREE TREATMENT UNDER THE ACT.

Section 218(b) of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2706(b)) is repealed.

SEC. 2004. WORKER RIGHTS.

Section 212 of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2702) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" after the semicolon at the end of subsection (b)(5);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of subsection (b)(6) and inserting "; and";

(3) by adding at the end of subsection (b) the following new paragraph:

"(7) if such country has not or is not taking steps to afford internationally recognized worker rights (as defined in section 502(a)(4) of the Trade Act of 1974) to workers in the country (including any designated zone in that country).";

(4) by amending the last sentence in subsection (b) by striking out "and (5)" and inserting "(5), and (7)"; and

(5) by amending subsection (c)(8) to read as follows:

"(8) whether or not such country has taken or is taking steps to afford to workers in that country (including any designated zone in that country) internationally recognized worker rights.".

SEC. 2005. REPORTS.

Section 212 of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2702) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) On or before October 1, 1993, and the close of each 3-year period thereafter, the President shall submit to the Congress a complete report regarding the operation of this title.".

SEC. 2006. INCREASE IN DUTY-FREE TOURIST ALLOWANCES.

(a) DUTY-FREE ALLOWANCE FOR RETURNING RESIDENTS.—Subchapter IV of chapter 98 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States is amended—

(1) by inserting the following new note at the end of the notes to such subchapter:

"4. As used in subheadings 9804.00.70 and 9804.00.72, the term 'beneficiary country' means a country listed in general note 3(c)(v)(A).";

(2) by striking out "subheading 9804.00.65 or 9804.00.70" and all that follows thereafter in the superior article description to subheadings 9804.00.65 and 9804.00.70 and inserting "subheadings 9804.00.65, 9804.00.70, and 9804.00.72 within 30 days preceding his arrival, and claims exemption under only one of such items on his arrival.";

(3) by striking out "$800" in subheading 9804.00.70 and inserting "$1,200";

(4) by inserting "or up to $600 of which have been acquired in one or more beneficiary countries" before the parenthetical matter in subheading 9804.00.70; and

(5) by inserting after subheading 9804.00.70 the following new subheading with the article description for the new subheading having the same degree of indentation as subheading 9804.00.70:

"	9804.00.72	Articles whether or not accompanying a person, not over $600 in aggregate fair market value in the country of acquisition, including— (a) but only in the case of an individual who has attained the age of 21, not more than 1 liter of alcoholic beverages or not more than 2 liters if at least one liter is the product of one or more beneficiary countries, and (b) not more than 200 cigarettes, and not more than 100 cigars, if such person arrives directly from a beneficiary country, not more than $400 of which shall have been acquired elsewhere than in beneficiary countries (but this item does not permit the entry of articles not accompanying a person which were acquired elsewhere than in beneficiary countries)	Free		Free	."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply with respect to residents of the United States who depart from the United States on or after the 15th day after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2007. DUTY-FREE TREATMENT FOR ARTICLES ASSEMBLED OR PROCESSED IN BENEFICIARY COUNTRIES FROM COMPONENTS OR MATERIALS PRODUCED IN THE UNITED STATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—U.S. Note 2 of subchapter II of chapter 98 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States is amended—

(1) by striking out "2. Any" and inserting "2. (a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), any"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(b) No article (except an article listed in section 213(b) of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2703(b)) may be treated as a foreign article, or as subject to duty, if—

"(i) the article is—

"(A) assembled or processed in whole of fabricated components or materials that are a product of the United States, or

"(B) processed in whole of ingredients (other than water) that are a product of the United States, in a beneficiary country; and

"(ii) neither the fabricated components, materials or ingredients, after exportation from the United States, nor the article itself, before importation into the United States, enters the commerce of any foreign country other than a beneficiary country.

As used in this paragraph, the term 'beneficiary country' means a country listed in general note 3(c)(V)(A).".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply with respect to goods assembled or processed abroad that are entered on or after October 1, 1990.

SEC. 2008. CONFORMING GSP AMENDMENT.

Section 503(b) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2463(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The duty free treatment provided under section 501 shall apply to any eligible article which is the growth, product, or manufacture of a beneficiary developing country if—

"(A) that article is imported directly from a beneficiary developing country into the customs territory of the United States; and

"(B) the sum of—

"(i) the cost or value of the materials produced in the beneficiary developing country or any 2 or more countries which are members of the same association of countries which is treated as one country under section 502(a)(3), plus

"(ii) the direct costs of processing operations performed in such beneficiary developing country or such member countries, is not less than 35 percent of the appraised value of such article at the time of its entry into the customs territory of the United States.

"(2) The Secretary of the Treasury, after consulting with the United States Trade Representative, shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection, including, but not limited to, regulations providing that, in order to be eligible for duty-free treatment under this title, an article must be wholly the growth, product, or manufacture of a beneficiary developing country, or must be a new or different article of commerce which has been grown, produced, or manufactured in the beneficiary developing country; but no article or material of a beneficiary developing country shall be eligible for such treatment by virtue of having merely undergone—

"(A) simple combining or packaging operations, or

"(B) mere dilution with water or mere dilution with another substance that does not materially alter the characteristics of the article.".

SEC. 2009. PILOT PRECLEARANCE PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—Subject to subsection (b), the Commissioner of Customs shall carry out, during fiscal years 1991 and 1992, preclearance operations at a facility of the United States Customs Service in a country within the Caribbean Basin which the Commissioner of Customs considers appropriate for testing the extent to which the availability of preclearance operations can assist in the development of tourism.

(b) RESTRICTIONS REGARDING PROGRAM.—

(1) Preclearance operations may not be commenced in the country selected for testing under subsection (a) unless the Commissioner of Customs and the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization jointly certify that—

(A) there exists a bilateral agreement between the United States Government and the government of such country which protects the interests of the United States and affords diplomatic protection to United States employees working at the preclearance location;

(B) the facilities at the preclearance location conform to Federal Inspection Services standards and are suitable for the duties to be performed therein;

(C) there is adequate security around the structure used for the reception of international arrivals;

(D) the government of such country grants the United States Customs Service and the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service appropriate search, seizure, and arrest authority; and

(E) United States employees and their families will not be subject to fear of reprisal, acts of terrorism, and threats of intimidation.

(2) In determining where to establish the operation described in paragraph (1), the Commissioner of Customs and the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization shall first determine the viability of establishing such operations in Jamaica. If the Commissioners determine, after full consultation with the Government of Jamaica, that it is not viable to establish pre-clearance operations in Jamaica, they shall so report to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, including an explanation of how this determination was reached. Such report shall be submitted to those Committees within six months of the enactment of this Act. Following the submission of such a report, negotiations may be undertaken to establish such operations in another country.

(c) REPORT.—As soon as practicable after September 30, 1992, the Commissioner of Customs shall submit to the Congress a report regarding the preclearance operations program carried out under subsection (a). The report shall include—

(1) a summary of the preclearance operations, including the number of individuals processed, any administrative problems encountered, and cost of the operations;

(2) an evaluation of the extent to which the preclearance operations contributed to—

(A) the stimulation of the tourism industry of the country concerned, and

(B) expedited customs processing at United States ports of entry;

(3) the opinion of the Commissioner of Customs regarding the efficacy of extending preclearance operations to other countries within the Caribbean Basin that are developing tourism industries, and if the opinion is affirmative, the identity of those countries to which such operations should be extended and the estimated costs and results of such extensions; and

(4) such other matters that the Commissioner of Customs considers relevant.

39-059 O-91-32 (Pt. 6)

SEC. 2010. APPLICATION OF ACT IN EASTERN CARIBBEAN AREA.

It is the sense of the Congress that there should be undertaken special efforts in order to improve the ability of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States countries and Belize to benefit from the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act.

SEC. 2011. PROMOTION OF TOURISM.

(a) CONGRESSIONAL FINDING.—The Congress finds that the tourism industry must be recognized as a central element in the economic development and political stability of the Caribbean Basin region because of the potential that the industry has for increasing employment and foreign exchange earnings, establishing important linkages with other related sectors, and having a positive complementary effect on trade with the United States.

(b) FEDERAL AGENCY PRIORITY.—It is the sense of the Congress that increased tourism and related activities should be developed in the Caribbean Basin region as a central part of the Caribbean Basin Initiative program and, to that end, the appropriate agencies of the United States Government should assign a high priority to projects that promote the tourism industry in the Caribbean Basin.

(c) STUDY.—The Secretary of Commerce shall complete the study begun in 1986 regarding tourism development strategies for the Caribbean Basin region. The study shall include—

(1) information on the mutual benefits received by the United States and the Caribbean Basin economies as a result of tourist activity in the area; and

(2) proposals for developing increased linkages between the tourism industry and local industries in the region such as the agro-business.

SEC. 2012. AGRICULTURAL INFRASTRUCTURE SUPPORT.

It is the sense of Congress that in order to facilitate trade with, and the economic development of, the countries designated as beneficiary countries under the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act, the Secretary of Agriculture should, in consultation with the Agribusiness Promotion Council, coordinate with the Agency for International Development the development of programs to encourage improvements in the transportation and cargo handling infrastructure in these countries for the purpose of improving agricultural trade between these countries and the United States. Such programs should focus on improving distribution of agricultural commodities and products in these countries, and the phytosanitary institutions, quarantine capabilities, and pesticide regulations of these countries regarding agricultural commodities and products.

SEC. 2013. EXTENSION OF TRADE BENEFITS TO THE ANDEAN REGION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that:

(1) United States antinarcotics policy places a high priority on assisting the nations of the Andean region of South America, the source of 100 percent of the world's supply of cocaine.

(2) The President and Congress have recognized that United States trade and economic policies play an important role in the overall United States antidrug strategy in the Andes.

(3) The extension of special trade preferences for articles from the Andean region would help revitalize the national economies of the Andes and further United States antinarcotics policy in the region.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—The Congress urges the President to—

(1) review the merits of extending the benefits provided under the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act to the Andean region; and

(2) continue to explore additional mechanisms to expand trade opportunities for the Andean region, and report to Congress in a regular and timely fashion on the result of this review.

SEC. 2014. TREATMENT OF ARTICLES GROWN, PRODUCED, OR MANUFACTURED IN PUERTO RICO.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 213(a) of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2703(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) The duty-free treatment provided under this chapter shall apply to an article (other than an article listed in subsection (b)) which is the growth, product, or manufacture of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico if—

"(A) the article is imported directly from the beneficiary country into the customs territory of the United States,

"(B) the article was by any means advanced in value or improved in condition in a beneficiary country, and

"(C) if any materials are added to the article in a beneficiary country, such materials are a product of a beneficiary country or the United States.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after October 1, 1990.

(2) Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, upon proper request filed with the appropriate customs officer after September 30, 1990, and before April 1, 1991, any entry, or withdrawal from warehouse—

(A) which was made after August 5, 1983, and before October 1, 1990, and with respect to which liquidation has not occurred before October 1, 1990, and

(B) with respect to which there would have been no duty, or a lesser duty, if the amendment made by subsection (a) applied, shall be liquidated as though such amendment applied to such entry or withdrawal.

SEC. 2015. TRADE BENEFITS FOR NICARAGUA.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President is authorized to designate Nicaragua as a beneficiary developing country for the purposes of title V of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended, and as a beneficiary country under the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act, and any such designation may remain effective for the duration of the calendar year 1990.

TITLE III—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR TRADE AGENCIES

SEC. 3001. OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES TRADE REPRESENTATIVE.

"(3)(A) The Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with section 524 of the Tariff Act of 1930 and without regard to apportionment or any other administrative practice or limitation, shall directly reimburse, from the fees collected under subsection (a) (other than subsection (a) (9) or (10)), each appropriation for the amount paid out of that appropriation for the costs incurred by the Secretary—

"(i) in providing—
"(I) inspectional overtime services, and
"(II) all preclearance services, for which the recipients of such services are not required to reimburse the Secretary of the Treasury, and

"(ii) to the extent funds remain available to make reimbursements under clause (i), in providing salaries for full-time and part-time inspectional personnel and equipment that enhance customs services for those persons or entities that are required to pay fees under paragraphs (1) through (8) of subsection (a) (distributed on a basis proportionate to the fees collected under subsection (a)(1) through (a)(8)).

Funds described in clause (ii) shall only be available to reimburse costs in excess of the highest amount appropriated for such costs during the period beginning with fiscal year 1990 and ending with the current fiscal year.

"(B) Reimbursement under this paragraph shall be made at least quarterly. To the extent necessary, reimbursement of approporiations under this paragraph may be made on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury and adjustments shall be made in subsequent reimbursements to the extent that the estimates were in excess of, or less than, the amounts required to be reimbursed.

"(C)(i) For fiscal year 1991 and subsequent fiscal years, the amount required to fully reimburse inspectional overtime and preclearance costs shall be projected from actual requirements, and only for the excess of collections over such projected costs for such fiscal year shall be used as provided in subparagraph (A)(ii).

"(ii) The excess of collections over inspectional overtime and preclearance costs (under subparagraph (A)(i)) reimbursed for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 shall be available in fiscal year 1991 and subsequent fiscal years for the purposes described in subparagraph (A)(ii), except that $30,000,000 of such excess shall remain without fiscal year limitation in a contingency fund and, in any fiscal year in which receipts are insufficient to cover the costs described in subparagraph (A) (i) and (ii), shall be used for—

"(I) the costs of providing the services described in paragraph (A)(i), and

"(II) after the costs described in subclause (I) are paid, the costs of providing the personnel and equipment described in subparagraph (A)(ii) at the preceding fiscal year level.

"(D) At the close of each fiscal year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit a report to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives summarizing the expenditures for which reimbursement has been provided under subparagraph (A)(ii).".

(c) EXTENSION OF FEES.—Paragraph (3) of section 13031(j) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c(j)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) Fees may not be charged—

(B) imports an article into the United States, or

(C) distributes an article in the United States, may file with the United States International Trade Commission (hereafter referred to in this title as the "Commission") a petition requesting the President to issue a proclamation under section 5003(a) that suspends the duty imposed on such article by any chapter of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States other than chapter 98 or 99, if the rate of duty applicable to such article is provided in rate of duty column 1.

(2) Any person who—

(A) produces in the United States—

(i) any article for which a duty is suspended by reason of a proclamation issued under section 5003(a),

(ii) any other article like, or directly competitive with, such article, or

(iii) any other article which is like, or directly competitive with, a product that is produced in the United States by means of a process which uses such article as a significant raw material or component,

(B) has—

(i) the capacity, and

(ii) the bona fide intent,

to produce such article, or any other article like, or directly competitive with, such article in the United States in significant quantities, may file with the Commission a petition requesting the President to issue a proclamation under section 5003(b) that reinstates such duty.

(3) The Commission shall not accept a petition under paragraph (1) or (2) for the suspension or reinstatement of a duty on an article before the date that is 1 year after the date on which a bill is introduced in the House of Representatives or the Senate that would, if enacted, effect such suspension or reinstatement.

(4) Each petition filed under paragraph (1) or (2) shall contain—

(A) sufficient information (including a precisely defined article description) to enable the Commission to determine whether an investigation into the suspension or reinstatement of the duty is justified;

(B) sufficient information for the Commission to make a determination under section 5002(a); and

(C) such other information as the Commission may require.

(5)(A) Not later than the date that is 15 days after the date on which a petition is filed with the Commission under paragraph (1) or (2), the Commission shall determine whether the information provided in the petition is sufficient to justify an investigation under section 5002.

(B) If the determination made under subparagraph (A) is affirmative, the Commission shall—

(i) transmit a copy of the petition to the United States Trade Representative,

(ii) initiate an investigation under section 5002 of the suspension or reinstatement of the duty requested in the petition, and

(iii) publish in the Federal Register notice of—

(I) the initiation of such investigation, and

(II) the opportunity for public comment on such suspension or reinstatement of the duty.

(C) If the determination made under subparagraph (A) is negative, the Commission shall dismiss the petition and notify the petitioner of the basis on which such negative determination was made.

(b) PRESIDENTIAL REQUEST OR SELF-INITIATION.—

(1) Upon request of the President, or upon the initiative of the Commission, the Commission shall initiate an investigation under section 5002 of the reinstatement of any duty that has been suspended by any previous proclamation issued under section 5003(a).

(2) Upon initiating an investigation under section 5002 by the authority of paragraph (1), the Commission shall—

(A) transmit to the United States Trade Representative a written statement describing the article and duty that are the subject of such investigation and all information available to the Commission regarding justification of the reinstatement of such duty on such article, and

(B) publish in the Federal Register notice of—

(i) such investigation, and

(ii) the opportunity for public comment on such suspension or reinstatement of the duty.

SEC. 5002. INVESTIGATIONS BY THE COMMISSION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—If the determination made under section 5001(a)(5)(A) is affirmative or section 5001(b)(1) applies, the Commission shall conduct an investigation to determine—

(1) whether the article that is the subject of the petition filed under section 5001(a), or of the notice published under section 5001(b)(2)(B), is produced in the United States,

(2) whether any other article which is like, or directly competitive with, such article is produced in the United States,

(3) whether any other article is produced in the United States which is like, or directly competitive with, a product that is produced in the United States by means of a process which uses (or could use) such article as a significant raw material or component,

(4) whether any person has—

(A) the capacity, and

(B) the bona fide intent,

to produce such article, or any other article like, or directly competitive with, such article in the United States in significant quantities,

(5) whether any person who—

(A) produces in the United States—

(i) such article,

(ii) any other article like, or directly competitive with, such article, or

(iii) any other article described in paragraph (3), or

(B) is described in paragraph (4), objects to a suspension of the duty imposed on such article by any chapter of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States other than chapter 98 or 99,

(6) whether any person not described in paragraph (4) or (5)(A) objects to that suspension of duty on such article,

(7) whether any quotas or other import restrictions are imposed by Federal law on such article,

(8) whether any international agreements to which the United States is a party affect trade in such article or in any other article like, or directly competitive with, such article,

(9) whether such article, or any article like, or directly competitive with, such article, is, or has been, the subject of any investigation during the preceding 5 years under—

(A) title VII of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1671 et seq.) or section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1303),

(B) section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1337),

(C) chapter 1 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2251 et seq.),

(D) chapter 1 of title III of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2411 et seq.), or

(E) section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 (19 U.S.C. 1862),

(10) the aggregate value of such articles imported into the United States during the calendar year preceding the calendar year in which such determination is made,

(11) the aggregate value of such articles consumed in the United States during the calendar year preceding the calendar year in which such determination is made,

(12) the principal uses of such article in the United States,

(13) the duties that are imposed by Federal law on such article and the rates of such duties, and

(14) the aggregate amount of Federal revenue derived from the duties imposed by Federal law on such article during the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which such determination is made.

(b) PUBLIC COMMENTS.—During the course of any investigation conducted under this section, the Commission shall provide an opportunity for any person to submit written statements regarding the subject of the investigation and, upon request and after reasonable public notice, shall hold a hearing for the oral presentation of views on the subject of the investigation.

(c) REPORTS.—

(1) Not later than the date that is 75 days after the date on which an investigation under this section is initiated, the Commission shall—

(A) complete a preliminary report on the investigation conducted under subsection (a),

(B) publish a summary of the preliminary report in the Federal Register,

(C) provide a copy of the preliminary report to the petitioner, and

(D) make the preliminary report available for public inspection.

(2) On the date that is 30 days after the date on which a summary of the preliminary report on the investigation conducted under this section is published in the Federal Register, the Commission shall submit to the President a final report on the investigation. Such report shall include—

(A) the determinations made under subsection (a),

(B) a summary of comments received by the Commission regarding such investigation, including comments on the preliminary report completed under paragraph (1), and

(C) a copy of the transcript of any hearings held in the course of such investigation.

(d) DETERMINATIONS NOT SUBJECT TO JUDICIAL REVIEW.—The determinations made by the Commission under subsection (a) shall not be reviewable in any court.

SEC. 5003. ACTION BY THE PRESIDENT.

(a) SUSPENSION OF DUTIES.—

(1) During the 30-day period beginning on the date on which the Commission submits to the President under section 5002(c)(2) a final report on an investigation concerning the suspension of duties on an article, the President may issue a proclamation that suspends the duty imposed on such article by any chapter of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States other than chapter 98 or 99 if the President determines that—

(A) no person has a valid objection to such a suspension, and

(B) the sum of—

(i) the aggregate amount of Federal revenue derived from the duty imposed on such article by any chapter of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States other than chapter 98 or 99 during the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which such determination is made, and does not exceed $100,000,000.

(ii) the aggregate amount of Federal revenue derived during such preceding fiscal year from all the duties imposed on all articles that are the subject of a previous proclamation issued under this paragraph during the calendar year in which such determination is made,

(2) The President may not issue a proclamation under paragraph (1) that suspends the duty imposed by the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States on any article to which the rate of duty provided in rate of duty column 2 applies.

(3) In determining whether to issue a proclamation under paragraph (1), the President may take into account—

(A) the effect such a proclamation would have on the bargaining position of the United States in any continuing, planned, or prospective negotiations with any foreign country,

(B) the effect such a proclamation would have on the revenue of the United States,

(C) foreign policy considerations, and

(D) any other factors the President considers appropriate.

(4) If the President does not issue a proclamation under paragraph (1) with respect to any article that is the subject of a report submitted under section 5002(c)(2) during the 30-day period described in paragraph (1), the President shall publish in the Federal Register the reasons why the President is unable, or has declined, to issue such a proclamation.

(5) The duration of the suspension of duties provided in a proclamation issued under paragraph (1) shall not exceed 3 years. Such suspension may be extended by a proclamation issued under paragraph (1) with respect to subsequent investigations conducted under section 5002 for a period not to exceed 3 years for each such proclamation.

(b) REINSTATEMENT OF DUTIES.—

(1) During the 30-day period beginning on the date on which the Commission submits to the President under section 5002(c)(2) a final report on an investigation concerning the reinstatement of duty on an article that has been suspended by a proclamation issued under subsection (a), the President shall—

(A) determine whether any person has a valid objection to such suspension, and

(B) if the determination made under subparagraph (A) is affirmative, issue a proclamation that reinstates the duty which would be in effect if such suspension had not been made.

(2) The President shall publish in the Federal Register any negative determination made under paragraph (1)(A).

(c) DETERMINATIONS NOT SUBJECT TO REVIEW.—Any determination made by the President under this section shall be final and shall not be reviewable in any court.

SEC. 5004. ALTERNATIVE SCHEDULES.

The President may, by proclamation, establish—

(1) an annual deadline for the filing of petitions under section 5001(a) with respect to which—

(A) the Commission will be required to make determinations under sections 5001(a)(5) and 5002 during the calendar year, and

(B) the President will be required to make determinations under section 5003 during the calendar year, and

(2) a schedule for taking other actions under sections 5001, 5002, and 5003 that may differ from any time requirements set forth in such sections.

SEC. 5005. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The provisions of this title shall take effect on October 1, 1991.

TITLE VI—FEDERAL TIMBER EXPORT RESTRICTIONS

SEC. 6001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Federal Timber Export Restriction Act of 1990".

SEC. 6002. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this title are—

(1) to make permanent the current Federal policy of restricting the export of unprocessed timber from Federal lands;

(2) to review and revise Federal policy with respect to the ability of timber operators to acquire and mill Federal logs in lieu of exported private logs;

(3) to promote the conservation of forest resources consistent with Federal resources management plans;

(4) to help relieve the critical short supply conditions in industries which rely on an adequate timber supply; and

(5) to effect measures aimed at meeting these objectives in conformity with the obligations of the United States under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Subtitle A—Federal Lands

SEC. 6101. RESTRICTIONS ON EXPORTING OF UNPROCESSED TIMBER.

Notwithstanding the Act of April 12, 1926 (16 U.S.C. 616, 44 Stat. 242), and except as permitted by section 6103 or 6104 of this Act, no person who acquires, either directly or indirectly, unprocessed timber originating from Federal lands shall—

(1) export such timber from the United States;

(2) sell, trade, exchange, or otherwise convey such timber to any other person for the purpose of exporting such timber from the United States; or

(3) use, or assist or conspire with any other person to use, such timber in substitution for unprocessed timber originating from private lands exported or to be exported from the United States.

SEC. 6102. INFORMATION GATHERING.

(a) REQUIREMENTS OF PERSONS ACQUIRING UNPROCESSED TIMBER.—In accordance with regulations issued under section 6203, each person who acquires, either directly or indirectly, unprocessed timber originating from Federal lands shall report the disposition of such timber to the Secretary concerned on a quarterly basis.

(b) REQUIREMENTS OF PERSONS CONVEYING UNPROCESSED TIMBER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with regulations issued under section 6203, each person who sells, trades, exchanges, or otherwise conveys to another person unprocessed timber originating from Federal lands shall identify in writing the origin of such timber to that other person.

(2) ACKNOWLEDGEMENT.—The person to whom such timber is conveyed under this section shall submit to the Secretary concerned, in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe—

(A) written acknowledgment of receipt of the written identification of the origin of such timber under paragraph (1), and

(B) a written agreement to comply with all of the prohibitions in section 6101.

SEC. 6103. EXCLUSIONS.

(a) EXEMPTION FROM PROHIBITION ON SUBSTITUTION.—The prohibitions contained in section 6101 shall not apply to a person if, before the unprocessed timber otherwise subject to the prohibitions is obtained—

(1) that person applies to the Secretary concerned, in such form as is prescribed in regulations issued by such Secretary, for an exemption of the prohibitions contained in section 6101;

(2) that person demonstrates in such application that the Federal lands from which the unprocessed timber will be obtained are not located in the same geographic area—

(A) from which that person exports any other unprocessed timber from private lands; or

(B) from which that person has exported unprocessed timber from private lands in the preceding 5-year period; and

(3) the Secretary concerned grants the exemption.

(b) DETERMINATION OF GEOGRAPHIC AREAS.—The Secretary concerned shall determine the boundaries of geographic areas for purposes of subsection (a)(2) in accordance with the procedures for rulemaking set forth in section 553 of title 5, United States Code. The Secretary shall consider whether persons other than the applicant for the exemption engage in commerce in unprocessed logs between the two geographic areas involved. Such commerce shall be sufficient to deny the exemption. Any such determination shall be reviewed at least once in each 2-year period. The Secretary concerned shall publish notice of such review in the Federal Register, and shall give the public an opportunity to comment on such review.

SEC. 6104. SURPLUSES.

(a) DETERMINATIONS BY SECRETARIES.—The prohibitions contained in section 6101 shall not apply to specific quantities of grades and species of unprocessed timber from Federal lands which the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior determines to be surplus to domestic manufacturing needs.

(b) PROCEDURES.—Any determination under subsection (a) shall be made in regulations issued in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code. Any such determination shall be reviewed at least once in every 3-year period. The Secretary concerned shall publish notice of such review in the Federal Register, and shall give the public an opportunity to comment on such review.

Subtitle B—Sanctions; Definitions; Effective Dates

SEC. 6201. PENALTIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any person who violates this title, or any implementing regulation, or counsels, procures, solicits, or employs any other person to take an action in violation of this title or such regulation, shall be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary concerned of not more than $10,000 for each violation.

(b) KNOWING VIOLATIONS.—Any person who knowingly violates this title, or any implementing regulation, shall be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary concerned of not more than $1,000,000 or three times the gross value of the unprocessed timber involved in the violation, whichever is greater.

SEC. 6202. DEBARMENT.

If the Secretary concerned finds, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing on the record, that a person has violated this title or any regulation issued to carry out this title, such Secretary shall issue an order prohibiting that person from entering into any contract for the purchase of unprocessed timber from any Federal lands for a period of not more than 5 years. Such person shall also be precluded from taking delivery of Federal timber purchased by another party for the period of debarment. Such an order shall be subject to review in an appropriate District Court of the United States.

SEC. 6203. REGULATIONS.

Within 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior shall, in consultation, each prescribe new coordinated and consistent regulations to implement this title on lands which they administer.

SEC. 6204. DEFINITIONS.

When used in this title, the term—

(1) "acquire" means to come into possession of, either directly or indirectly, through a sale, trade, exchange, or other transaction;

(2) "affiliate" of another person described in paragraph (4) of this section is a person that—

(A) controls or has the power to control such other person,

(B) is controlled by or is subject to control by such other person, or

(C) with such other person is controlled by, or is subject to control by, a third person, except that in determining whether persons are affiliates, all appropriate factors shall be considered including, but not limited to, common ownership, common management, and contractual relationships;

(3) "Federal lands" means lands administered by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Defense, and located west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States, excluding lands held in trust by the United States for the benefit of any Indian tribe or Indian individual;

(4) "person" means an individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity and shall include subcontractors and any subsidiary, parent company, or other affiliate;

(5) "private lands" means lands held or owned by a person but does not include lands held or owned by the United States, a State or political subdivision thereof, or any other public agency;

(6) "Secretary concerned" means the Secretary administering the Federal lands from which the unprocessed timber is removed;

(7) "substitution" is the practice of purchasing or otherwise obtaining timber from Federal lands west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States while at the same time exporting, or selling for export, timber from private lands west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States; and

(8) "unprocessed timber" means timber as defined by the regulations prescribed pursuant to section 6203 of this Act.

SEC. 6205. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), this title shall take effect 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, but shall not apply with respect to timber removed pursuant to timber sale contracts entered into before the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) EXEMPTION FROM SUBSTITUTION.—Section 6101(3) shall take effect 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act. During such 1-year period, section 6101(3) shall not apply with respect to the acquisition of unprocessed timber from Federal lands by a person who, in accordance with regulations of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, demonstrates to the appropriate official that the Federal lands are in a tributary area as defined by the current regulations.

TITLE VII—STATE LANDS

SEC. 7001. RESTRICTION OF EXPORTS OF UNPROCESSED TIMBER FROM STATE LANDS.

(a) AUTHORITY TO PROHIBIT EXPORTS OF UNPROCESSED TIMBER.—The Secretary of Commerce shall prohibit or otherwise restrict the exportation from the United States of any unprocessed timber harvested from land owned or administered by a State (or any political subdivision thereof), based on the recommendation of the Governor of that State, but only if the Governor of that State has certified that the State supports such prohibitions or restrictions based on—

(1) a statute enacted by the State legislature;

(2) a statewide voter initiative; or

(3) an existing State statute.

This subsection shall not apply if the Secretary of Commerce finds that there are not in effect restrictions on the exportation from the United States of unprocessed timber from land owned or administered by the Federal Government.

(b) ABILITY OF SECRETARY TO REMOVE OR MODIFY EXPORT RESTRICTIONS.—The Secretary of Commerce may remove or modify such prohibitions or restrictions on the exportation from the United States of any unprocessed timber harvested from land owned or administered by a State (or any political subdivision thereof) if the Governor of such State modifies that State's certification consistent with the requirements of paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (a).

(c) SUBSTITUTION.—Each State may adopt provisions with respect to substitution.

SEC. 7002. DEFINITIONS.

When used in this title, the term—

(1) "State" means any of the several States located west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States;

(2) "State lands" means lands of a State or any political subdivision thereof; and

(3) "unprocessed timber" means timber as defined under the regulations prescribed pursuant to section 6203 of this Act.

SEC. 7003. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This title shall take effect upon the date of enactment of this Act.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to make miscellaneous and technical changes to various trade laws.".

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

A TRIBUTE TO AMY MOSELEY

● Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I wish to take this opportunity to recognize Amy Moseley from Sparta, WI, for her heroic rescue of 17 elderly residents from a life-threatening fire. At this time, I want to briefly recount her courageous act.

On October 17 of 1989, Amy took a required course at Western Wisconsin Technical College on fire safety. She thought the class was interesting, but that she would never need the information. However, on October 21, as she was leaving the Parkside Villa, a Sparta retirement home where she works, she smelled smoke. She returned inside to find the upstairs television room on fire. She quickly contained the blaze by closing the door, a technique which she had learned in the fire safety class. What she did in the next few minutes, however, cannot be taught in any class: Amy Moseley is personally credited with saving the lives of 17 elderly residents by assisting them to safety. Not only did she help those 17, but she also carried 3 of the residents outside by herself.

On March 23, 1990, Amy Moseley received a letter of commendation from President George Bush, in recognition of her altruistic action.

Mr. President, I am honored to represent such a distinguished individual. I hope her deed has encouraged more people to recognize the importance of knowing, and practicing fire safety.●

COL. WILLIAM HIGGINS, USMC

● Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President I rise today to speak of Col. William R. Higgins, U.S. Marine Corps.

It has been over a year since Colonel Higgins was kidnaped while serving as a peacekeeper with the United Nations in Lebanon.

Colonel Higgins was kidnaped in February 1988 by terrorists from the Hezbollah while he was serving as the chief of the Lebanon Observation Group. This observation group is part of the United Nations truce supervision organization that has been monitoring the Israeli-Arab border since 1949.

It is important that we remember Colonel Higgins, particularly at this time. With the recent release of Robert Polhill, the press and public officials make continual reference to the remaining seven hostages.

Mr. President, we must remember that Colonel Higgins is still missing. For some reason, he has been left out of the count. Colonel Higgins served as a U.S. representative to the observation group. He was under orders that sent him to Lebanon to perform this duty. We have an obligation to Colonel Higgins, to the family of Colonel Higgins and to those in uniform serving in the defense of our Nation to not allow Colonel Higgins to be forgotten.

Mr. President, there are not seven hostages left. There are nine hostages left. Colonel Higgins and William Buckley still remain missing.

Mr. President, we must remember the family of Colonel Higgins, as we remember the families of all of those taken hostage in Lebanon. They, too, wait for their loved one to come home.

When we talk in Congress and in the press about the American hostages, I would ask that we remember Colonel Higgins, who, while serving his country, in the line of duty, was abducted and is still missing.

Mr. President, there are nine American hostages remaining to be brought home.●

NATIONAL MARROW DONOR PROGRAM

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, thousands of people throughout the United States and the world suffer from Leukemia, aplastic anemia and other diseases of the bone marrow. Many of them could be cured by bone marrow transplants. Those patients who cannot locate a compatible donor in their families rely on the Department of Health and Human Service's National Marrow Donor Program's [NMDP] computerized registry of unrelated potential donors.

On December 21, 1989, I joined Senator BARBARA MIKULSKI in writing to Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan, calling attention to the limited success of the NMDP in finding matched donors in ethnic groups, particularly the Jewish and black populations. In February the bright future of JoAnne Johnson, a young black woman from Silver Spring, MD, ended when no donor match was found, despite the overwhelming response of the black community throughout the metroplitan area. Many of you have read about the ongoing struggle of Allison Atlas, the 20-year-old Jewish woman from Bethesda, who continues the search for a compatible donor to save her life. Again, the Jewish community has mounted a well-organized effort to locate a suitable donor. In our Senate community, Vasilios Markis, the brother of our friends Liria and Vagelis Makris, who are managers of the Senate Hair Salon, has leukemia and needs a bone marrow transplant. The Greek-Americans and others are joining together to organize a comprehensive donor testing program.

Senator MIKULSKI and I have written to the Senate Appropriations Committee requesting funding to permit an expanded HLA marrow typing program for the NMDP through the rest of fiscal year 1990. Immediate emergency funding is required for marrow testing in these populations to assure ethnic diversity in the NMDP registry and equal access to medical treatment for all Americans. I am pleased to report the supplemental appropriations bill contains $6 million for this purpose, a tribute to the organized efforts of many to bring this medfical emergency to the attention of the legislative and executive branches.

The National Marrow Donor Program has been assisting families to raise money for typing. But tissue typing costs are high. Family resources are stretched to the limit, and the money currently available to the registry does not go far enough. We are forcing patients and their families to raise money at the worse possible moment—when they are in a life threatening crisis. The Federal Government has an important role to play here, and this additional funding will send a message of hope to desperate families and help countless potential future victims of these life-threatening diseases.●

UNITED STATES-CANADA FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, on April 7, 1989, the Subcommittee on International Trade of the U.S. Senate Committee on Finance held oversight hearings on the United States-Canada Free-Trade agreement (Senate hearings 101-204).

Relevant correspondence from Revenue Canada, dated August 11, 1989 was received by the subcommittee too late to be included in the printed record of the hearing.

To ensure that the published record is complete, but without taking any position on the contents of the letter or the merits of the allegations, before the committee, I hereby request the August 11, 1989 letter from K.H. McCannon, Assistant Deputy Minister, Customs and Excise Branch, Revenue Canada be placed in the RECORD.

The letter from Assistant Minister McCannon follows:

REVENUE CANADA,
CUSTOMS AND EXCISE,
Ottawa, Canada, August 11, 1989.

Mr. J. SERENY,
President and Chief Executive Officer, Green Forest Lumber Limited, Toronto, Ontario.

DEAR MR. SERENY: I am writing further to your request, concerning an allegation that your company evaded the export charge on certain softwood lumber products exported to the United States.

A shipment of softwood lumber was made by GFL on October 13, 1988 to Brojack Lumber of Pennsylvania. The export notice accompanying states that the shipment contained "B.C. Spruce Lumber". According to the allegation, only part of the lumber in this shipment originated in B.C. The lumber on the top layers of the 13 bundles included in the shipment allegedly had marks indicating B.C. origin. However, the lumber beneath the top layer had the marks of the Ontario Lumber Manufacturers Association (OMLA).

A detailed review was conducted to verify whether the export charge liability was correctly set up and paid on the portion of the Ontario lumber included in the shipment. It was found that the charge was correctly set up and paid in Green Forest Lumber's monthly export charge remittance for October 1988.

It was also alleged that the value on the export notice accompanying the above shipment appeared inexplicably low compared to the sales invoice. It was found that the value used on the export notice was not correctly calculated. However, the error did not result in any underpayment of the export charge due to the fact that such values on the export notice are not used by the accounting department of Green Forest Lumber to calculate the export charge liability.

Since the applicable export charge liability on the shipment in question and on other similar transactions tested was correctly calculated and paid, we are satisfied that there was no intent by Green Forest Lumber to circumvent the export charge. We therfore consider the case closed in respect of the allegation.

Yours truly,

K.H. MCCANNON,
ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER,
EXCISE BRANCH.●

UTAH'S COMMITMENT TO THE ENVIRONMENT THROUGH SUPPORT OF THE PRESIDENT'S TREE PLANTING PROJECT

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to share with you and our colleagues the opportunity I have had to participate in the President's tree planting project as a representative of the great State of Utah. Today, the Utah State tree was planted on the U.S. Capitol Grounds and now stands in living tribute to the commitment of Utahans to clean up the environment and support the President's nationwide tree-planting project. The 8-foot native blue spruce will serve as a constant reminder that Utah is for a clean America.

I also want to take this opportunity to thank Mr. Lon Clayton and Mr. Gerry Leary for their support and help in making this project a success. Mr. Clayton donated the blue spruce tree that will symbolize a clean environment for many years to come. Mr. Leary was instrumental in transporting the tree from Utah to Washington, DC; without his help the difficult task of moving a live tree across the country would have been much greater.

I invite my colleagues to take a moment to visit and enjoy the beauty of this monument from the people of Utah.●

A DRUG-FREE COUNCIL BLUFFS

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, yesterday I spoke on the Senate floor about a group of courageous students from Council Bluffs who have pledged themselves to a drug-free life.

These 18 students, who traveled by bus from western Iowa to Washington, DC, presented me a petition signed by 5,000 elementary school children who pledged themselves to be drug and alcohol free. These students are members of B-MAD [Bodies and Minds Against Drugs], which was organized by Council Bluffs pharmacist Dick Miller nearly a decade ago. Joining the students and Mr. Miller in their journey to our Nation's Capital was Council Bluff's Police Chief Mark Moline and Lt. Ron Shaw.

Mr. President, I am submitting for all my colleagues' attention statements written by the two leaders of the B-MAD group, Don Hunt and Ryan Meis, two high school students in Council Bluffs. Their wisdom and insight into the drug problem, and their work with elementary schoolchildren, is very instructive and should be heard by all of us concerned with the spread of drugs and alcohol in our society.

I commend Don and Ryan for all of their good work to help make the youth of Council Bluffs drug and alcohol free.

I ask that the following statements of Don Hunt and Ryan Meis be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The statements follow:

STATEMENT OF DON HUNT, COUNCIL BLUFFS DRUG FREE STUDENT

Hi, my name is Don Hunt and I am drug and alcohol free.

In today's society drugs and alcohol are becoming an increasingly alarming problem. Many of America's large east and west coast cities are mentioned when this problem is addressed but there is a failure to realize that the Midwest United States is also a part of this problem.

During the past few years I have noticed that the age at which a child is approached to use drugs is decreasing rapidly. No longer does an elementary student have to solely worry about how much he or she dislikes the opposite sex but must now combat the pressure of drugs.

One cadet of mine at Council Bluffs Police Academy Youth I Camp said to me, "Don, I don't want to go home?" I asked, "Why?" His reply was that he was scared because he knew that some of his family members were using drugs.

By working with elementary kids in B-MAD, Bodies and Minds Against Drugs, kids are aware that there is a problem, and they want help.

Alcohol among teenagers is increasing every day as students are falling victims to the so-called glamour and popularity of drugs in the world today.

Correctional facilities and rehabilitation centers are a great way to attack the drug problem of today, but education and prevention programs are the way to drastically reduce the problem for the future.

With the pressure of drug usage increasing daily, prevention programs must be implemented to prevent the problem from destroying America's Heartland.

STATEMENT OF RYAN MEIS

My name is Ryan Meis and I am drug and alcohol free. Let it be known that I have tried my best to be a representative example of rural Iowa. But I have failed. For I have become a minority in my own community.

Over half of the juniors and seniors polled at Abraham Lincoln High School in Council Bluffs have made the choice not to "Just Say No." They made this choice because of particular beliefs and attitudes.

Society today has made youngster believe that drug and alcohol use is acceptable to a given point. My friends drink, my parents drank in high school, and so did many of you.

Attitudes must change and the change begins with education. We need to teach the younger kids so that they may grow into the role of tomorrow's leaders, being sure that they lead us to the light, and not into the dark.

Council Bluffs has begun to tackle the enormous task of drug and alcohol abuse. A program founded by pharmacist Dick Miller called B-MAD (Bodies and Mind Against Drugs) is helping to exert positive peer pressure. The process involves the use of drug-free, successful teenagers as role models for elementary kids to pattern their lives after. This program is Council Bluffs-based and still remains in the city.

Another of the forward steps being taken is the DARE program. This is a national program that introduces youngsters to the harmful effects of drugs. The Council Bluffs Police Department is attempting to take this process a step further.

In the summer of 1989, they held the first Council Bluffs Police Academy Youth I Camp. It gave forty-eight sixth grade students the opportunity to have a week full of fun activities that can be performed without the intervention of drugs and alcohol. Role models from the B-MAD program were used as counselors. A great time was had by all but more importantly kids learned and formed their own beliefs and attitudes—some even new attitudes.

An elated grandmother wrote to us shortly after the week-long camp had ended. She was astounded by the great transformation her grandson had gone through. He was a cheerier kid and he had an improved attitude. All the kids were a little better off after their camp visit than before. If one child can be led straight, then they all can.

Council Bluffs and the rest of rural Iowa have made a commitment to achieving a drug free society. Abuse control starts early. Money is needed to help these programs succeed. Kids must be reached before they reach the threshold. We must proceed by striving for one peg at a time. But nothing works without money.

We in rural America should not be overlooked in lieu of the big cities. We need money to combat our drug and alcohol problem.

Attitudes can change, attitudes have changed, and attitudes will continue to change as long as you continue to help and care.●

SOCIAL SECURITY NOTCH—A CALL TO ACTION

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, approximately 10 million Americans have been waiting 13 long years for Congress to address the Social Security notch—a glitch in the law which has reduced the benefits of individuals born between 1917 and 1926.

As a result of the 1977 amendments to the Social Security Act, individuals born between 1917 and 1926 receive substantially lower benefits than individuals born in earlier years. This reduction in benefits has caused suffering among older Americans, many of whom depend on their Social Security check to keep them out of poverty.

There are approximately 145,000 Iowans affected by the notch. When I came to the Senate 6 years ago, I made notch correction legislation a priority and I have supported and cosponsored legislation over the years which will provide relief to these individuals in a fiscally responsible manner.

In the 101st Congress, I cosponsored Senator SANFORD's bill, S. 1212, which will ease the financial inequity created by the Social Security notch. In the past, notchers were considered as those individuals who were born during 1917 and 1921. However, the financing formula of the Sanford bill calls for a gradual phase-in of a stable level of benefits for individuals who were born between 1917 and 1926, thus targeting the benefits to those who need them the most. Moreover, this legislation provides a lump sum payment of up to $1,000 per family for past periods of entitlement.

I want to give special thanks to Daryl Cooper, Joe Rodecap, and all the other Iowa activists who have kept the issue of correcting the notch in the forefront of political debate. Finding a solution to the Social Security notch is in the best interest of Congress, the Social Security system and the Nation. I urge my colleagues to join in the effort to redress the grievances of millions of persons who have been unfairly penalized by the notch. Doing so will bring long-awaited justice to these beneficiaries and build greater confidence in the Social Security system.

Congress' failure to correct this problem will only serve to undermine confidence in the Social Security system.●

IN HONOR OF THE 100TH BIRTHDAY OF MRS. MARJORY STONEMAN DOUGLAS

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, it is an honor for me to rise today to pay tribute to a woman special to my State and to this country. In recent weeks, many friends and admirers have gathered to celebrate the 100th birthday of a great Floridian, Marjory Stoneman Douglas.

Mrs. Douglas is not only one of my favorite authors—she has served as a personal inspiration to me throughout my years in Government. I had the pleasure of honoring her centennial with her in Florida on Earth Day. I cannot think of a more fitting day to recognize the contributions this woman has made to the environment.

Like many Floridians, Marjory Stoneman Douglas came to the State from someplace else.

On a September day in 1915, 25-year-old Marjory put on a new blue taffeta dress and boarded a New York train bound for Miami.

She arrived with a single suitcase, little money, and no job.

The same way most of us leave office.

Mrs. Douglas arrived to a different Florida than the one I represent today.

She arrived to a Florida that was populated by less than 1 million people, spread out across a swampy expanse.

Today, that population approaches 14 million and is growing faster than any other in America.

She arrived to a State that was among the poorest in the Nation.

Today, it is one of the most prosperous.

She arrived with almost nothing.

And yet, Marjory Stoneman Douglas has given us a great gift: An appreciation of our rare and beautiful Florida and a commitment to preserve our State for generations to come.

Her fight to protect our heritage has been a labor of love.

She has awakened thousands of Floridians to the treasures that surround us.

She has fought to protect our wondrous natural resources.

She has helped us understand that the responsibility for preserving Florida's natural heritage is our responsibility.

She has altered the way we look at that great expanse, the Everglades.

When Mrs. Douglas arrived in Florida, the Everglades was viewed as an impenetrable and mysterious swamp.

She wrote a book about that swamp: "River of Grass." That title and that book may have singlehandedly changed more minds about the Everglades than any other action.

She taught us a lesson in the importance of simple beauty.

As we celebrate her 100th birthday, we remind ourselves of other lessons taught to us by Mrs. Douglas.

That life should be loved to its fullest.

That in every setback there is silver lining.

That we are the watchmen and women of all that surrounds us. It is ours to protect. And ours to preserve.

Mrs. Douglas has spent her lifetime protecting Florida's environment, but her efforts are a valuable example to a new generation of preservationists across the country, awakened by the celebration of Earth Day this past Sunday.

We hope that each new generation will produce its own Marjory Stoneman Douglas, to devote his or her life to preserving our natural resources.

It is our responsibility to instill in America's youth the same vision, commitment, and limitless energy which Mrs. Douglas has dedicated to protecting our environment.

In commemorating her 100th birthday, we thank her not only for her tireless efforts and for their results, but also for what we have learned from her about the value and necessity of environmental vigilance.

Happy birthday, Mrs. Douglas.●

BOND GOALS FOR BUDGET RESOLUTION

● Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I approach the fiscal year 1991 budget resolution with three basic goals.

First, I want the defense budget to be a realistic number which recognizes the changes in Eastern Europe; and thus the changed mission and needs of Armed Forces—but at the same time also recognizes that Gorbachev won't live forever, that circumstances can change quickly, and that new challenges will emerge.

What we need is an orderly builddown not a chaotic meltdown.

Mr. President, several weeks ago I outlined potential procurement cuts that could be made: in specific the cancellations of the LHX, the ATF, two aircraft carriers, the follow-on to Lance missile, and the MX rail garrison. Since then I continued my review of the defense budget—in particular taking a close look at those options which called for $25 to $35 billion cuts in budget authority [BA] and $15 to $20 billion in actual spending for fiscal year 1991.

These deliberations, have led me to the conclusion that I could support a budget resolution which cut as much as $17 billion in BA for defense in 1991, and nearly 9.0 in outlays. The total 5-year reduction of my approach would be in the neighborhood of $167.5 billion in BA, and $130.4 in actual spending.

For comparison purposes, this number is $5.5 billion below the President's 1991 outlays and $41.5 in additional savings over the 1991-95 period.

However, I must emphasize that this is about the limit that I can see for this year—beyond that it becomes more of a meltdown than a builddown.

I cannot, for example, support the Sasser plan to cut defense by $15.0 billion in actual spending this year—nor could I support the House Budget Committee's $11.5 plan. Both have huge cuts in the out years that I feel are simply more than we can absorb while ensuring our ability to defend our Nation. The Nunn approach is much more reasonable, and although I don't have all the details it appears to be a plan I could support.

In fact Mr. President, Senator NUNN raises many of the same points I raised, such as: Upgrading current systems rather than building all the new systems; not going forward with mobile systems of rail garrison and midgetman; cancelling the F-OTL; expanding the role of the Guard and Reserve; and retiring two aircraft carriers.

Along with these cuts I believe we can moderately tighten our belts in the operations and maintenance accounts; as well as RDT&E and military construction. One area of O&M in which savings will be possible is from reduced steaming hours given the cutbacks we have seen in the Soviet Navy.

Mr. President, my second goal in this process is to ensure that these savings are actually saved! Already the line is forming to spend, spend, spend. In fact, in the House Budget Committee, after cutting DOD by $11.5 billion in fiscal year 1991; and $250 billion over 1991-95, the first amendments offered were to take additional funds from DOD and transfer them to other programs! I am adamantly opposed to this approach.

Thus I will not support any budget resolution that tries to spend this ephemeral peace dividend.

Unfortunately both the Sasser and House plan fail this test miserably. In fact the House plan—which over the next 5 years saves $250 billion in defense—only cuts spending $205 billion. What in heavens name would they have done if the Berlin Wall had stayed up 1 year longer?

And the Sasser plan isn't much better. That approach makes 71 percent of its fiscal year 1991 spending cuts in defense and, over the 5-year period, 93 percent of the spending reductions come from defense. This is simply irresponsible.

Unfortunately it appears as if the blessing of peace will be used as an excuse to continue more-of-the-same budgeting. And the discipline to hold the line on non-defense spending seems to have disappeared like the morning mists.

Mr. President, Congress needs to make tough choices and I for one believe we should start by freezing our domestic discretionary account—and then setting priorities within that account.

I am willing to spend more on critical, forward looking programs—housing, Head Start, the FAA and EPA—but I realize this means we have to be willing to spend less elsewhere. And I am willing to do just that.

For example, I would be willing to cut funds for the UN and eliminate EDA funding in exchange for additional CIAP and public housing funds. I would "trade" a real freeze in the legislative branch and cuts in SLIAG for additional dollars for Head Start and Parents as Teachers.

Thus, my measure of an adequate budget resolution is one that realizes that: First, yes, we can and should save more in defense, than the President's now outdated January budget, however; and second, that doesn't mean we should ignore the rest of the budget.

Finally, I will not vote for a budget which relies on smoke and mirrors, gimmickrey, and 1-year savings. We can't be shifting pay days—or moving advance deficiency payments back or forward 1 month. We can't be moving things on or off-budget simply to hide spending. We can't have asset sales or claimed savings that aren't reconciled.

Unfortunately, here again the House disappoints. Fully one-fifth of their deficit reduction comes from a line in the Panetta budget we affectionately refer to as a plug, but he calls "other savings and adjustments." These are usually old and tired ideas that have no chance of passage, but their budget simply deems them to occur.

Mr. President, this is no way to balance the budget, and I hope the Senate can do much better.●

DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, this past week our Nation has observed the Days of Remembrance to remind us of the atrocities of the Holocaust. I rise today to honor the memory of those millions senselessly slaughtered in Europe during World War II.

As Americans, we take our freedom for granted. This freedom we believe is our birthright carries a great responsibility: We must be aware that freedom does not come without a struggle. We must never again allow the systematic extermination of an entire people while the world silently watches. The memory of those sentenced to the concentration camps must be preserved forever and stand as a testament to man's inhumanity to man.

Our world is changing. Who hasn't watched the dismantling of the Berlin Wall and felt her heart being touched? Who hasn't watched Lech Walesa leading his fledgling government and not felt encouraged? There is, however, a dark side to these changes. Along with the newfound freedom in other countries, we see rising anti-Semitism in the U.S.S.R., the brutal crushing of the students' rebellion in Tiananmen Square, and the oppression of ethnic minorities throughout the world. It is our duty as leader among the free nations to ensure that the Holocaust remains a lesson in our memories and our hearts, not a blueprint for future devastation. We must keep our promise to never forget.●

WOMEN AGAINST RAPE

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, rape is a growing national tragedy. It affects women of all racial, social, religious ethnic, and economic groups, and of all ages, physical abilities, and lifestyles. The incidences of rape are staggering. There were 77,700 reported rapes in this country in 1987. Unfortunately, this figure does not indicate the true number of rapes committed. According to a survey conducted by the Bureau of Justice Statistics, the number of rape incidences was closer to 150,000—twice the number of those reported.

Rape is largely invisible and misunderstood. The need to educate the public on this violent crime is clear. Misinformation and misunderstanding helps perpetuate myths that incorrectly place the blame on the victim. Myths like women who get raped "ask for it"; that if a woman wants to resist she can; that if a woman does not wear certain clothes when she goes out at night she will not get raped, places a stigma on the victims and discourages them to admit that they have been sexually assaulted.

And while rapes by strangers are underreported, rapes by acquaintances are even more severely underreported. The risk of being raped by someone a woman knows is four times greater than the risk of being raped by a stranger. Most women never report these acts because they are so confused by the dicotomy between their acquaintance rape experience and what they thought rape really was. The truth that rape usually occurs between people who know each other is difficult to accept.

When we as a society talk openly about rape, we enhance our ability to deal with it. Knowledge about the crime will help increase our power to combat it. WAR, Women Against Rape, is an organization in my State which has taken an active role in combating rape by assisting rape victims and their families through the provision of volunteer escort and counseling services and by providing safe and temporary housing for victims who fear returning to their homes immediately following the assault.

Organizations such as WAR provide a valuable service to the community. It is important that we support and encourage these organizations and private citizens in their efforts to reduce the crime rate and to educate the public in crime prevention and protection methods.●

GLOBAL CHANGE AND NATIONAL SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY WEEK

● Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it is a moral imperative for us fully and effectively to educate our children in the scientific disciplines. Although the educational problems we face are not confined to science and mathematics, a national deficiency in these areas will render us incapable of addressing the most pressing problems of our times. Exponential population growth and the concomitant rush of economic development have created global environmental crises of unprecedented proportions. Escalating emissions of greenhouse gases threaten fundamentally to alter our climate, and the halogenated chemicals we are dumping in increasing amounts into the atmosphere are destroying the ozone layer and placing life as we know it in jeopardy. Add to these problems the pollution that fouls our water and air, and the continuing destruction of the rain forests, and it is clear that our failure to encourage environmental acuity and activism will be devastating.

Mr. President, the National Science Foundation is rising to the challenge. This week is National Science and Technology Week [NSTW]—a nationwide campaign launched by NSF to encourage student interest in science and technology. The theme of NSTW is "Global Change: Options for Action." Throughout the week, NSF has worked to increase public awareness of the environmental crises we face by coordinating special presentations with schools in every State.

NSF has found that children everywhere are concerned about the fate of their planet and that their vision of the future is not bright. Addressing these concerns, NSF has distributed nationwide more than 50,000 science and environmental education packets for elementary and middle school students. These materials contain simple, interesting, hands-on science activities for children to perform with their teachers and parents. The approach is innovative, creative—and desperately needed.

Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to commend NSF for the vision and leadership it has demonstrated. In addition, I ask that the following comments by Robert Corell and Mary Clutter, assistant directors for geosciences and biological, behavioral, and social science at NSF be placed in the RECORD.

The comments follow:

COMMENTS BY ROBERT CORELL AND MARY CLUTTER

Say "global change" and Americans are likely to recall the three months of record-breaking temperatures and drought last summer that destroyed crops from California to Georgia and ignited fires throughout the West. While the public may not appreciate the biogeochemical changes affecting the weather, they do appreciate the consequences of those changes on their lives and livelihoods. Increased awareness of the human and ecological dimensions of worldwide environmental changes—ozone depletion, greenhouse gases, erosion, desertification, deforestation, sea level rise, coastal pollution, acid deposition—makes them more than simply subjects of scientific inquiry. Global change is a major public policy issue worldwide.

NSF has a key responsibility to contribute to the U.S. Global Change Research Program. It does so by tapping intellectual resources in all fields of science and engineering. Among its many activities, NSF plays a major role in its support of Long Term Ecological Research sites. There scientists can study the role of climate change on ecosystems, the processes controlling flux of biologically mediated atmospheric gases, and the interactions of plants, animals, and microorganisms within a given environment. Scientists are also studying biodiversity, the loss of genetic diversity, and the conservation and restoration of natural ecosystems.

The Directorate for Geosciences is the major contributor to the Global Change Program at NSF. However, a new initiative in the Directorate for Biological, Behavorial and Social Science (BBS) is the program called Human Dimensions of Global Environmental Change. Using the insights and perspective of social scientists, this program can help us identify and understand the human and institutional actions that cause changes in the geosphere and the biosphere. Research supported by this program may also suggest ways to moderate and manage the environmental consequences of those actions.

This is a key addition to NSF's ongoing activities because—as our understanding expands—so does our recognition that global change is both a scientific issue and a public policy issue of far-reaching importance.●

FEL-PRO: LEADS THE WAY

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I would like to bring to your attention a company from my home State, Illinois, that has successfully integrated social interests with corporate ones. Using a common sense approach, Fel-Pro has conquered many of the problems that most corporations haven't even begun to fight. Fel-Pro has shown society that caring about human beings and succeeding in the corporate world can be compatible entities.

Fel-Pro, a company in Skokie, IL, makes engine gaskets. It is a somewhat obscure company with a decidedly low-key product; the unique aspect of Fel-Pro is its devotion to its workers and their families. Fel-Pro provides a myriad of benefits to its employees and their children, spouses, and parents. Everything from day care, counseling services, day camp, and educational opportunities, to a 250-acre employee recreational park with a swimming pool has been taken into consideration to enhance the lives of Fel-Pro employees and their families.

This company has paved the way for corporations all over the United States to provide their employees with the benefits they deserve and need. Fel-Pro clearly understands that they stand to benefit financially and otherwise when their employees feel that they are valued. Fel-Pro's innovative and productive approach to business is a model that should be replicated nationwide. Many of the bills Congress has been grappling with to improve the quality of life for Americans might be working if other companies would follow this lead. I urge all of my colleagues to read the following article and to note the accomplishments achieved through human respect. I ask that the article be printed in full in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Mar. 7, 1990]

THE BOTTOM LINE IS BENEFITS

(By Elleen Ogintz)

At first, Scott Mies was skeptical. He doubted that any company looking at the bottom line would really care that much about its people.

"I always associated big business with being at odds with humanistic pursuits," said Mies, a former teacher. Then he went to work for Fel-Pro, a family-owned manufacturing company in Skokie that has been around since 1918.

It didn't take long for Fel-Pro, which makes engine gaskets, to turn Mies and, it seems, a lot of its other 1,900 employees into believers. "People really like their jobs here," said Mies, who runs the company's state-of-the-art day-care center. "There really is a spirit of brotherhood. I don't know where people could go from here and get a better deal."

"Nobody wants to work," said Mary Tom, a packager and single parent. "But if you have to work, this is as good as it gets."

This relatively obscure suburban company whose products are decidedly unglamorous is becoming known around the country for its devotion to workers and their families, for offering newly touted "family" benefits to make lives easier and better. And despite impressive financial outlays for the programs, the company claims they make economic as well as social sense.

Among the benefits: a $1,000 bond when a child is born; a kindergarten program; free summer camp; tuition benefits for employees and their children; counseling and other help with aged relatives; some funeral and legal expenses; a 250-acre park with swimming pool and baseball diamonds for employees' use; and Christmas turkeys, Thanksgiving Day pistachio nuts and Valentine's Day candy.

There's a company sculptor, a fitness center, summer jobs for workers' children, Father's Day and Mother's Day gifts—programs that far outpace offerings of even the most progressive companies.

Juan and Ramona Blanco are married and work for the firm. When their son started falling behind in 6th grade, a tutor paid for almost entirely by Fel-Pro—at a cost of more than $80 a week—came to the Blanco home in Chicago twice a week for a year. "Now he's doing OK," Blanco said.

Moreover, he's convinced that the company's summer day camp (employees pay only a minimal charge, for the bus from Fel-Pro to the camp) may have kept their son from getting involved with a gang.

"Here's someone who understands what you're going through and offers advice and comfort," said Paul Stoeck, who turned to the company's elder-care counseling program for help with his ill parents. "They've really offered me a port in the storm. Fel-Pro practices what a lot of companies talk about."

"In its comprehensiveness, Fel-Pro is in a [class] by itself," said Ellen Galinsky, an expert on work and family issues who recently visited the sprawling plant. She is co-founder of the New York-based Families and Work Institute, which researches these issues.

Elliot Lehman, who with his brother-in-law is a co-chairman of Fel-Pro, which was founded by their wives' grandfather and father, said, "We attempt to do for our people what they can't do for themselves or can only do at great inconvenience and expense." Except for his service during World War II, Lehman has worked at Fel-Pro for almost 50 years. The company's sales average $250 million a year.

His mission now, he said, is to convince corporate America of the benefits from taking care of workers and their families. The company, in fact, is considering a study in conjunction with the University of Chicago on how these programs affect business performance and profitability.

Lehman said that in his gut he knows the effect is positive, but he wants to be able to show it on paper. The biggest payoff, he said is a loyal, productive workforce—and a healthier society overall.

Susan Schmid, the daughter of a retired Fel-Pro blue-collar worker is the only one in her family to finish college. Thanks to Fel-Pro, she said, she was able to go to the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. All through school, the company gave her summer jobs, and when she graduated it hired her full time to work in the engineering department. Now the company is paying for her to get a master's degree in business administration, at a cost of $5,000 a year.

"As long as I stay in manufacturing," she said, "this is the place I want to be."

RX FOR SOCIAL ILLS

Lehman noted that Fel-Pro's turnover and absenteeism rates are lower than comparable companies, that more than one-third of its workers have been with the company for 10 years or more, and that more than 60 percent have been there five years.

"People don't equate the kinds of things we do with the bottom line," Lehman said. "But how much are you willing to pay for trust and loyalty?"

This all comes at a time when American executives increasingly are grappling with how to combat the skilled-labor shortage that they know is coming. When people ask Lehman how his company can afford these benefits, he replies that his company can't afford to not offer them. The family benefits, his executives say, represent 2 percent of the company's pretax profits, but they decline to release a dollar figure. "We think it's a worthy investment," said company Vice President Bob O'Keefe.

"Our general philosophy is that we can't have a healthy business in an unhealthy community," he said.

Lehman pointed out that if 350 children are attending Fel-Pro's summer camp in Carey rather than roaming the city streets, society benefits, not just Fel-Pro. If young children are being taken care of in a stimulating, healthful environment where they can see their parents during the day, that also will pay off later, he said. If scores of youngsters are going to college who otherwise might not have—through Fel-Pro's $2,800-a-year scholarships for all employees' children, not just the exemplary students—that also helps everyone.

Through its Neighborhood Fund, the company has paid out more than $1 million to help community organizations that its employees are active in: to buy pews for a church, computers for schools, equipment for a sports team, food for a local pantry.

"The idea is to direct some part of our charitable program to the grassroots level, where it would affect Fel-Pro people directly," said Elliott Lehman's son, Ken, who with his brother and two cousins divides the duties of company president.

NATIONAL FOOD-DRAGGING

Elliott Lehman, meanwhile, is frustrated that ideas that seem so obvious to him have yet to take hold across the country, even in Illinois. Fel-Pro, for example, is one of only two private companies other than hospitals that offer on-site day care in Illinois, according to the Day Care Action Council.

Last year, because its efforts are so far ahead of the norm, Fel-Pro was named by Working Mother magazine as one of the top five American companies for working mothers, sandwiched between such giants as Du Pont and Hoffman-LaRoche, a New Jersey pharmaceutical firm.

At the same time, Lehman and others are heartened that some bigger companies are beginning to embrace the same ideas. Johnson & Johnson and International Business Machines, for example, are two that have introduced sweeping programs to help workers coordinate the needs of families with their jobs, Galinsky said. Some 4,600 U.S. companies now offer some child-care assistance, though most don't provide on-site care as does Fel-Pro. And some companies are beginning to train managers to help employees cope with family-work conflicts, she said.

No longer does she get into arguments, she said, about whether these work-family issues really matter. But what it takes for a company to get actively involved, she believes, is someone inside the company willing to step out in front on these issues. Elliott Lehman travels the country speaking on family issues, serving on various committees and task forces, including the Illinois Public-Private Child Care Coalition and on a national advisory panel for the Child Care Action Campaign.

"We don't have a consumer product," he said. "We don't have a public relations department. If we can serve as a role model, we feel like we can make a contribution, above and beyond our product."

Lehman said Fel-Pro didn't plan to become a leader in this area; its programs just evolved as the company did what it felt was right, what its employees needed.

As other companies struggle to fill their ranks, Fel-Pro must update its application files every few months, so heavy is interest in jobs.

"We don't have any trouble getting good people," said Bob O'Keefe, vice president of industrial relations and a 45-year veteran. His three sons, he added, all work for Fel-Pro.

Clearly, when Fel-Pro executives talk about being a family company, they're not kidding. At least 100 employees are married to other company workers, and fully half of Fel-Pro's workforce has a relative at the plant. That includes the founders' family: Some among the fourth generation are now working there.

"Nobody wants to leave," said Nancy Huang, who works in the export department. "People all intend to stay here as long as they can."●

IN HONOR OF DICK NORMAN

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate Dick Norman of Teaneck, NJ, for his continued dedication to youth through sports.

Dick became involved in Little League, Babe Ruth, and PAL over 25 years ago. He was responsible for developing leagues that permit every child to participate in sports regardless of previous experience or skill. His experience coaching led to his organizing Biddy Basketball in Teaneck in 1968. Through his efforts, the national registration rules for this junior basketball program were changed to avoid racial segregation and the exclusion of girls. For the 470-member league organization and for children around the country this was a major milestone and one that Dick should be proud of. His leadership and commitment have taught children the importance of friendship, teamwork, and spirit. Dick Norman went on to become assistant to the national director of Biddy Basketball.

In addition to his continued dedication as an advocate for youth involvement in sports. Dick has served on the citizens advisory on drugs for the Teaneck Township Council and as a member of the Bergen County Parks Commission. He was appointed by three New Jersey Governors to the board of trustees of the Youth Corectional Institution Complex where he served in an administrative capacity as well as a member of the parole board. This praiseworthy record exemplifies his commitment to public service.

Richard Norman, through the years, has given his time, expertise, and caring to the youth of Teaneck. His efforts have inspired many youngsters. I congratulate Dick on his retirement from Biddy Basketball and extend my best wishes for his continued success and happiness.●

FORMER REPRESENTATIVE ABNER W. SIBAL ENDORSES CONGRESSIONAL TERM LIMITATION

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the best way to stem the influence of big money in campaigns, is to limit congressional terms. Campaigns have become exorbitantly expensive, because challengers must match the sizable war chests that incumbents are easily able to collect. The problem is exacerbated by the high costs of media exposure, to which incumbents enjoy easy access. Any serious challenger has to be willing to spend a tremendous amount to insure his or her own exposure.

Limiting congressional terms would go a long way toward correcting this dilemma, without limiting freedom of political expression. First, there would be a greatly increased number of campaigns for open seats in which nonincumbents could run cheaper campaigns.

Second, holding office for the sake of holding office would disappear. The perks of a congressional career, high salaries, free mail, free travel, excellent retirement benefits, make it natural for an incumbent to want to stay. The power is addictive. Incumbents receive huge contributions from interest groups, and then spend ruthlessly to entrench themselves and protect their careers.

Term limitation would separate those candidates serious about public service from those bent on a high profile career. It would inject honesty into the system at all levels, including campaigns, because the interests of any candidate, whether incumbent or challenger, would be to represent constituents, and not to advance a career.

Mr. President, I ask that a letter I have received from Abner W. Sibal, a former U.S. Representative, appear in the RECORD immediately following my remarks. Mr. Sibal represented the Fourth district of Connecticut from 1961 to 1965.

The letter follows:

Hartford, CT, February 27, 1990.

Hon. GORDON J. HUMPHREY,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: In response to your letter of February 20 you may certainly cite me as supporting S.J. Res. 235, and I congratulate you and Senator DeConcini for sponsoring it.

The changes which have led to abuse in fund-raising practices over the relatively recent past, coupled with abuse of the frank have almost eliminated issues, ability and integrity as the important factors in congressional elections. It's regretable that steps such as yours must be taken since many members with longer service than 12 years have served with distinction, but Congress must regain the confidence and respect it once enjoyed as a co-equal branch of government and it appears that S.J. Res. 235 is a way to move toward that goal.

Sincerely,

ABNER W. SIBAL.●

JUDICIAL TAXATION

● Mr. MACK. Mr. President, over the last few days, several of my colleagues spoke regarding the impact of the recent Supreme Court decision in Missouri versus Jenkins. In Jenkins, the Supreme Court issued a ruling stating that Federal judges have the authority to order legislative bodies to raise taxes whenever the judges consider a tax increase appropriate to remedy a constitutional violation.

There are very few issues that the American people have so uniformly espoused than that of less taxes. When I ran for Senate, I ran for something I believed in and continue to believe in: "Less taxes, less spending, less government, more freedom." Presidents Reagan and Bush, who have held the Executive Office for a decade now have maintained "no new taxes" as a vital component of their economic platform. Numerous other Members of Congress—those truly with the constitutional authority to levy taxes and who are responsive to the citizenry who do not want new taxes—have consistently advocated no new taxes.

The power to tax is the power to destroy. Such power was deemed so awesome by the framers of the Constitution that it was carefully placed in the hands only of the elected representatives of those who are taxed. Justice Kennedy made the point well in his dissent:

> The confinement of taxation to the legislative branches, both in our Federal and State Governments, was not random. It reflected our ideal that the power of taxation must be under the control of those who are taxed.

And yet, with the stroke of a pen, the U.S. Supreme Court has unilaterally authorized Federal judges to impose taxes as they see fit. Time and time again, we have seen the ill-effects of taxing power—more spending is encouraged followed by even more taxes, a vicious circle broken when American taxpayers voice their disgust at the economic ruin created. This is outrageous. For an unelected, unrepresentative individual sitting on a Federal bench to have the power to destroy the economic lives of Americans by taxation is worse than taxation without representation. It is tyranny.

I wholeheartedly support the efforts of my colleagues, who, either by statute or constitutional amendment, seek to overcome this tyranny.●

MEASURES INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following calendar items be indefinitely postponed. Calendar Order 123 and Calendar Order 135.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, that has been cleared on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF SAMUEL ALITO

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of Samuel Alito, Jr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Sam Alito is an accomplished and distinguished lawyer. He has dedicated himself to Government service and he has excelled.

He is a graduate of Princeton University. He was a member of phi beta kappa. He attended the Yale Law School, where he contributed to the Law Journal.

He served in the Army Reserves after law school, and then worked briefly in private practice. He then clerked for Judge Leonard Garth, whom he would join on the third circuit.

Sam Alito has extensive experience as an appellate litigator. He served for almost 4 years as an assistant U.S. attorney in New Jersey. He went on to the prestigious office of the Solicitor General.

He served in the Office of Legal Counsel as a Deputy Assistant to the Attorney General. He then returned to New Jersey, as U.S. attorney in 1987. I supported his nomination for that position.

As Chief Federal Prosecutor for one of the largest districts in the country, he has led the effort to fight bigtime drug rings and organized crime. He has made environmental crimes a high priority.

He has the respect of the bar in our State. The ABA panel that reviewed his nomination rated him "well qualified."

Mr. President, I note for the RECORD that for virtually all of his professional career, Sam Alito has had just one client—the Government of the United States. He has represented his client with skill and integrity. He has been a strong and effective advocate.

As a judge, Sam Alito will have to make an important transition. He will have to shed the loyalties he's had to the office he led. When the law and the facts demand it, he will need the strength to rule against the Government.

Mr. Alito was asked about this in the hearing on his nomination. He assured the committee and the Senate that he recognized the significance of the transition that lies before him, and that he would shed those loyalties and above all else, he would be guided by the law.

I believe Mr. Alito has the experience and the skills to be the kind of judge the public deserves—one who is impartial, thoughtful, and fair. I urge the Senate to confirm his nomination.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF D. BROCK HORNBY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, Calendar item 740 which we have just approved is the nomination of D. Brock Hornby to be U.S. district judge for the District of Maine.

Not only is that a subject of interest to me as a Senator from Maine, but it is a subject of considerable interest since the position for which Judge Hornby has just been confirmed is the district court judgeship which I once held.

Having served in that position, I recognize what a great honor and a privilege it is to serve as a United States district judge, and I want to say that I am pleased and proud that Judge Hornby has been nominated and now confirmed for that position.

I have known Judge Hornby for many years. I have great confidence in him. I am certain that he will do an outstanding job in that position.

And I might say to my distinguished colleague here, the acting Republican leader, there are many days and nights when I as majority leader think wistfully of my days as a U.S. district judge for the District of Maine, and today was one of them; nothing to do with the manager of the bill that we are considering, but rather to do with the subject matter, the difficulty, that we are considering.

When I was judge, it took only one vote to do anything. Nowadays it takes 51 and sometimes they are hard to come by.

But I wish, Mr. President, to thank my colleague for his consideration in these nominations, and I wanted to make a special note of my pleasure at the nomination to which I have just referred.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. HATFIELD. I make two observations. One, I am glad that the majority leader is where he is, as U.S. Senator, rather than back on the bench. I say that, I think, on behalf of most of my colleagues on this side, if not all. I think he has been a very fine majority leader, and we enjoy working together.

STATEMENT OF THE NOMINATION OF ROBERT E. JONES

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I also would like to make an additional observation on Calendar No. 739, regarding the nomination of Robert E. Jones, to be the U.S. district judge for the District of Oregon. The majority leader, Senator MITCHELL, and I presented these two candidates, Judge Hornby and Judge Jones, to the Judiciary Committee on the same day for their hearing, and now it is perhaps by chance that we are standing here tonight finalizing those nominations, which we both are proud to have had a part in.

I had the privilege of appointing Judge Jones to the Oregon State Circuit Court, when I was Governor, where he served for 11 years before he was then appointed to the Supreme Court of the State of Oregon and served with great distinction there. And now to have been a part of the nominating process for Judge Jones to be appointed as a U.S. district judge in Oregon, all of that constitutes a great deal of pleasure and pride, not only because of personal friendship, but because of the professional qualifications and extraordinarily fine record he has established.

I thank the majority leader for this opportunity.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

ORDERS FOR MONDAY

RECESS AND MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 11:30 a.m. on Monday, April 30, and following the time for the two leaders there be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 12 noon with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on Monday, under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of H.R. 4404, the emergency supplemental appropriations bill, at 12 noon.

As I previously announced, there will be as many as eight amendments considered during the day with rollcall votes which are ordered in connection with any of those amendments not to occur prior to 7 p.m.

Senators should be aware that there will be several rollcall votes on Monday evening, so they can adjust their schedules accordingly.

Mr. President, I thank my colleague.

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY, APRIL 30, 1990, AT 11:30 A.M.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if the distinguished acting Republican leader has no further business and if no other Senator is seeking recognition, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess under the previous order until 11:30 a.m., Monday, April 30.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:06 p.m., recessed until Monday, April 30, 1990, at 11:30 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, April 30, 1990

The House met at noon and was called to order by the SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. BONIOR].

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
April 26, 1990.

I hereby designate the Honorable DAVID E. BONIOR to act as Speaker pro tempore on Monday, April 30, 1990.

THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We know, O God, that You dwell in Heaven above, and yet Your Spirit lives about us and in us. When we lift our voices in happiness or joy or satisfaction, You are there, and when we feel the weight of worry or pain, You are with us and forgive us and give us peace. As You are with us in all the moments of life, whatever our need or whatever our concern, we pray, O gracious God, that Your Spirit will be with us and bless us this day and every day. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. MOLINARI] please come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance?

Ms. MOLINARI led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 756. An act for the relief of Shelton Anthony Smith;

H.R. 101. An act to provide for the establishment of the National Commission on Wildlife Disasters, to provide for increased planning and cooperation with local firefighting forces in the event of forest fires, and for other purposes;

H.J. Res. 546. Joint resolution designating May 13, 1990, as "Infant Mortality Awareness Day"; and

H.J. Res. 553. Joint resolution to make technical changes in the Ethics Reform Act of 1989.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 1594. An act to extend nondiscriminatory treatment to the products of the Peoples' Republic of Hungary for 3 years;

H.R. 1805. An act to amend title 5, United States Code, to allow Federal annuitants to make contributions for health benefits through direct payments rather than through annuity withholdings if the annuity is insufficient to cover the required withholdings, and to make a technical correction relating to the life insurance program.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1683. An act for the relief of Paula Grzyb;

S. 1814. An act for the relief of Wilson Johan Sherrouse;

S. 2533. An act to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to extend the civil penalty assessment demonstration program, and for other purposes.

MFN FOR THE SOVIETS AND FREEDOM FOR LITHUANIA: THE TWO SHOULD GO HAND IN HAND

(Mr. BROOMFIELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it sounds like Lithuania might surrender to the Soviet Union. That outcome shouldn't surprise anyone.

The Soviet blockade of Lithuania was the economic equivalent of an H-bomb.

Gorbachev demonstrated that trade can be a very powerful weapon. Trade may be bringing the Lithuanians to their knees in surrender.

But ironically a lack of trade is also bringing the Soviets to their knees. They are down on the ground begging America for most-favored-nation status.

America has nothing to gain from trade with the Soviets. But the Soviet Union has everything to gain from trade with us.

If we give MFN status to the Soviets, it will be nothing but a gift. Frankly, they don't deserve it.

If the Soviets can use trade as a weapon, so can we. The Soviets tell the Lithuanians they should postpone their independence for several years. Fine. America should tell the Soviets we are postponing their MFN status for several years.

When the Soviets give independence to Lithuania, we'll give MFN status to the Soviets.

Nothing could be fairer. The Soviets cannot expect to use trade as a weapon and then expect America to use trade as a gift.

It will send a message that America takes freedom seriously. America believes in economic freedom and it believes in political freedom. And it believes that both go hand-in-hand.

INTRODUCTION OF THE FEDERAL DISASTER ASSISTANCE PROGRAM OF 1990

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, many of us involved in Agriculture are well aware that during the decade of the 1980's, we in this country pursued a new experiment in terms of protecting our farmers from any kind of disaster. We had recognized throughout preceding decades that the reality was, despite all our best efforts, that it was impossible to have any kind of control over the budget or give any kind of systematic concurrent control to the individual American farmer for protection from losses through the normal disaster programs that existed at that point in time. As a result of that, in the 1980's we tried to pursue something called Federal crop insurance. It was a concept under which we would take, frankly, about the same amount of money we had spent on the disaster programs previously and we would use that money to subsidize the Federal crop insurance program in this country.

Unfortunately, our experience with Federal crop insurance of the 1980's has not worked well. During my experience here in the Congress, we have every year had annual oversight hearings as to why Federal crop insurance was not working and what may or may not be done to assist that process and improve Federal crop insurance.

I come from an area like many in Wisconsin where because, No. 1, forage crops are not necessarily covered, and, No. 2, because my farmers traditionally produce food for feed rather than a cash crop for sale, frankly we were experiencing something of about a 4- or 5-percent signup for crop insurance. That, unfortunately, is not a unique experience to Wisconsin. As a result of that, we have witnessed over the last 2 years, in 1989 and 1990, and now going back obviously even into 1988, when we had a major drought in this country, a recognition that because farmers were not utilizing Federal crop insurance sufficiently, we were still obligated as the Agriculture Committee and as a Federal response to the problems caused by natural disasters above and beyond the farmers' control to recognize the need at that point in time to pass disaster programs on top of the Federal crop insurance.

The administration, in submitting its ideas and proposals for the 1990 farm bill, recognized the reality of the 1980's and recognized the double exposure of the last 1980's and, as a result of that process, submitted a proposal to the Congress that perhaps it is time to fish or cut bait, that we either find a way to make Federal crop insurance work or we find a way to make a disaster program work within the context of our budget, but not both.

Tomorrow the Subcommittee on Conservation, Credit, and Rural Development will hear these differing proposals in committee hearing form as we begin that process of figuring out exactly where we are going to go or at least take one more step in that direction.

Today, I am introducting legislation called the Federal Disaster Assistance Program of 1990. I am introducing it because I am convinced that Federal crop insurance has not worked and it is time to look at other alternatives. Under my Federal Disaster Assistance Program, it will be formulated to a large part on the history of the disaster programs we have known over the last couple of years, where a county, when it reaches a disaster of certain proportions, becomes eligible, and then that farmer within that context also must receive the same amount of disaster before he will become eligible for the program.

Mr. Speaker, it is my belief that this kind of a program can be developed within the $800 million that we have set aside, and, in doing so, we will provide protection for all farmers across this country, not just a few farmers, for a few commodities in a couple of States that happen to benefit under Federal crop insurance.

However, along that same line, we will be able to provide this protection to farmers within the budget and also provide the opportunity for the insurance industry in this country to develop insurance up to that catastrophic level so that they would understand the total ability, and the realm and the severe that they would have before them in developing this type of program. They would have some limit on their exposure. We in the Government would also have limit on our exposure except in those rare forms when we had a major disaster drought, such as the drought of 1988.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage my colleagues on the Committee on Agriculture in particular to look at this proposal, but, beyond that, I am going to ask every Member of Congress to look at this idea because this is clearly an issue we are going to have to resolve here on the floor and obviously in conference with the Senate and the administration.

We cannot within the context of our present budget exposure continue all programs regardless of their costs. We have got to make some tough decisions. I believe our disaster program encompasses that.

WE ARE AT A PROFOUND TURNING POINT FOR THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk today about the concept of a partnership for American progress, and I want to suggest that we are at a profound turning point for the United States. We are at a point where the people of America have an obligation to reexamine what we mean by citizenship and to reestablish the concept of active citizenship, and I think that it is very, very important that we examine why we have problems with drugs and violent crime, why we have problems within the welfare system, why our educational system has so many difficulties, and I want to suggest that one of the core reasons is that about a quarter century ago this country bought into the idea that, if only we kept raising taxes, and building bigger bureaucracies, and hiring more Government employees, they would solve the problem that somehow it was ultimately the policeman's obligation to take care of crime in the neighborhood, that it was the teacher's obligation to take care of learning, that somehow the doctor would make us well, and then later on that was shifted so that it was the Health Care Financing Administration that would take care of health care, but that in each case we had a new social contract, a contract in which the citizen would pay in taxes for goods and services from the Government; the Government, in return for taking the taxes, would provide the goods and services, and somehow America would then be successful.

Mr. Speaker, I think the lesson of this quarter century experiment in a bureaucratic welfare state is that it simply has not worked, that in fact we have to go back and renew the partnership which once made America such a dynamic and extraordinary country.

For most of our history the American people have understood that democracy, prosperity, safety and education required an investment, not just of our tax money, but of our time, of our courage, of our belief in a better future, a willingness to spend time on the children, our own children, our neighbors' children, a willingness to spend time helping police our own neighborhoods, a willingness to spend time with neighbors who were sick, in effect a partnership that created a society which was much more dynamic and much more powerful than the bureaucratic welfare state has proven to be.

On May 19 in a nationwide workshop which is called the American Opportunities Workshop we are going to explore this concept of active citizenship, and in that program, which will be available to over half the homes in America on the Family Channel, a workshop which will be available to over 500 workshop sites around the country by satellite television and a workshop which is the subject of a special supplement just being produced in the new issue of National Review, in that entire workshop, which will include the President and Vice President of the United States, and Secretary of HUD, Jack Kemp, as well as some prominent Democrats, Griffin Bell, the former Attorney General under Jimmy Carter, and Polly Williams, a State representative from Wisconsin who has authored a voucher program for poor children to have a real choice; in that setting we believe that it is very, very possible that we are going to see the kind of active citizenship which will lead people to commit themselves to a renewed partnership for American progress.

One of the things I would like to enter into the RECORD today is a paper I wrote for the special supplement for National Review entitled, "Creating Opportunities for Americans: The Job of Active Citizenship:"

The greatest single challenge facing the new citizens' activist movement—call it a Citizens Opportunities Movement—is the reestablishment of active, involved citizenship as normal, everyday behavior. A dynamic, exciting, prosperous America can be created by the end of the 1990's. However, it will only exist if individual Americans are willing to invest the time, energy, resources and courage necessary to rethink and rebuild their own country.

No government bureaucracy will win the war on drugs. Only a true citizens' movement can force the necessary changes.

No government bureaucracy will create a generation of literate, educated hardworking citizens in the inner city. Only an outpouring of civic energy and commitment can create that level of change in individuals, families and communities.

No bureaucracy can move quickly enough to take advantage of the revolution in biotechnology and health care. Only millions of engaged citizens can develop the new approaches and new solutions that will combine a focus on wellness, better preventive medicine, home-based services and user-friendly technologies to create a revolution in access, cost and availability of health care.

No bureaucracy will force the bureaucratic welfare state and permissive attitudes to change. Only a true citizens' movement can mobilize the energy and focus the combination of anger and hope necessary to force politicians to change the current system.

Finally, no bureaucracy will create the caring, humanitarian, common-sense system that must replace the bureaucratic welfare state and permissive attitudes. Only individual Americans, working through voluntary associations and local government, will generate the number of ideas and experiments needed to invent the America that can be in the 1990's.

Our vision of a citizens' movement providing a new model of energetic, committed civic activity and generating new ideas, solutions and institutions is nothing new for Americans. The Committees of Correspondence during the Revolution were a citizens' movement. The Federalists were a loose citizens' organization dedicated to replacing the Articles of Confederation with a more effective government.

Active citizenship had become so pervasive in American life that Alexis de Tocqueville remarked on it over 150 years ago in his "Democracy in America." According to this great French analyst, the genius of America lay not in its government but in its churches, its neighborhoods and its thousands of voluntary activities. President Bush's Thousand Points of Light can take their heritage directly from the civic activists and diversity of individual and collective activity described by de Tocqueville.

In early America, our greatest civic enthusiast was Benjamin Franklin. In a way, he is the archetype of the American as creative activist. Consider just a few of his contributions to a better America. Benjamin Franklin published a newspaper, wrote the most famous Almanac of his day (an inherently political and common-sense document), organized a businessmens' civic group and founded a public library, a volunteer fire department, the American Philosophical Society and a small college which became the University of Pennsylvania.

As a citizen, Franklin proposed plans to pave, clean and light streets and to protect them with a nightwatch. He invented a modern stove, bifocal glasses and lightening rods (after discovering electricity). His contributions to science were so great he was elected a member of both the Royal Society of England and the French Academy of Sciences. Finally, Franklin served as an elected and appointed official. He was elected to the Pennsylvania legislature, the second Continental Congress and the Constitutional Convention. He was appointed agent to England for the colony of Pennsylvania and Minister to France for the United States during the Revolution. He wrote his own autobiography and helped write the Declaration of Independence.

Benjamin Franklin personified honest hard work. He would have understood thoroughly our belief that applying common sense focussed on opportunities and success will lead to a more prosperous America.

While Franklin was the most inventive, most creative and most active citizen of his era, he typified an American attitude. Americans were exciting and attractive to Europeans because they bubbled with energy, optimism and aggressive risk taking. When Americans saw a need they filled it first and called on government later, or not at all.

The bureaucratic welfare state has gradually sapped the courage, activism and creativity of American citizenship. For a century, we have been driving volunteerism out of public life and replacing it with bureaucracy. For a century we have been draining power away from local citizens' groups, local governments and town hall meetings and shifting them to State capitols and to Washington, DC.

I first came to really appreciate the disease of central bureaucratic control in 1981 when a school board member in Douglas County, Georgia told me she felt powerless. She felt that Federal regulations, state regulations and the deals made between the state legislature and the teachers union meant that she and her school board had almost no impact on education.

If an elected school board member feels trapped and powerless, is there any wonder the average parent feels overwhelmed? When the bureaucracy picks textbooks beyond your control, national commissions set graduation requirements beyond your control and state law establishes tenure which protects the bad teacher you want to complain about, it is very reasonable for parents to conclude they have lost control. The American people are pretty smart. If they cannot affect something they tend to ignore it. Bureaucracies rely on this phenomena to build bigger and bigger layers of control. The only time citizens are called on is for fundraising efforts.

This institutionalized apathy is perfect for the bureaucratic welfare state. It allows the bureaucracy to focus on its own values and its own convenience, knowing that citizens have been numbed into passivity. It allows bureaucracies to fail by every reasonable standard, without citizen outrage.

When bureaucracies do fail, the dominant culture of the bureaucratic welfare state simply ignores or ridicules private citizen alternatives. President Bush's Thousand Points of Light was initially treated as a joke by some people. It seemed incomprehensible to them for a public official to be proposing private action as a major strategy.

Consider the silence when President Bush visited Walter Annenberg and raised $50 million for the historically black colleges. If President Bush had proposed raising taxes to give $50 million to black institutions of higher education it would have been, the bureaucracy would have understood. But raising money without raising taxes caused only confusion: The new money did not appear in the Federal budget and therefore was not a topic worthy of comment in Washington.

Our vision is of a world larger than government and more dynamic that bureaucracy. We believe individual citizens can make a difference. We believe voluntary associations can make a difference. We believe entrepreneurial drive and creativity can establish new breakthroughs and new opportunities without and in some cases despite the bureaucratic welfare state.

What then can the active citizen do to help create the opportunities every American should have by the end of the decade? I think there are ten specific steps you can take to help change your country. I suspect you can invent or discover even more ways to be effective, and I hope you will write me with your success stories and your approach to citizenship. However, here are my initial suggestions for a life of active citizenship.

First, be inventive. Dream big. America was created by dreamers and visionaries. Look around you and decide what you want to improve and what opportunities you want to create. Have the courage to go outside the current debate, with ideas new enough and big enough to represent real opportunity.

Second, learn by doing. Real life is vastly more complicated than academic courses. Real entrepreneurs know that building a business, creating a job or solving a problem is a far greater challenge than any academic course can explain. Reading and studying can help, but the real key is to learn by doing. Take on a project and design it at a level to fit your resources and experience, but go ahead and start being a citizen doing civic things.

Third, try, try, try again. This was the key to Benjamin Franklin's life. It is the key to most entrepreneurs' success. (Colonel Sanders had gone bankrupt three times before he founded Kentucky Fried Chicken when he was 67 years of age.) Hard work, cheerful persistence and a willingness to try new ideas are the keys to successful citizenship.

Fourth, be noisy. We live in an age of multiple communications channels. From letters to the editors, to local radio talk shows, to specialized newsletters and cable access channels, there is an explosion of opportunity for noisy citizens. You should jump right in and start writing and talking about your ideas, your projects and your dreams. That will attract new resources and new energy to your efforts.

Fifth, build a team. America has always been a nation of joiners. Found an association, club or project that people can join and be part of. If you want to recycle, found a local activist group. If you want to promote literacy, found a local teaching team. The possibilities are endless and, if you are noisy as Point Four suggests, you will attract members.

Sixth, find little successes. Identify a specific goal, a person to be helped or a project that can be completed so your activities have a first success. That will attract the news media and build new energy while attracting new resources.

Seventh, be a demanding customer for government. We are currently getting the bureaucratic welfare state we tolerate. We must learn to complain more loudly and more aggressively when we don't get the service we deserve. If people applied to government the same standards they apply to private business, we would insist on dramatic changes in the bureaucratic welfare state.

Eighth, support those who share your goals. When you see someone trying to create opportunities, encourage them. When you see someone complaining about the bureaucratic welfare state, reinforce them. When you see someone engaged in a good fight, join them. If people learn that their activism will be reinforced by fellow activists they will dare more and take more risks.

Ninth, vote and insist that everyone you know votes. For too long we have tolerated the nonvoter as an acceptable citizen. We can only change the bureaucratic welfare state and replace permissive values by insisting that voting is an obligation of citizenship. Freedom is frustrating and working for a better America is difficult. The Founding Fathers understood these principles and they lived by them. They believed in freedom so much that they pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor. We are only asking for a vote. We should insist that failure to vote is the moral equivalent of deserting the battlefield of self-government.

Tenth, if no one else will do so, run for office. For too many years Americans have complained about government without taking steps to change it. If no one else is prepared to run for Congress, state legislature, city council, school board or whatever, then you have an obligation to do so. Running and losing is honorable. I lost twice and ran for five years before winning a Congressional seat. It is better to try even if you fail than never to engage in self-government.

Two events over the past year have dramatically toughened my attitude about citizenship. I had the opportunity to meet Lech Walesa and Vaclav Havel, when they addressed joint sessions of Congress.

The founder of Solidarity in Poland and the president of Czechoslovakia are both relatively short men. Neither is charismatic in the movie star sense of the word. One is an electrician. The other is a playwright. Neither thinks of himself as a professional politician. Their charisma is based on courage, commitment and consistency of purpose.

As I listened to each explain his recent life I was ashamed of the low standard of citizenship we have come to accept. Walesa voluntarily climbed the wall to go back into the Gdansk shipyard, knowing he risked imprisonment and even death. Havel was a prisoner last October and was offered the Presidency in December. Both men risked their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor for the cause of freedom.

Both Walesa and Havel thanked America for our commitment to freedom. Walesa started his speech to Congress with "We the People." The first three words in our Constitution were as precious in Warsaw as in Washington.

Havel quoted from the Declaration of Independence and cited the Founding Fathers' willingness to spend their lives translating their words into deeds.

These men and their courage should stand as an inspiration and a challenge to all Americans. We have held up the torch of freedom and changed Eastern Europe and the Soviet Empire. Now we must once again hold up that torch in our cities and towns. We must rally our country to create opportunities for our citizens. Only then can we reclaim the right to be what Jefferson called "the last best hope of mankind."

So when a businessman tells you he can't get involved because he might offend a customer, remind him of Walesa climbing back over the wall. When a citizen tells you she doesn't have time to vote, remind her of Havel's time in prison. It's time we ask Americans to act like Americans again.

On May 19 in the American Opportunities Workshop, we are going to lay out a framework for thinking about active citizenship. Anyone who wants to in either party can participate. Anyone who wants to who currently is an independent can participate.

As I said earlier, at 10 o'clock eastern time, Saturday morning, the American Opportunities Workshop will be on the Family Channel, and about half the television sets in America get that channel on cable. It will be available to over 500 workshops around the country. GOPAC is sponsoring it. If anybody wants to know if there is a workshop near them, they can call GOPAC and find out.

We are working to encourage every Member of the House and Senate in both parties to sponsor a workshop that day. Because we think it is possible to have a renewed partnership for American progress. We think we can re-create active citizenship, and that with active citizenship we can launch a citizens' opportunity movement that will replace the bureaucratic welfare state and will replace permissive attitudes.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this time to encourage every American to participate in reestablishing the kind of America we want for our children and grandchildren and to reestablish the right of Americans and the duty of Americans to be active citizens so that together we can create the kind of 21st century that we want for our children.

SENATE—Monday, April 30, 1990

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 18, 1990)

The Senate met at 11:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable DALE BUMPERS, a Senator from the State of Arkansas.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Let us observe a moment of silence in memory of Leo Balducci who died Saturday, as we remember his faithful supervision of the Senate Page School for so many years.

"* * * we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose." Romans 8:28.

Sovereign Lord, in these days of explosive ferment and upheaval, radical change and uncertainty, help us to fulfill our destiny, "under God," as a nation. Enable the Senators and their staffs to take seriously the implications of our national legacy and the expectations of the world for which America, in the past, has done so much.

Gracious God, in these unprecedented critical days, give all of us and each of us the grace to be what we ought to be and to do what we ought to do. Deliver us from selfishness and greed. Emancipate us from everything inside ourselves that would hinder the fulfillment of our place in history.

In His name who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, April 30, 1990.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable DALE BUMPERS, a Senator from the State of Arkansas, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BUMPERS thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the standing order, the majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, following the time for the two leaders this morning, there will be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 12 noon, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

At noon, the Senate will resume consideration of the emergency supplemental appropriations bill. Under the provisions of a unanimous-consent agreement granted last week, Senator DANFORTH will be recognized at noon today to offer a sense-of-the-Senate amendment on court taxation. Upon disposition of the Danforth amendment, the following Senators will be recognized in the order listed to offer amendments: Senators WIRTH, CONRAD, DIXON, KOHL, PRYOR, SIMPSON, and BAUCUS, and WIRTH.

Any votes ordered relative to these amendments will be stacked to occur not earlier than 7 p.m. this evening.

Under the order, the pending committee amendments have been laid aside until disposition of the above-listed amendments.

Beginning this evening, not earlier than 7, up to eight votes are possible. Therefore, Senators are on notice of the likelihood of several votes occurring this evening, not prior to 7, with the possibility of other votes occurring once we have disposed of the above-listed amendments.

CONFERENCE ON THE GLOBAL ENVIRONMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, today marks the opening of the Interparliamentary Conference on the Global Environment. It will be an important meeting. Parliamentarians from some three dozen countries will attend. To the extent possible, I encourage the participation of Senators.

Environmental concerns, from soil depletion and deforestation to the destruction of the atmospheric ozone layer, affect every nation on the face of the Earth.

Global warming is the most immediate threat we all face. The potential of temperature shifts that previously occurred over thousands of years now taking place instead, in a matter of decades, confronts us with an entirely unprecedented natural event.

Neither our Earth nor our human civilization has any experience of such a change. Our scientific analysts are doing their best to warn us of potential outcomes. But their warnings are of probabilities, not certainties or specifics.

They are well-founded probabilities, and they are becoming more well-founded each month.

Efforts are under way to improve the data base for those predictions. Individual nations are aggressively promoting improved ways to aggregate and project the data we collect.

But because short-term climate shifts are an entirely new phenomenon, our reading and interpretation of the data will always include some margin of error.

Climate change will affect the life of every human being.

But there are some, in this Nation and others, who argue that the scientific view must be final and unanimous before any concrete steps are taken to combat the causes of the problem.

But we do not wait for scientific certainty in other cases where a technical problem confronts us.

We apply experimental medical protocols in the effort to fight cancer, even when we do not know what the ultimate cancer-causing agent is.

We try to prevent the discharge of toxic wastes into the waterways, even though we may not know precisely which toxins pose the greatest threat to which organisms.

The call for scientific certainty is a double standard. It is not a standard we meet in any other legislative field. In this instance, it is a device for delay by those who are unwilling to act.

It is ironic, and potentially dangerous, that this argument is being raised in connection with what is the most serious, far-reaching, and irreversible environmental danger the world faces.

The Secretary General of the World Meteorological Organization has said:

The global warming to which we are already committed is irreversible. * * * By the time we detect it, it will be too late. * * *

The action of greenhouse gases is well known and not in dispute. They prevent some of the heat of the Sun's energy from reradiating back into space and warm the air near the Earth's surface. Warmer air at the Earth's surface affects the climate. And on the climate depends our ability to produce the major food crops on which human life depends.

The increase in greenhouse gases in the atmosphere has been measured. It is not in doubt. Their heat-conserving effects are scientifically known, and not in dispute. The question is not if the Earth will become warmer: It is when and by how much?

Given the facts that we know as well as the large uncertainties about regional effects, it is the responsibility of legislators in all nations, not merely some nations, to develop strategies for reducing the emission of these gases into the atmosphere.

When national boundaries cut across natural ecological systems, as they do on four of the five inhabited continents, the health and well-being of the natural environment is a matter of concern to all the nations affected. River systems, tidal patterns, wind flows, and rainfall respect no man-made boundary.

The challenge is to develop effective ways of preserving natural systems and simultaneously improve the living conditions of the people who rely on those natural systems.

The solution to such critical problems is not, as some seem to claim, to turn our backs on technology and reject the hope of improving life for mankind. The solution will instead come from a better understanding of the natural environment and technologies that respect its needs.

Officials working in the field of environmental protection often face two different and seemingly opposite points of view. One is that our goal must be to preserve intact and untouched as much of the environment as possible. The other is that humanity's moral duty is limited to the needs of our own species.

Although both points of view lead to diametrically opposed policies, both stem from the same fundamental premise. That premise is that humanity is in some way separate from nature; that human needs and desires are either damaging to nature or have an inherently higher claim on nature.

I believe that premise is mistaken.

People are as much a product and a part of the natural world as any other species.

And because humanity has the gift of consciousness, it also bears the greater burden of responsibility for stewardship.

A plant introduced into a new environment cannot be morally responsible for becoming a weed and choking a valuable water resource, as the water hyacinth plant in the Chesapeake Bay threatened to do. A fish introduced into a new habitat cannot be blamed for destroying the entire food chain, as the Nile perch in Lake Victoria has done.

We began to learn in this century that our planet and its surrounding atmosphere exist in a fragile balance that is all too easily disrupted.

It is time to use our knowledge and act to halt the destruction, to reverse the damage where possible, and to recognize that the future of our Nation rests as much on the survival of a livable Earth as it does on armaments and diplomacy.

Each of us is on the Earth for a relatively short time. In that time, we are stewards, holding the Earth's natural resources in trust for future generations. We can, and we must, convey to them the very basics of healthy human life—clean air, pure water, unpoisoned land.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time, and I reserve all the leader time of the Republican leader.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond 12 noon with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, early this morning I had the privilege of meeting with President Bush. We talked about the supplemental appropriations, among other things. I think it is fair to say the President would appreciate it very much if the Senate could complete action on the supplemental. It has been in the Senate since April 5. In fact, I think he sent it to the Congress on March 13, and it was a dire emergency supplemental appropriations to provide aid for Panama and Nicaragua. Now other things have been added. Somebody said the total cost may reach $2.6 billion on a foreign aid request of $700 million.

But in any event the President at this moment, I understand, is meeting with President Endara of Panama. He said he would be a bit embarrassed to explain to him why we have not yet acted on his emergency request for aid since it was his understanding the Senate would move quickly after we had an authorization bill.

We had the authorization bill. Then we had CBI. Then we had child care. Now we could have intervening the Hatch Act because, if cloture is invoked tomorrow at 7 o'clock and we have not finished the supplemental, as I understand it, we would be on the Hatch Act. And I assume that the supplemental bill will go back to the calendar.

It would just seem to me from the point of my speaking, if we can be helpful on this side—I know there are many amendments on this side, there are many on that side.

I do not suggest that either side has more or less amendments, but I would be willing to join with the leadership on the other side, the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and the ranking Republican member, Senator HATFIELD, if there is a decision to start tabling all amendments, or discouraging amendments on this side of the aisle. We will be attempting today to discourage amendments. There are no time agreements on amendments.

We could debate each amendment for hour after hour upon hour, and I hope Members understand that the President made a commitment. He made a proper request of the Congress. We indicated in the bipartisan way we would act on that request, and the President very much would like to have final action because it has to go back to conference. If we dispose of it before 7 o'clock tomorrow evening it still has to go to conference.

There are a number of changes. It seems to me that we now have a problem on this supplemental. We have abortion and the death penalty. If anyone can come up with two more controversial issues than the death penalty and abortion amendments to an aid request for Panama and Nicaragua that are not particularly relevant, I would be hard pressed to think of any more controversial amendments.

But one way to dispose of these amendments is to table the committee amendment which would take both, as I understand, out of action so we can move on with relevant amendments. I want to pledge to the majority leader and the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee that I am, as the Republican leader, prepared to help. I want to again make the request on behalf of the President that he would very much like action on this bill no later than tomorrow.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Alaska is recognized.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. MURKOWSKI pertaining to the introduction of S. 2542 and S. 2543 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR SPARK MATSUNAGA

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, it is with a deep sense of personal loss that I rise today to pay tribute to a friend and colleague, Sparky Matsunaga. His spirit of personal courage, in war, in peace, and in his last days fighting the cancer that would eventually kill him will not be forgotten.

Sparky Matsunaga did not come from a privileged background. His parents were plantation workers. By his own hard work, he put himself through the University of Hawaii and graduated with honors. He was a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army when the attack on Pearl Harbor occurred. Facing discrimination at home for being an American of Japanese descent, he was restricted from fighting in the war. He petitioned President Franklin Roosevelt to allow Japanese-Americans to join the ranks of other Americans in active duty. He would eventually join the 100th Infantry Battalion—one of the most highly decorated in history. His personal heroism would earn him two Purple Hearts and the Bronze Star Medal.

His service to his country and its people would continue in the U.S. Congress. After seeing the horrors of war, he became an advocate for peace. Through astute lobbying and his congenial manner, he would get Congress to set up the U.S. Peace Institute. Also unpopular at the time was the legislation to provide redress for Japanese-Americans interned during World War II. Sparky Matsunaga worked almost singlehandedly to pass both these measures.

In other legislative areas, he worked for a joint United States-Soviet exploration of Mars and to make Hawaii a center for space exploration. He championed support for education at all levels and for all people. As a poet and legislator he pushed for the establishment of the post of American Poet Laureate.

His final challenge would come with his battle with cancer. Despite the pain, he continued to serve his State and his Nation. His dedication to public service would bring him to the Senate floor in a wheelchair to vote for the passage of the Clean Air Act—his last vote.

Sparky Matsunaga is an example to our Nation of what we can be in spite of the obstacles placed before us. His courage and his devotion to peace will be missed by this Nation.

CONSUMER CHAMPION AWARD

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, last week, the week of April 22 to 28, was our ninth annual National Consumer Week. It was observed by hundreds of organizations from both the public and private sectors and by many of our constituents.

The theme of this year's Consumer Week was "1990: New Consumer Horizons." This is especially appropriate as sustained economic growth continues to present consumers with a plethora of innovative products, each offering new options and new decisions. Providing useful information to consumers is a challenge we should make every effort to meet.

However, consumer information is not exclusively or even primarily the duty of the Federal Government. In a society based on free market concepts, success is most likely when all the components of that system work together toward the same goals. State and local governments, industry, professional associations, and individual citizens can help to ensure success by focusing on consumer needs.

To this end, I announced on Friday the formation of my own Consumer Champion Award. This award will be presented quarterly to a group, agency, or business individual from Washington State. The recipient of the award will be recognized for having taken specific action to inform or protect consumers or will have proven to have been their consistent, reliable friend over the years.

The first recipients of this award are a couple from Yakima, WA. They are truckers who last year decided they could no longer allow the public unknowingly to purchase food products that had been carried in tank trucks that had just hauled toxic, nonfood loads. They came forward, at great professional risk, and blew the whistle on this unconscionable and dangerous practice—known in the trucking industry as backhauling. They are Jim and Rikki Pomerenke.

As a result of their actions, I introduced legislation which would put an end to backhauling. The Senate Commerce Committee has approved the measure, joined with similar proposals by Senators GORE and EXON, and it is expected to be considered by the full Senate during the course of the next several weeks. The House has already approved a similar measure.

In the case of backhauling, a Federal solution is necessary, but we as legislators might never have had the opportunity to respond appropriately had this couple remained silent. Their courage contributed immensely to making our system work. It is therefore fitting that Jim and Rikki Pomerenke be recognized as Washington State's first consumer champions. I hope my colleagues will join me in extending to them gratitude and admiration. They set an excellent precedent for the awards to follow.

During my years as Washington's attorney general, one of my foremost interests was in consumer protection. I feel just as strongly now about its importance. As ranking Republican on the Consumer Subcommittee, I enjoy continuing to have the opportunity to work on behalf of consumers.

I hope that the consumer champion award will provide incentive and recognition to those who help make our free market system work through their concern for consumers. Mr. President, an informed consumer is the key to our continued prosperity, and deserves our attention not only during the week just past but throughout the year.0

SENATOR HELMS PRAISES THE NORTH CAROLINA POULTRY INDUSTRY

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I have boasted for years about the North Carolina poultry industry, and today I am going to do it again. But as Dizzy Dean or somebody once observed, "braggin' ain't braggin'—if it's so." And it is certainly so that North Carolina's remarkable farmers and workers have made poultry the largest food industry in my State.

Once again, North Carolina's Governor Martin has formally proclaimed the month of April as North Carolina Poultry Month, and I join him in applauding this splendid industry. Our State has more than 4,800 small family farmers producing poultry and eggs, and an additional 17,000 people work in hatcheries, feed mills, and poultry processing plants. North Carolina's largest food industry—poultry—annually pumps nearly $1.5 billion into the economy of our State.

Moreover, Mr. President, North Carolina has the most diverse poultry industry in the Nation, ranking first in turkey production, second in duckling production, fourth in commercial broiler production, and eighth in egg production. In addition, the North Carolina poultry industry has always been conscious of product quality and consumer needs—offering everything from cold cuts to gourmet entrees. Consumers in North Carolina are fortunate to enjoy a wide array of wholesome, healthy, high quality poultry products.

The poultry industry's future continues to look bright. It will experience dynamic growth, per capita consumption of poultry will steadily increase, consumers will be treated to exciting new poultry products, and I fully expect the market to strengthen and grow in North Carolina.

So, Mr. President, I am enormously proud of all of the citizens involved in the North Carolina poultry industry, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of Governor Martin's proclamation of "North Carolina Poultry Month" be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the proclamation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PROCLAMATION—NORTH CAROLINA POULTRY MONTH, 1990

North Carolina's poultry industry represents a major agricultural industry in our state, exceeding one billion dollars in cash receipts for farm families.

North Carolina is also the most diversified poultry producing state in the nation, ranking first in turkey production, second in duckling production, fourth in commercial broiler production, and eighth in egg production.

The poultry industry employs thousands of our citizens and contributes significantly to the income of our farm workers. It bolsters our state economy and provides a nutritious, wholesome food to North Carolina families, and supplies markets worldwide.

Now, therefore, I, James G. Martin, Governor of the State of North Carolina, do hereby proclaim April 1990, as "North Carolina Poultry Month," and urge our citizens to recognize the importance of our poultry industry in our state and to enjoy a variety of poultry products.

FRANK REED RELEASED; SIX REMAIN

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I am happy to note that another American hostage, Frank Reed, was released today. Mr. Reed, former director of the Lebanon International School in Beirut, was abducted on September 9, 1986, and remained in captivity for over 43 months. He was released to Syrian officials by a group called the Islamic Revolutionary Dawn. The Syrian Government was said to have played a key role in facilitating the release—another remarkable show of conciliation from a regime so hostile to our country and ideals.

Mr. President, even with the good news of Mr. Reed's release, we must recall that six Americans remain hostage in Lebanon, including the longest held, Terry Anderson. Today is Mr. Anderson's 1,871st in captivity. As ever, our thoughts are with him, and with the other hostages and their families.

I ask unanimous consent that an AP wire story telling of Mr. Reed's release be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the AP wire story was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUSH WELCOMES RELEASE OF HOSTAGE FRANK REED

(By Christopher Connell)

WASHINGTON.—President Bush today welcomed the release of hostage Frank H. Reed, thanked both Syria and Iran but said again, "We cannot rest until all hostages are free."

He called the news of Reed's release by kidnappers in Lebanon cause for joy, but expressed concern about the plight of 6 other Americans and 10 other Westerners who remain hostage.

"This is a joyous day for Mr. Reed, his family, his friends and all Americans," Bush said in a written statement just hours before his scheduled afternoon meeting with Robert Polhill, the American hostage freed last week after 39 months in captivity.

"With Mr. Reed's release, we have six innocent Americans that are still being held hostage in Lebanon," as well as the other foreign hostages, he said. "Their predicament weighs on our mind and tempers the joy we feel today."

The six Americans still hostage in the Middle East include Terry Anderson of The Associated Press. He is the longest held, and has been captive for more than five years.

As he did eight days ago when Polhill was let go, Bush thanked Syria and Iran, two states the United States has accused in the past of sponsoring terrorism.

"Once again, we wish to express our gratitude to all those who through their efforts helped in Mr. Reed's release," said Bush. "In particular we would like to thank the government of Syria for facilitating this release. We would also like to thank the government of Iran for using its influence to help bring about this humanitarian step."

Bush said, "We cannot rest, however, until all hostages are free. We urge all parties who either hold hostages or have any influence over the hostage takers to work for the expeditious and unconditional release of the remaining hostages."

Earlier, the Bush administration today dispatched a special recovery team to West Germany to greet Reed.

There was no immediate word from State Department officials on Reed's condition after 43 months in capitivity.

In Malden, Mass., Reed's wife, Fahima, said she was ready to travel overseas "as soon as I see the picture of my husband."

Earlier in the day, as optimism rose over the prospect of a release, the White House said it was "very hopeful" that a hostage would be freed. But it reiterated its policy of no deals with the kidnappers.

Reed, a hostage in Lebanon for 43 months, was liberated by Islamic militants and turned over of Syria, which played a middle-man role for the Bush administration, the State Department said in the first word of his release.

"We've got confirmation that he's been released and is in Syrian hands in Lebanon," said Kim Hoggard, a State Department spokeswoman, after receiving word from the U.S. Embassy in Damascus.

The State Department had kept an open telephone line to the Embassy in the expectation that Reed, former director of the Lebanon International School in Beirut, would be liberated.

Reed was seized in the Lebanese capital Sept. 9, 1986.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the State Department hostage reception team was being dispatched to Wiesbaden, West Germany, where hostage Reed will be taken for treatment.

Amid reports in Iran that the planned release follows "extensive talks" between the Iranian government and the hostage-holders, Fitzwater said, "We've had a lot of third party intermediary kinds of messages back and forth with Iran. But there's nothing we can point to in terms of any specific reasons for this release."

"It is virtually impossible for us to know exactly the contributions of Iran in these kinds of matter," the spokesman added.

He reiterated that there will be "no deals" with the kidnappers.

"We know very little" about the Islamic Revolutionary Dawn, the group saying it would release Reed, Fitzwater said.

At the State Department, Ms. Tutwiler said the Islamic Dawn group "was unknown to us before yesterday's announcement." Ms. Tutwiler said it is probably associated with the Islamic Jihad, but added: "We know next to nothing about this group."

"No one knows precisely what motivates the hostage-takers in any of their activities, either in the taking of hostages or holding them or releasing them," Fitzwater said. "There is considerable speculation that Iran, Syria and others in that part of the world like to have better relations with the United States. The president has said goodwill begets goodwill. And we are hopeful that indeed that is the case, that they do want better relations."

Reed, 57, was director of the Lebanese International School when he was seized from his chauffeur-driven car near the Beirut airport on Sept. 12, 1986, as he was driven to play golf.

The Massachusetts native had lived in Beirut for eight years. He is a convert to Islam married to a Syrian Moslem.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is now closed.

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 4404 which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4404) making dire emergency supplemental appropriations for disaster assistance, food stamps, unemployment compensation administration, and other urgent needs, and transfers, and reducing funds budgeted for military spending for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes,

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Pending:

Gramm Amendment No. 1550 (to committee amendment beginning on page 57, line 5), to institute the death penalty for drug-related murders in the District of Columbia,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] is recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1553

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], proposes an amendment numbered 1553.

At the appropriate place insert:

It is the sense of the Senate that neither the Supreme Court nor any inferior court of the United States shall have the power to instruct or order a State or political subdivision thereof, or an official of such State or political subdivision, to lay or increase taxes.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the wording of this sense-of-the-Senate amendment is identical to the wording of a constitutional amendment resolution that I introduced in the Senate a week ago last Friday. That constitutional amendment now has, I think, 22 cosponsors, and it deals with the one issue of the power of the Federal courts to direct the imposition of taxes.

The origin of the constitutional amendment is a decision of the U.S. Supreme Court 2 weeks ago in a case called Missouri versus Jenkins. In that case the Supreme Court held that a Federal district court judge could order a school board to increase taxes, notwithstanding a State constitutional prohibition to the contrary.

Therefore, the issue that was raised by the U.S. Supreme Court is the issue of judicial taxation, and that is the question which is addressed by the constitutional amendment, and in exactly the same words, by this sense-of-the-Senate resolution.

Mr. President, I had always assumed that the power to tax was a purely legislative function, and that the Constitution was abundantly clear on this issue. However, the Supreme Court's decision certainly puts the issue in doubt. As a matter of fact, the Supreme Court expressly says that the power to order the imposition of taxes is now one that is held by the Federal judiciary. Therefore, it seems to me that we should put the Supreme Court's decision before the country as a whole, and allow the people to pass on the issue of judicial taxation.

The principle of no taxation without representation is a principle which antedates the country itself. It is a principle that was established by our British predecessors in the 17th century. It was a principle that was well known in the time of our own colonial days.

One need only reflect on the Stamp Act, on the Boston Tea Party and on the battle cry of those days, "No taxation without representation," to understand that one of the basic principles of American democracy is that the power to tax is one that is ultimately answerable to the American people; and that taxation should not be imposed by those who are either across the water, in the case of the British parliament in colonial days, or those who are located at Federal courthouses today.

The principle of legislative rather than judicial taxation, is borne out in our own Constitution. The taxing power of the Federal Government is vested in Congress in article I, section 8 of the Constitution. In the Federalist Papers, our forefathers explained the reasons for giving the legislature the taxing power. The power of the purse was a power that should only be held by elected, officials not by appointed officials. It should only be held by the legislative branch of the Government, by the Congress, and not by the courts.

In Federalist No. 78, Alexander Hamilton said that the judiciary is, in his words, "the least dangerous branch of Government." Hamilton also stated that the legislature holds the power of the purse. Similarly, James Madison in Federalist No. 48 said that, "The legislative department alone has access to the pockets of the people." So it was very clearly established in the minds of our own Founding Fathers that the legislative branch of Government alone had the power to tax. I think that it is really such a fundamental principle, one that is embedded in the Constitution itself, that it took many of us by surprise when the Supreme Court held that a Federal judge did have the power to order the imposition of taxes.

Many—including the occupant of the Chair, as a matter of fact—have asked me over the past week or so whether a court would be able to enforce remedies if it lacks the power to increase taxes. In other words, it is well understood that, particularly where there is a constitutional deprivation, a court has to have the power to act, a court has to have the power to make the situation right, to remove the constitutional deprivation.

So the question has been asked by a number of people, if we were to take from the Court the power that is assumed by the Court in Missouri versus Jenkins, then is the Court so weakened that it is unable to enforce constitutional decisions, or decisions on constitutional issues?

The syllogism underlying this question is as follows: Courts must have the power to remedy deprivations of constitutional rights. Ordering tax increases is a way of remedying constitutional deprivations. Therefore, courts must have the power to order tax increases.

Mr. President, it is absolutely clear that courts must have the power to remedy the deprivation of constitutional rights. There can be no question about that. A court cannot be powerless to right to wrong under the Constitution of the United States. But to agree that courts have the power to effectuate remedies does not mean that a court has the power to effectuate any remedy it wants, in whatever manner it pleases. The courts must be able to right a wrong, But that should not give the court a license to tailor remedies that are so sweeping and so broad that the court, in effect, has a blank check to do absolutely anything that it wants.

We have recognized here in Congress as recently as last year that there are certain limitations on courts, even in enforcing its most fundamental orders. Last year, the Congress of the United States dealt with the issue of Elizabeth Morgan. Elizabeth Morgan had been jailed here in the District of Columbia. It was pursuant to the contempt power of the court and the court had kept her in jail for, as I recall, almost 2 years because she had not divulged the whereabouts of her daughter. Congress stepped in and said the power of the court, even the power of the court to maintain its own majesty and to gain the compliance of parties in furnishing important information to the court, is not unlimited. Therefore, if the jail term was failing to force compliance we in the Congress said the court could not continue to do something that in the minds of many people in Congress was excessive or even ridiculous.

In the same manner, the courts do not have power, I would argue, to do absolutely anything they please. The courts can enforce remedies without imposing the increase of taxes. This should go without saying. If one looks back to the history of jurisprudence, not only in the United States but in Great Britain as well, before our country was a country, the power of a court to impose remedies, the power of the court to do what is necessary in order to enforce the law has not included the power of taxation.

As a matter of fact, the Supreme Court decision in the Jenkins case, which cites what it calls a line of cases favoring the idea of judicial taxation, is really a fairly strained and I think a fairly week interpretation. The fact of the matter is that throughout history courts have enforced orders without taxing people, even in school desegregation cases, the subject matter of the Jenkins case. Courts have enforced school desegregation orders without ordering the increase in taxation.

Brown versus Board of Education was decided 36 years ago. Beginning with Brown versus Board of Education, there have been countless school desegregation orders and they have been effective orders. All of us remember back in the 1950's, for example, President Eisenhower sending in the troops in Little Rock. There are a number of ways to enforce the orders of courts without taxing. So to say that a court somehow becomes weakened, unable to act, unable to enforce the law if it cannot tax, really is a novel premise. It is not borne out by history.

Courts have repeatedly enforced the law without taxing. The power to hold a party in contempt is the power to enforce the will of the court. It does not require the imposition of taxes, which is a legislative function not a judicial function.

It is also true that if judges can raise taxes then they have the sweeping power to go well beyond what is necessary in order to remedy a constitutional deprivation. Courts can engage in sweeping policymaking because with the power to tax there is no practical restraint on what a court can do.

In the Jenkins case, the Kansas City School District case, the court did, of course, have the power to remedy the effects of school segregation. What happened in this case is that the Federal judge in question, Judge Clark, decided that he wanted to create a magnet school district in the Kansas City, MO School District which was so impressive and so laudable that it would attract children from outside the school district.

So in the name of remedying the effects of segregation, Judge Clark ordered that the Kansas City School District establish a planetarium, for example. He ordered that the Kansas City School District have 15 personal computers in every classroom. He also ordered that the Kansas City School District, a city school district, establish a 25-acre farm and he also ordered that U.N. General Assembly be created and wired for simultaneous translation.

All of these things have been ordered in the school district, and, the judge believes that this is going to be the goldplated, absolutely, ideal school district.

Is that one way to solve the problem of segregation? Perhaps it is. But does it go well beyond the solving of the problem of segregation and create a school district which many people would view as highly unusual, to say the least, a school district with a planetarium and a farm and the like?

But if a court has the power to impose a tax, if the court has the power not only to put in place whatever order it wants but to impose a tax to fund that order, then there is no restraint at all that exists on the Federal judge.

As a matter of fact, the details of the Federal judge's order are really beyond the review of the court itself by an appellate court. In this case, the Supreme Court of the United States denied certiorari, denied review on the question of the remedy of the planetarium and the farm, and so on. The court said we are not going to reach that issue. We are only going to decide whether a judge has the power to tax.

Mr. President, if any member of any legislative body decides that he wants to improve some part of Government, some development, some new program, or create some new spending process, that individual Senator does not just do it. There are all kinds of restraints on each one of us. First of all, we have to get legislative idea through the Senate, we have to get it through the House, and we have to get it through conference, and we either have to have the President agree or we have to override a Presidential veto. All of these checks are in place for some of the wonderful ideas that you and I might have about how to make the world a better place. But a Federal judge basically has no review outside of the judiciary. A Federal judge who decides that he has the best idea for improving a school district is not going to get those ideas checked by anybody.

If the judge says that the Kansas City, MO, school district should have a model U.N. Assembly wired for simultaneous translation, nobody is going to review him. The appellate court, in this case the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, is going to say and did say that it was not an abuse of discretion, but it did not really scrutinize the scope of the remedy.

The Supreme Court denied certiorari and nobody else has anything to say about it. So if the court has the power to tax in addition to the power to devise whatever remedy it likes, then the effect is that there is literally no restraint on the court. And, of course, Federal courts are beyond the reach of the electorate. If any Member of the Senate decided that what he wants to do is to improve some part of Government and spend more money and raise taxes, ultimately that Member of the Senate has to go back to the public. The people have a chance to boot us out of office. Maybe they will. It is going to be a political debate.

But Federal judges are not elected. They are appointed. They serve for life and nothing can happen to them. Even their salaries cannot be reduced.

So the old idea of no taxation without representation is turned on its head. The court, under the Jenkins case, has the power to tax and, with the power to tax, the possibility of doing far more than remedying a constitutional deprivation, but the power to design what I am sure will be—it is going to happen—a magnificent school district.

It is going to be tremendous, I am sure, for the kids who are interested in science to have a planetarium at their school district. But it does not seem to be a judicial decision to me. It seems to be legislative, and particularly when coupled with the power to tax.

So the constitutional amendment that I have introduced really just goes to one issue, one issue only, and that is the question of judicial taxation. The simple question is: Does a Federal judge have the power to order the imposition of taxes; does a Federal judge have the power to increase people's taxes? That really is the issue.

Another question that is put to me is: well, if courts are to be denied the power to order tax increases, should this be done by statute or should it be done by the Constitution? Maybe it can be done by either. Some people say that it is clear in the Constitution, and I guess it is, that Congress has the power to cut back on the ability of the lower Federal courts, not the Supreme Court, to impose remedies, and that a statute is easier to pass than a constitutional amendment, and therefore we should proceed by statute but not by constitutional amendment.

Of course, this is not the first time that the idea of a statutory reduction of the courts' power to impose a remedy has come before the Senate. It is normally called court-stripping when it is proposed. And It raises all kinds of philosophical issues about the relative power of Congress and the power of the Federal courts. In my opinion, it creates a separate kind of debate about whether Congress should, after the fact of a court decision, get in the business of trying to strip the court of jurisdiction to decide that kind of a case.

So a statute is one possible remedy for this situation. And maybe I will end up voting for a statute, I do not know. But I know that I have a very strong feeling right now that we should proceed with a constitutional amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANFORTH. Of course.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator, I think, is doing a great service by bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate. To proceed with a constitutional amendment, would that not in itself ipso facto be interpreted as conceding that under the current Constitution the courts have the power to tax? I do not want to concede that.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I think it was Justice Hughes who said that the Constitution is what the Supreme Court says it is. I totally disagree with the Jenkins decision. I think it was wrongly decided. In fact, one reason I have offered this sense-of-the-Senate resolution at this time is to maybe have some sort of caution light flashed before the Court. But once the Court decides an issue that is constitutional relating to the power of the courts and the power of Congress, the Court pretty much is stuck. And the tendency of courts is to follow their own precedents.

Now, some say that this particular decision is not really a holding of the court but that it is dicta. But what would happen, I think, in the next Supreme Court case is that the Court would simply decide it, say, well, this is the power of the judiciary. I do not want to concede it either. But I do want to fix it.

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the Senator. It needs fixing. But I am wondering if there is some way to get at this by statute without appearing to concede that the courts now have that power and that we are going to attempt to fix that by a constitutional amendment.

Mr. DANFORTH. Maybe it should be on a both and basis. As I say, I do not rule out the idea of a statute. I do know this, that when this has been attempted in the past, when the Supreme Court has spoken, and then Congress, Members of the Senate, for example, have introduced amendments to legislation or have introduced bills dealing with the problem, it immediately has been attacked as court-stripping. In other words, it has been immediately attacked as a set of narrowly fashioned, after-the-fact attacks on the jurisdiction of the Court to decide cases which are in our minds unpopular.

It is my view that we should be arguing about a different issue. We should be arguing about the fundamental power of the Court and the fundamental power of the legislative branch of Government, and that this kind of issue—where does the taxation power lie in Government—truly is a constitutional question. This is the essence of constitutional debate. And for that reason I think that this should be done with a constitutional amendment.

Mr. BYRD. I certainly want to join with the Senator when we determine really what the approach should be. I have not read the opinion. I noted something about this in the news media recently. But I have not read this. I am not in a position to know what the Court said, what its rationale was, until such time.

I just wonder if there is some approach, some statutory approach, that can be taken that would not involve court-stripping. Perhaps the Senator has examined it closely enough to assure him in his own mind that it cannot be done. But I am just wondering out loud if that can be done. I just do not want to concede that the courts have the authority under the Constitution to tax.

I will read the opinion, because the Senator has certainly titillated my interest and my concerns.

I compliment him again.

What is his sense-of-the-Senate resolution? How does his sense-of-the-Senate resolution read?

Mr. DANFORTH. The sense-of-the-Senate resolution, which I have sent to the desk, is exactly the same wording as the proposed constitutional amendment. It is very short.

Mr. BYRD. I like the sense-of-the-Senate resolution.

Mr. DANFORTH. It is straightforward. It says:

> • • • neither the Supreme Court nor any inferior court of the United States shall have the power to instruct or order a State or political subdivision thereof, or an official of such State or political subdivision, to lay or increase taxes.

Mr. BYRD. Is the Senator, in his sense-of-the-Senate resolution, saying that there is a distinction between the Court's having the power to instruct a State or political subdivision or an official thereof to increase taxes and the Court itself acting to increase taxes without instructing a political subdivision, State, or official? Does the Senator see a distinction?

Mr. DANFORTH. Yes. What happened in the Kansas City case where the district court judge did impose the tax increase directly, and the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals held that in the future the court should not directly impose the tax increase as a matter of comity.

It really did not decide the constitutional issue, but it said that the court could order the local officials to impose the taxes, notwithstanding a State constitutional provision which limited the power of the taxing authority.

And the Supreme Court affirmed that. The Supreme Court said that there was no power, at least as a matter of comity, in the district court to actually order the increase of taxes.

I must say that since this amendment was introduced—this constitutional amendment resolution was introduced a week ago last Friday—all kinds of people have come up to me pointing out various defects in the amendment.

They have said, for example, well, the amendment should be written in such a way as to cover the direct imposition of taxes as opposed to the ordering of the imposition of taxes. Also, that it should cover courts enjoining the enforcement of State law requirements that would have limited the increase in taxes, which is precisely what happened in the Kansas City case.

I suppose that it would be possible to draft an absolutely airtight constitutional amendment which would be a little bit wordy, but it would be absolutely airtight. My hope is that in drafting constitutional language, we could do what we have traditionally done, namely use general expressions of public policy as opposed to writing the constitutional provision in a very lengthy verbase fashion, as in a statute.

So it is my view and certainly my intention that this proposed constitutional amendment covers the imposition of taxes, directly or indirectly. And maybe it should be so worded.

I wanted to point out during this debate that I have been in discussion with Senator BIDEN and with Senator SIMON, who are the chairmen of the Judiciary Committee and the Subcommittee on the Constitution of the Judiciary Committee. They have agreed to hold hearings at a very early date, hopefully in the next month or two, dealing with this subject.

I have absolutely no pride of authorship at all. Maybe the constitutional amendment that I have drafted could be done in a tighter fashion. I hope that it would not require redrafting. I mean, I hope that we could deal with constitutional subjects in general terms, rather than in extremely finicky detail. But this is what the committee system is all about, in my opinion.

So I welcome the opportunity to hold hearings on it. I am also sure that during the hearings, Senator HUMPHREY and Senator THURMOND, who are the authors of the statutory remedy, will be heard from and will press their idea about a statute.

Mr. BYRD. To pursue the matter a step further, might one jump to the conclusion that the Court could order the President of the United States and instruct him to raise taxes; to take steps to raise taxes?

Mr. DANFORTH. I think that under the Jenkins case, while the Jenkins case deals only with State and local officials, that if the Court has the power to raise taxes to remedy a constitutional problem, then it would have the power to raise any taxes, I would think.

Mr. BYRD. Does it have the power to instruct any official; an official who is not a State or political subdivision official? The President of the United States, for example, the chief executive? Could one jump? Would this be a quantum leap?

Mr. DANFORTH. I think the answer to that question is yes. I think this whole area is a quantum leap.

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. DANFORTH. I thought that judicial taxation was not in the Constitution. It has been some time coming, I might say. There have been various judges. There is a Judge Johnson in Alabama, and a Judge Justice in Texas who have at least hinted at the possibility that courts could raise taxes.

I do not know of any case where this has been suggested at the Federal level. But I think that the reasoning of the Supreme Court in this case might apply in a Federal case. Of course, article I, section 8, of the Constitution, the taxing authority at the Federal level, is vested exclusively in the legislative branch.

But it seems to me that once the Court decides that in remedying constitutional problems, the Court can impose taxes, there really is no stopping it.

Mr. BYRD. So, even though in this case the Court is instructing a State official or an official of a political subdivision of the State to lay or increase taxes, does the Senator feel, then, that if that, by some wildest stretch of the imagination, could be conceded as a constitutional power under the present Constitution, that it is just another step beyond that to say that the Court could also instruct the Chief Executive of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury to lay a tax? Instruct him to lay a tax; instruct him to increase taxes—it is just a step beyond that to move from the State jurisdiction, that States' sphere of action, to the national? To the Federal?

Mr. DANFORTH. I think that that is possible, but it may be that it is not very likely because the Federal Government does not necessarily have to have funds in the till to spend them. The fact that we can run deficits makes us different from State and local governments. So, on the State level, when they say, "Well, Judge Clark, you have ordered this massive program of the 25-acre farm and the 15 computers in the classroom and so on. We do not have the money to pay for that, and we cannot run deficits." Then the court says, "OK, I will furnish you the pot of money." At the Federal Government level they might just order us to spend the money for whatever and not worry about that. So it probably is a more live issue with respect to State and local governments than it is with the Federal Government.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator. I think he is, as I say, rendering a service.

Mr. DANFORTH. I thank the President pro tempore.

Mr. BYRD. I think it would do well if we all take a close look at this opinion and talk about it some more.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I totally agree with that. I just want to make a couple more points, and one is to follow on exactly what the President pro tempore has just said about the need for more careful attention to this issue; to just restate why I think this should be in the format of a constitutional amendment. I believe that the power to tax is so fundamental that it should be determined by the Constitution, and I believe that the protection of citizens from taxation without representation is so fundamental that it, too, should be protected by the Constitution, not just by statute.

I further believe that a constitutional amendment, while it is hard to do, and it should be hard to do, triggers a national debate, much more so than a statute does, and this issue really is basic to American democracy—it is absolutely basic, who is allowed to tax you. It is fundamental to American democracy. If the courts have the power, if a Federal judge has the power to impose taxes, that to me is such a big issue that it deserves a lively debate.

Now, I have offered a sense-of-the Senate resolution which is in exactly the same words as the constitutional amendment resolution. When I decided to do this late last week, I basically had two reasons.

First, I view the Jenkins case as being a green light for the courts to really get into this business in a big way, and it seemed to me that somebody should be throwing up a caution light. The second reason I did it was that I wanted to turn the meters on for Members of the Congress. I wanted people to start thinking about this in the context of, look, we are going to have to vote on this issue, so maybe we should go ahead and vote.

Now, my intention with respect to this sense-of-the-Senate resolution is probably not to press it to a vote today. The reason I say that is I have been talking with Senator BIDEN and I have been talking with Senator SIMON about having hearings. On one hand, I like the idea of pushing this concept forward and getting people to vote on it. On the other hand, I believe that this should be a constitutional amendment, and I think that before people start voting instantly on the words of the proposed constitutional amendment, we really should have some pretty careful analysis. Therefore, my inclination would be to give the hearing process a chance before rushing to the floor for a vote.

So what I propose to do, Mr. President—and I will ask unanimous consent after any other Senator wants to speak—is to lay this matter aside until some time later in the afternoon. Hopefully, by then Senator BIDEN or Senator SIMON will be back in the Senate—they are not available right now—and we could get a little colloquy on what sort of program we could set up to bring this matter before the Judiciary Committee.

My intention at that time would be probably to lay this aside, to not proceed then with a rollcall vote on the subject. But I do want to reserve that decision until later in the day. So I am not making any request right now. But after whoever would like to debate this subject now has spoken, then it would be my intention to ask this be laid aside and brought back sometime later on in the day after consultation with the floor managers of the bill.

Mr. GORTON. Will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. DANFORTH. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields the floor. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. GORTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, on the subject of the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Missouri, I should like to congratulate him not only on being the first to bring this very serious matter to the attention of the Senate of the United States but for having drafted a constitutional amendment which is certainly persuasive enough to cause this Senator to join as a cosponsor, but also for having brought the matter to the attention of the Senate in this debate on this amendment.

I believe he is entirely correct when he says that we are dealing with a true fundamental issue of the Constitution of the United States as we respond to this 5-to-4 decision by the Supreme Court.

I join with the distinguished President pro tempore in wishing there were another way out, that perhaps the Congress did not have to take this up, that perhaps we might even be acceding to the position of the majority of the Supreme Court even by proposing a constitutional amendment.

On the other hand, it seems to me much more likely that we are deemed as acceding to this decision by doing nothing about it, and that we have only the choice to acquiesce or to use our constitutional powers to respond.

Perhaps we can deal with this matter with a statute. Nonetheless, since it is such a profoundly constitutional decision it may well be that a constitutional amendment is the only way which to deal with it.

The Senator from Missouri has said that he does not know whether or not he should bring this specific sense-of-the-Senate resolution to a vote here in the Senate. I simply would like to express my initial opinion that either this sense-of-the-Senate resolution or perhaps one slightly amended from the present form ought to be brought to the attention of the Senate focused intensely enough so that it causes the vote to take place.

This sense-of-the-Senate resolution may anticipate, unjustly, the work of the Senate Judiciary Committee and careful drafting. I think it would be premature to ask Members of the Senate to vote on whether or not they wish this constitutional amendment to pass. But a sense-of-the-Senate resolution strongly criticizing the undercutting of the fundamental constitutional provisions relating to the separation of powers, and stating that this is and ought to be a congressional response to it, would seem to me to be appropriate at a very early stage in this debate, leaving the hearing process to determine whether or not it is most appropriate to deal with the challenge by statute, by constitutional amendment, and if by constitutional amendment exactly how that amendment should be phrased.

But we are at the very beginning of what is and ought to be a major debate on the separation of powers, and on the Constitution of the United States. I see nothing wrong, in fact I encourage the Senator from Missouri, for at least bringing something before this body which is appropriate to vote on now, and which gives at least the opinion of the Senate on the direction in which it ought to go, and in severe criticism of an inappropriate assertion of power on the part of the Federal courts.

Mr. GRASSLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY].

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me very briefly without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I want to take the floor to disagree with my friend, Senator GORTON. I hope that the Senator will not press his sense-of-the-Senate resolution for three reasons:

No. 1, there are entirely too many sense-of-the-Senate resolutions that are called up here.

No. 2, it has no standing whatsoever. It has no legally binding effect whatsoever. It is just an empty action, as a matter of fact. I hope he will wait and pursue that course which has some teeth in it whether it be statutory approach, the constitutional amendment approach, or both or whatever. I am not sure at this point as to which I would prefer. I intend to study the matter further about the sense-of-the-Senate resolution.

And, third, I would like to get on with this bill and not have more of these sense-of-the-Senate resolutions.

This sense-of-the-Senate resolution can generate quite a bit of talk. And it should. But there is a time to talk—and I do not think the preacher in Ecclesiastes says it precisely the way I will say it: There is a time to talk and a time to shut up and vote.

So I hope that the distinguished Senator will understand the position that I take, and my friend, also, from the State of Washington. I am not wanting to be cantankerous. I want to note, I think for the reasons I stated, that we ought not to approach it from the sense-of-the-Senate standpoint.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I do not know what the preacher from Ecclesiastes said about shutting up either, but I know it has been suggested on the floor of the Senate in recent weeks that perhaps the Senate do just that on occasion.

Mr. BYRD. Do what?

Mr. DANFORTH. Shut up. Maybe this is the occasion.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I think I have heard the distinguished Senator from Missouri add that line to the Biblical phrase.

Mr. DANFORTH. Right, not one of the more eloquent lines in the history of the Senate.

Mr. BYRD. It can be an eloquent line if attached to the Scripture. It makes a lot of sense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Missouri for his leadership in this area. I am happy to help him in his efforts to keep this issue before the public and before this body.

But while I commend his work, I find it a little embarrassing that we have to reaffirm so fundamental a principle by a "sense-of-the-Senate" resolution as opposed to voting on the substance of a constitutional amendment. That we have to take this step perhaps only serves to underscore how far some members of our unelected and unaccountable Federal judiciary have drifted from principles of democratic governance.

Mr. President, many of the newly emerging democracies of Eastern Europe look to the United States for the principles of self-government. It is an axiom of our system that only that which is electorally correctable can ever be politically accountable. But after Missouri versus Jenkins, a single unelected Federal judge can now unilaterally order State and local taxes which are not authorized, or are even prohibited, by State law or constitution. This newly minted power puts State treasuries and taxation power at the mercy of an omnipotent Federal judge. Mr. President—this is what the Senator from Missouri is trying to do—correct this act of judicial tyranny.

As I look around this Chamber, I see many strong advocates for the primacy of the legislature in our democracy. And so I would expect that—if we are going to be consistent in our principles—this resolution would pass 100 to 0. After all, what could be a worse assault on the prerogatives of the legislative branch than the usurping of the taxation power?

This Chamber has shown no hesitancy to condemn the executive's encroachment of our authority.

The examples are endless in matters of foreign, as well as domestic affairs. So let me ask my colleagues, Do we not hold the third branch of Government to that same standard—or is it just that some might simply like the result reached by Judge Clark and Justice White in this decision?

But those who engage in result-oriented jurisprudence overlook the enormous consequences of the Jenkins decision. If left undisturbed, the same reasoning could mean that new taxes can be imposed by judges on our people to spend millions on new projects, such as new State hospitals and new prisons. A shortage of the people's dollars, or the people's own spending priorities, would be no limit to the aesthetic sensibilities of any Federal judge. As Justice Kennedy pointed out in his dissenting opinion, "There is no obvious limit" in the Jenkins ruling to prohibit judicial taxation in countless other categories of cases.

Mr. President, many may be tempted to carve out an exception in the prohibition against judicial taxation for school desegregation cases. But while good educational opportunities are worthwhile ends, they should not justify unconstitutional means. As an April 24 editorial in one of my State's leading newspapers, the Cedar Rapids Gazette, explained,

> The issue is not the needs and rights of the students, nor the judge's power to order specific and immediate remedial action. The issue is whether in this Nation an individual, elected by and responsible to no one, can unilaterally set the level of a tax. Prior to last week, the answer was a very simple no. Today it is a qualified "yes," and it is not an exaggeration to say that Americans are less free as a result.

Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Missouri and look forward to working with him and others to make sure that the American taxpayers have their freedoms fully restored. I, like the Senator from Washington, hope that some sort of a question like this would be actually voted upon by this body. I also agree with the Senator from West Virginia, the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that too many sense-of-the-Senate resolutions come before this body and in a sense, those votes may be meaningless.

But on the other hand, on a scale of 1 to 10 on which important constitutional issues are number 10, this surely would rank as number 10, compared to many of the sense-of-the-Senate resolutions that are at the lower end of that scale. So I hope we do pursue this.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the President pro tempore.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the committee report accompanying H.R. 4404 inadvertently failed to contain an explanation of section 320 of the bill. Therefore, I send to the desk such explanation and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

I shall read the explanation into the RECORD, and I shall ask staff to provide a copy on each Senator's desk. This is the explanation, Mr. President. It should have been in the committee report, and was inadvertently omitted.

Section 320. This provision would amend the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 by adding two new sections to Section 251(a)(6) of the Balanced Budget Act. The first new section, subparagraph L, would exclude from the budget baseline and deficit calculations the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) use and repayment of loans from the Federal Financing Bank that are used for working capital requirements in resolving the savings and loan problem. The second new section, subparagraph M, would require that all other offsetting collections and disbursements of the RTC be assumed to net zero in calculating the budget baseline and the budget deficit, beginning with the 1991 budget.

As I say, Mr. President, that explanation in the report was inadvertently not included, and it will be placed on the Senators' desks and, of course, it now appears in the RECORD. This is an area that I understand will be debated at some point before the bill is passed.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the matter has been cleared on this side of the aisle.

Mr. DANFORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). The Chair recognizes the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH].

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment which I offered be temporarily laid aside to be brought back after consultation with the managers of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendment is laid aside.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Colorado has the right to be recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1554

(Purpose: To make an additional $19,100,000 available to the Department of Justice for financial fraud investigations)

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH], for himself, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. DIXON, Mr. SASSER, Mr. SIMON, and Mr. PELL proposes an amendment numbered 1554.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 7, line 6, strike the period and insert the following: ": Provided, That notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, $390,000,000 shall be available under the heading 'Economic Support Fund' and 'Panama' in chapter III of this title of which $0 shall be available for the promotion and development of tourism in Panama: Provided, That an additional amount of $7,600,000 is appropriated for 'Salaries and expenses, United States attorneys' and an additional amount of $11,500,000 is appropriated for 'Federal Bureau of Investigations, Salaries and Expenses' to be available for the investigation of fraud and other criminal activity in financial institutions.".

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the "Dear Colleague" that Senator RIEGLE and I sent this morning to all Members of the Senate concerning this amendment be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, we are all familiar with the fact that the S&L crisis is probably the most extraordinary financial crisis that this country has ever faced. We heard the very extensive debate on this and the discussion about Mr. Ryan to be head of the institution to watch over this. It was the last time that we had a chance in the body to debate the crisis and the size and scope of this, which, as you know, Mr. President, has grown remarkably.

Five years ago we were told that the size of the S&L crisis would be somewhere between $10 and $15 billion, not to worry. It then ballooned to $80 to $90 billion, and we were told that that was handleable, and just to take it easy, everything would be all right. And that administration then got out of town. We then got in, thank goodness, to the aggressive piece of legislation requested by this administration, which the Banking Committees in the Senate and the House moved on very expeditiously.

We spent 3 months on those committees doing absolutely nothing else except the S&L bailout legislation. That was an extremely important piece of legislation and set in place the first cut at the institutions that are necessary to clean up this terrible mess and to make the taxpayers whole and I would hope to allow us to pursue the wrongdoers in this particular area.

Unfortunately the S&L crisis has continued. The size of the economic problems in many areas of the country has been greater than understood. Some of the problems in those financial institutions have been greater than understood and Mr. Bowsher, the head of the General Accounting Office, the other day estimated that the size of S&L crisis cost over a long period of time, about 30 years I believe, was going to be about $350 billion and maybe as much as $500 billion.

Mr. President, there is nobody in this institution and nobody in the Congress who has not been asked by their constituents what is going on here? What happened? And each of us attempts to explain the fact that we had deregulation of these institutions in 1982 and that probably in some people's minds went too far.

I voted against it. I think it did go too far. Anyway, in 1982 we deregulated the industry and that moved in one direction. We also had many S&L's executives overstepping the bounds of what was prudent for them to do at a time that the regulatory structure was deregulated as well. We spent less money regulating and in the climate of the 1980's said: "Go ahead. Do it, whatever you want to do. Generally, we will trust you. Just go ahead and take those institutions."

And a lot of them went bankrupt as a result.

A third set of circumstances over which those institutions really had no control was rapidly declining economies in many areas of the country, particularly the Sun Belt areas of the country, and it was in particular I think in two or three States where we had enormous institutions cratering with enormous impact and the cost was tens of millions of dollars. Those three factors: Deregulation, the fact that we did not spend much money after passing the legislation in 1982; enforcing or regulating what was left of the law; and, third, the financial institutions themselves really overstepping their bounds and being in economies that were in real trouble were a great part of the problem.

But some of the problem as well as outright fraud and abuse within those institutions, people overstepping the bounds of the law, people acting in a fraudulent manner and in fact stealing from the American public.

One of the parts of the legislation, the Financial Institutions Reform and Recovery and Enforcement Act, the bill I spoke about that was passed last year, was to provide to the FBI and to U.S. attorneys through the Justice Department the resources necessary to go out and find the people who had been performing illegally, people who had in fact been stealing, and to enforce the law to recover wherever possible the funding back to the American public.

We authorized $75 million for the Justice Department. That was the request that came in from the Justice Department that they felt was necessary, $75 million, to go predominantly to the FBI and to the U.S. attorneys' offices.

Unfortunately, that $75 million was not spent by the administration. We only appropriated and there was only spent $50 million and we remained with almost a 50-percent gap in enforcement in the S&L issue, a 50-percent gap. They asked for $75 million. They were authorized for $75 million. We have only spent $50 million. It seems to me that we have an obligation to our constituents to enforce the law. We have an obligation to our constituents to reach back in wherever possible and to recover ill-gotten gains.

That is the thrust of this amendment, to add another nearly $20 million to the Justice Department appropriation.

Specifically, what would this do? The FBI and the U.S. attorneys' offices requested from us more than 200 additional FBI agents and more than 100 additional U.S. attorney positions as well as a variety of support staff. We were able to give them part of that but a great number remain.

For example, under this legislation, under the amendment here, we will be able to bring the FBI almost up to the full complement that they requested. We will be able to pay for 103 additional special agents and 67 additional support staff for the FBI—again getting back up to the level that they requested in order to do the job. And it will allow us to add 115 additional assistant U.S. attorneys and a related number of support staff for the offices of U.S. attorneys around the country, again the amount that they requested.

The administration came to us 1½ years ago and told us what they needed to do the job. I think we should provide the full amount of money for them to enforce the law and to recover for the taxpayers the ill-gotten gains coming out of the S&L crisis. Not only will we be able to meet the demand that they have, but that will also have a variety of other ripple effects.

Let me give you some examples. The pending caseload of major bank fraud and embezzlement investigations at the FBI doubled between 1983 and 1989, major fraud and embezzlement investigations, major fraud, major embezzlement, number of cases doubled from 1983 to 1989, from 1,800 to 3,600.

Unfortunately, because they cannot pursue these cases, more than 1,000 of them are major, inactive at this point. The more than 1,000 major fraud and embezzlement cases are inactive now at the FBI because they do not have funds to pursue them. What does major mean? This involves losses of more than $100,000 and most of them are more than $1 million apiece. The FBI cannot pursue them because it does not have the funds to do so.

Further, what else does this mean, that the FBI cannot do? There have been more than 20,000 referrals—these are requests, letters coming in, notes to the FBI saying something is amiss here—more than 20,000 referrals to the FBI in the financial services industry which the FBI cannot answer.

What does that mean? Mr. President, that means that if a constituent of yours knows that something has been going on within one of these S&L's, that is, fraudulent behavior, and has chapter and verse on that and calls the FBI as the law enforcement agency, to say these people are cheating or these people are stealing, in 20,000 instances, the FBI does not have the resources to go after those referrals and to check it out. It is not to say all these referrals are real or not. But you know as well as I do that a lot of material comes into the FBI. The American people believe in the FBI. The American people call the FBI when there is a fraudulent occurrence. The American people would expect that the FBI would be able to reach in and enforce the law. Unfortunately, that is not the case.

So those are two of the problems. One, more than a thousand major fraud and embezzlement cases cannot be acted upon and are put in the inactive file because resources are not available. More than 20,000 referrals involving fraud in the financial services industry the FBI has been incapable of handling.

Further, additional resources are needed as soon as possible because the passage of time makes investigation more difficult, and many crimes go unpunished as the statute of limitations expires.

As long as we delay, these cases get more and more and more difficult to investigate, and in many of them the statute of limitations is going to expire and people are going to get away scot-free.

What we have to do is be able to pursue these causes so that we can get them while it is still possible.

So it seems to me this is a very logical thing for us to be doing. This bill is a dire emergency supplemental. I can think of no emergency more dire than the emergency surrounding the saving and loan institutions in the United States.

Where would the money come from? It seems to me it is appropriate for us in looking at this that we have to create an offset if we want to spend more money to enforce the law, if we want to spend more money to recover fraud from the savings and loan industry, if we want to put more people who have been stealing from their customers, from S&L's, and stealing from the taxpayers in jail. If we wanted to pursue more of those embezzlement cases, we have to spend more money to do it. If we are going to do it, then where does the money come from? So that is where the offset is needed in this legislation.

Where the offset comes, Mr. President, is from part of the Panama economic assistance package. Now which part is that? In the administration's description of the fiscal year 1990 supplemental of $500 million for Panama which they provided to all of us, this fact sheet was sent around to all of us. Part of that struck me, Mr. President. Part of the dire emergency supplemental request by the administration was for tourism.

The administration requested that we appropriate $30 million of dire emergency money for tourism, "to develop the potential for tourism and related services which could be a major contributor to economic growth in Panama." Part of this dire emergency supplemental is to promote tourism services in Panama.

Now that is not, in my opinion, a dire emergency supplemental, Mr. President, that we be promoting tourism in Panama. I am all for helping Panama. I think tourism is an important industry. But I do not believe it is a dire emergency supplemental and I do not believe it is an emergency compared to the S&L's.

What we have to do around here is to make decisions all the time. The amendment which I am offering, cosponsored by a number of Members of the Senate, is a simple transfer of money. It is a simple decision for the Senate to make. Do we want to spend $30 million promoting tourism in Panama in this dire emergency supplemental or do we want to spend the funding necessary to bring the FBI and the U.S. attorneys' offices up to the level of funding necessary for them to be able to enforce the law, recover fraud, investigate embezzlement, and so on in this enormous issue of greatest concern to the American taxpayer?

I cannot think of a simpler choice. I have been up here for 16 years and I cannot think of a simpler trade that is easier to make, more understandable, and more in line with what our constituents and I think really believe we ought to be doing.

So if you vote for the Wirth amendment, which I hope our colleagues will do when we get to the package of votes later this afternoon, if you vote for the Wirth amendment you will be voting to increase the amount of funds necessary, giving them to the Justice Department for the FBI and U.S. attorneys for fraud, embezzlement, recovery of ill-gotten gains of people who have cheated and stolen from the American public. We are going to enforce the law. If we vote no on this amendment, we are going to be spending $30 million to promote tourism in Panama.

It seems to me that choice is pretty clear. That is why I am offering the amendment. I think in a dire emergency supplemental it ought to be precisely that, a dire emergency supplemental. And I think the dire emergency surrounds this amendment.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, may I first make an inquiry? Are we under any time constraints? Is there a time limit?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are no time constraints that are currently in effect.

Mr. DIXON. May I also inquire of my distinguished friend from Colorado whether I am now listed as a cosponsor of the amendment?

Mr. WIRTH. The distinguished Senator is a cosponsor of the amendment at the top of the list.

Mr. DIXON. I thank my friend from Colorado.

Mr. President, my friend from Colorado, Senator WIRTH, in his usual careful and analytical way, has precisely pinpointed a problem and brought to the attention of the U.S. Senate and the people of this country once again I think as important an issue as is presently before us in the Congress.

My friend in the chair may recall the debate we had not too long ago concerning the confirmation of Mr. Ryan as Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision. I hope that my colleagues in the Senate and those who are aware of that speech understand that I was never in that speech critical of Mr. Ryan as a person. I only suggested what a tremendous problem this is in the country and suggested that I thought we ought to bring to bear on that problem the finest resources available in the country.

Incidentally, I want to say in defense of Mr. Ryan that since that time he has come to my office with his staff. He has spent substantial time in my office discussing this problem. He has told me what he hopes to do to address in a very significant way this problem. I must confess that at least I am very impressed, may I say to my friend from Colorado and my friend in the Chair—because I now remember Mr. Ryan as a Virginian—I am very impressed with the fact that he is clearly demonstrating to me a profound concern. Let me tell you something. By now, having spent my adulthood in public service, I put a high value on real concern about these problems. And my friend from Colorado has pinpointed a matter of tremendous concern.

Mr. President, surely every Senator who has townhall meetings has had the experience I have had. When you go home and you talk about problems in the Government, someone will always raise the problem of the thrifts and discuss the fact that it is a bailout. And there is that perception out there. Most people do not really make the connection, I do not think, about the fact that we as a Government have placed our full faith and credit behind the deposit insurance system which saved the financial institutions of America during the deepest depression in our historical experience, and that we have some responsibilities there.

I do not like the bill we passed. I voted against the final bill. But I do not have any quarrel with the President recognizing the nature of the problem. I said that innumerable times. I give him credit for it. But people are saying out there: if they have stolen hundreds of billions, where are the people in the jails that stole all of these hundreds of billions? A very reasonable question. Where are those people who stole all this money, that bought all those yachts and race horses and big diamonds and fur coats? Why are they not all in jail?

My friend from Colorado wants to put them there. He wants to take out of this supplemental a few million dollars, otherwise going to Panama, to hire appropriate law enforcement authorities and prosecuting attorneys and others to send these people to jail.

Mr. WIRTH. Will the Senator yield momentarily?

The amendment is not just taking money from Panama, but from the promotion of tourism in Panama. I just want to make that clear. Of the overall Panamanian appropriation, this is the part designated for the promotion of tourisn in Panama.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. DIXON. I thank my friend from Colorado for so narrowly defining from where the money is taken. I voted to take $120 million out before. I would vote to just take $120 million out right now. Let us give $120 million back to Americans. I think they would receive it with open arms.

I think this omnibus—I love supplementals. This supplemental—I am going to depart from my text—the supplemental started out with some need for some aid in Panama and Nicaragua. They came up with a figure of $720 million. Most of us think that is too high. I voted to take out $120 million and put it in other places. I would vote to take out the whole $120 million. I want to make it clear for the record I would vote to take out more for both Panama and Nicaragua. I think the number is too high.

But I would remind the Chair, I would remind the Senate, and I would remind the taxpayers of America that this little supplemental appropriation that started out to take care of Panama and Nicaragua was $2.5 billion when it came out of committee. We have already waived Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and put in another $250 million in budget busting onto this thing. Before we are finished, it is going to be a fair number.

But I congratulate my friend from Colorado for his thoughtfulness, his incisiveness and his ability to find a place where 100 percent of America would probably agree we ought to take the money out. I do not know anybody—listen, I used to own a travel bureau. I sold it to my brother. But I will bet my brother, who is a good, conservative Dutchman back in Belleville, is not in favor of sending millions to Panama to promote tourism, and he is in the travel bureau business.

Let me put some things in the RECORD.

According to a March 1990 FBI survey, the FBI has 2,327 inactive fraud and embezzlement cases which have not yet been addressed because they do not have the personnel to do it; 2,327, Mr. President, of which 1,300 are major cases involving over $100,000.

There are thousands of people in America believed to have stolen hundreds of thousands of dollars who nobody is looking at because we do not have the personnel to look at them. They stole from the people of America.

The FBI is pleading for additional staffing, pleading for it.

The RTC and the FDIC have paid private attorneys hundreds of millions of dollars for civil litigation to recover against claims. We have to do something to get this money in. In 1989, the FDIC and the FSLIC, that we called FSLIC in our committee, paid fee counsel $177 million for legal work related to closed financial institutions. I am not condemning that.

I do not know about those amounts, whether the amounts are right amounts, but we ought to be doing something. I have said it how many thousands of times, we ought to put everybody who stole in jail. I used to be on the board of directors of a bank when I was a kid back in Illinois, and every time we made a major loan we used to worry about the reasonable prudent man rule. There is case law that says you can sue officers of banks and members of boards of directors for making bad loans, negligently making bad loans and violating the reasonably prudent man rule.

What happened to all that? I mean, nothing is happening.

The FBI, Mr. President, has received more than 20,000 referrals involving fraud. Just think of it; 20,000—why, that is half the size of my hometown—involved in fraud, that they cannot look at. They do not have the personnel to do it.

And, Mr. President, in case people do not know this, and I think most Americans suspect this is so, the statute of limitations is running. The statute of limitations is running. I happen to be a lawyer. I know what that means. But for Americans who do not, on most crimes there is a limit, and after a certain amount of years you cannot do anything about it any more. The time runs, the statute of limitations runs.

There are tens of thousands, if these numbers are right, of people out there in America who either stole, committed fraud, or did other things to make this mess a reality that impacts on every taxpaying American citizen, that are not being sued and are not being prosecuted and are not being put in jail because we have not put up the money to do it.

If we have hundreds of billions of dollars in problems here, I want to argue the average American is willing to spend a few bucks to put those folks away and to get the money from them, and would rather spend a few bucks on this than on promoting tourism for Panama.

I realize, Mr. President, we could make an argument for spending money on anything, and most of us, at one time or another, are probably guilty of having done that. But I would like to argue, as sincerely as I can, for a minute or 2, and then I will sit down, that, for all the honest, law-abiding, decent citizens of this country who are burdened by their Government, they would surely think that FBI people, IRS people, prosecuting attorneys, and others who will really do the work and solve some of the problems in this country are good investments. That is what my friend from Colorado is trying to do here.

I want to take, by relative standards even under this bill, a relatively modest sum of money, not extra money, and take it from one place over here in the bill and put it over here in another place in this bill to do this job.

I want to conclude by saying this. My friend from Colorado and another friend of mine, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, Senator PRYOR, called my last speech on Mr. Ryan the "small potatoes" speech; itsy-bitsy small potatoes, I was talking about that day. This thrift outrage is not itsy-bitsy small potatoes, I say again. It is a big, big scandal and we ought to make a lot of people answer for it.

The people of this country have that right. They deserve that. To the extent we can accomplish that purpose in this bill, we should do so. I think it is time for the Senate to send a good message.

I know that nobody wants amendments on this bill who is in the managerial capacity; that is understood. But here is a good chance to come in and send a really solid message to the country that we are going to sue people and put people in jail and make people pay for the outrages that they have committed against the people of this country and their government in connection with this thrift scandal.

I am proud to be a cosponsor. I thank my friend from Colorado for his concern, and we will not vote on this until 7 this evening. I guess they are all stacked for that hour. I hope that my colleagues will talk to staffs about that, if they have not been following what is going on here, and would seriously consider what I consider to be a very serious, well-intentioned, and important amendment that could make a profound difference.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is overwhelmingly adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague the senior Senator from Illinois, for his help and support. He is a very knowledgeable and extraordinarily persuasive member of the Banking Committee, and I am very pleased to have his support for this amendment.

We were talking about tourism, moving back to the Senator's brother-in-law——

Mr. DIXON. This is my brother.

Mr. WIRTH. He probably enjoys the support given to the tourism industry, which my colleague supports and I support. Does my colleague know how much money the Federal Government spends now to promote tourism all across the United States?

Mr. DIXON. I have no idea.

Mr. WIRTH. In Maine, Illinois, Colorado, South Carolina, California—does the Senator know how much money we spend to promote tourism; $14 million.

Mr. DIXON. We want to spend more money in Panama than in America.

Mr. WIRTH. The proposal is made that we spend twice as much money promoting tourism in Panama as we do promoting tourism in all of the United States.

Mr. DIXON. That is remarkable.

Mr. WIRTH. My colleague probably does not believe that. I was astonished.

Mr. DIXON. Oh, I would believe the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. I would like to include in the RECORD at this point, Mr. President, the section on page 2 of the fact sheet on the Panama economic assistance:

Tourism: an estimated $30 million to develop the potential for tourism and related services.

Thirty million dollars for Panamanian tourism.

Thirty million dollars; $14 million to promote tourism all across the United States to affluent Europeans, affluent Japanese. Everybody is encouraging them to come. There is a burgeoning industry in the United States. Fourteen million dollars for all the United States; more than twice that for Panama.

That by itself, it seems to me, is a pretty persuasive argument for supporting this. Then, add on top of it all of the problems that we have: 20,000 unanswered referrals; 1,000 major fraud cases in the inactive file because they cannot be pursued. It is extraordinary.

Anyway, I think this amendment is just about as simple and cut and dried as it can be and, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DIXON. I want to say to my friend from Colorado, this amendment makes so much sense it may literally overwhelm us.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, this is an amendment to the emergency appropriations legislation that would provide an additional $19.1 million to the Department of Justice to investigate and prosecute criminal activity in the S&L and financial institutions industry. Last year the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 [FIRREA] authorized $75 million annually for 3 years for this same purpose. However, the administration requested only $50 million for the current fiscal year. My amendment would increase funding to a level already authorized by FIRREA.

The need for this amendment is very simple: fraud and other criminal activity contributed significantly to the S&L crisis and our law enforcement officials do not have adequate resources to investigate and porsecute criminal activity in this area.

The savings and loan debacle, Mr. President, is arguably the largest financial crisis since the Great Depression. Illegal activity was widespread within the thrift industry and will cost taxpayers billions of dollars. Taxpayers rightfully expect the Federal Government to vigorously pursue individuals whose illegal activities contributed to the industry's losses. If we are serious about sending a message of "never again" to those involved in the financial industry, we must investigate and prosecute criminal activity related to the S&L crisis. We cannot let those in the financial services industry believe the Government will cover any loss—no matter how big—and then let the perpetrators go unpunished.

Fraud and insider abuse contributed significantly to the financial crisis in the industry. An October 1988 report of the House Government Operations Committee found that insider misconduct caused or contributed to more than three-fourths of all thrift failures. Last June, the General Accounting Office [GAO] issued a report that examined 26 thrift failures and compared them to a sample of 26 solvent S&L's. The GAO found activities at each insolvent institution that appeared to be fraud and insider abuse. Investigations or legal actions had been initiated against 25 of these 26 thrifts or against persons associated with them. And most recently, Attorney General Richard Thornburgh spoke of an "epidemic of fraud" in the S&L industry and said that at least 25 to 30 percent of thrift failures can be attributed to criminal activity by S&L officers.

The $50 million already provided for fiscal year 1990 was used to increase staff in FBI and U.S. attorneys' offices throughout the country. Unfortunately, the funding was inadequate and more resources are urgently needed to investigate and prosecute criminal activity in the S&L industry. The additional personnel added as a result of the $50 million do not meet the staffing needs identified in a recent FBI survey. In this survey, FBI and U.S. attorneys' offices requested 224 more FBI agents, 113 more assistant U.S. attorney positions, and 142 more support staff positions than they received.

The FBI's pending caseload of major bank fraud and embezzlement investigations increased from 1,825 in 1983 to 3,605 by September 1989. Even with the $50 million appropriated in fiscal year 1990, there are more than 1,000 inactive major cases. These cases all involve losses of over $100,000 and many of them involve losses greatter than $1 million.

Moreover, there have bveen some 20,000 referrals involving fraud in the financial services industry that the FBI has been unable to examine because of a lack of personnel and other important resources. It's obvious that we need to give the FBI, and Federal prosecutors, more resources to handle this rapidly growing workload.

Additional resources are needed as soon as possible because the passage of time makes investigation more difficult. In addition, many crimes may go unpunished as statutes of limitation expire. The Denver FBI division indicated in a March 1989 teletype to FBI headquarters that at least four of its bank failure investigations "face serious statute of limitation problems with some of the potential counts already lost."

Aggressive pursuit of criminal activity in the S&L industry must be a part of any serious effort to resolve the crisis. Not only did the administration only request $50 million for the current fiscal year, the budget proposal for fiscal 1991 does not make a specific request to target criminal activity related to the S&L crisis. Instead, it appears the administration included some funds for this purpose within the overall request for investigating and prosecuting white collar crimes.

The administration's funding requests in this area—along with the long delay in selecting a replacement for M. Danny Wall as Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision and in filling other key positions involved in the bailout, the slow pace of resolving thrift insolvencies, and the circumstances that led to the resignation of Daniel Kearney—make me wonder if the administration is giving the S&L crisis the urgent attention it requires.

Resolving the S&L crisis will be among the most expensive undertakings in U.S. history. The thrift crisis could cost more than $325 billion and the American taxpayer will have a shoulder most of that burden. This must be a high priority. The administration got off to a strong start by proposing and pursing for the prompt passage of FIRREA. The Congress responded promptly by improving the legislation and moving it quickly. However, the administration's recent actions lead me to conclude that the thrift crisis is not receiving the urgent attention it needs and deserves.

My amendment would provide an additional $19.1 million for staff and expenses at the FBI and U.S. attorneys' offices. The FBI would receive $11.5 million and U.S. attorneys' offices $7.6 million. This division roughly parallels the allocation of the $50 million already in this year's budget.

With the addition of these resources, the FBI could hire about 103 special agents and 67 support employees and the U.S. attorneys offices could add an estimated 115 assistant U.S. attorneys and 115 support staff. This is a good first step, but I also believe we must work to see that the full $75 million is appropriated in fiscal year 1991. The addition of these resources will allow law enforcement officials to begin to attack the backlog of cases and prepare for new cases.

The funds for the amendment would be obtained from the tourism development assistance included in the administration's Panama economic assistance package. Although tourism assistance could provide some help in Panama's economic reconstruction, it certainly cannot be considered an urgent expenditure. There is, however, an urgent need for increased funds to investigate and prosecute criminal activity related to the S&L crisis. I believe this deserves higher priority than Panamanian tourism assistance.

Mr. President, this amendment will help us fulfill the commitment we made to the American people in FIRREA to target and prosecute criminal activity within the S&L industry. The American taxpayers deserve nothing less. The amendment will also send a strong message to those in the financial services industry who continue to violate the law that their actions will be punished.

I urge my colleagues to support the proposal and give the FBI and the U.S. attorney the resources they need to pursue aggressively individuals whose illegal activities contributed to the losses in the S&L industry.

EXHIBIT 1

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, April 30, 1990.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Last year, the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA) authorized $75 million annually for three years to investigate and prosecute financial institution crimes. The Administration, however, requested only $50 million for the current fiscal year. The funds were used to increase staff in FBI and U.S. Attorneys' offices throughout the country.

This level of funding is inadequate. The newly-added personnel do not meet the staffing needs identified in a recent FBI survey. In this report, FBI and U.S. Attorneys' offices requested 224 more FBI agents, 113 more assistant U.S. Attorney positions, and 142 more support staff positions than they received.

The FBI has received more than 20,000 criminal referrals which the agency has been unable to pursue. Even with the $50 million appropriated for FY 1990, the FBI has more than one thousand inactive major fraud and embezzlement cases. These cases all involve losses of more than $100,000 and many of them involve losses greater than $1 million. But the FBI does not currently have the resources to pursue the cases.

We intend to offer an amendment to the emergency appropriations legislation that would provide $19.1 million in additional funds to pursue fraud and other criminal activity in the S&L and financial services industry. This funding would approach the level already authorized by FIRREA and be used for additional staff and expenses of the FBI and the U.S. Attorneys' offices.

While the cost of the S&L crisis continues to grow—with losses mounting at a rate of several million a day—we have not provided adequate resources to pursue fraud and other crimes that contributed to thrift losses. Just last week, Attorney General Richard Thornburgh spoke of an "epidemic of fraud" within the S&L industry and said that at least 25 to 30 percent of thrift failures can be attributed to criminal activity by S&L offices. We cannot let those involved in the financial services industry believe the government will cover any loss—no matter how big—and then let the perpetrators go unpunished.

This amendment will help us fulfill the commitment we made to the American people in FIRREA to target and prosecute criminal activity within the S&L industry. The American taxpayers deserve nothing less.

We urge you to support the amendment. If you wish to cosponsor the proposal, or would like further information, please contact us or Michael Perko of Senator Wirth's staff at 224-5852.

With best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

TIMOTHY E. WIRTH.
DONALD W. RIEGLE, Jr.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, in January 1989, even before President Bush's February 1989 announcement of the administration's plan to deal with problems afflicting our savings and loan industry, the Senate Banking Committee had arranged a comprehensive series of hearings on that matter. Among those hearings was one scheduled for February 9, 1989, to look at the issue of wrongdoing and fraud in the savings and loan industry.

President Bush announced his legislative plan to deal with problems in the S&L industry on February 6, 1989. In doing so the President stated that "unconscionable risk taking, fraud and outright criminality" were major factors in creating the industry crisis. He further stated that his administration would "make every effort to recover assets diverted from S&L institutions and to place behind bars those who have caused losses through criminal behavior."

The Banking Committee immediately requested Attorney General Thornburgh, rather than an Assistant Attorney General, to testify at the Febraury 9 hearing. At that hearing the Attorney General told of the serious problems of fraud and insider abuse affecting our Nation's financial institutions and said such practices "are believed conservatively to have been involved in 25 to 30 percent of the savings and loan failures." He then stated that the President's comprehensive plan to deal with the savings and loan problem would increase the budget of the Justice Department by approximately $50 million. Such an increase, the Attorney General stated, "could be used to provide on the order of 200 new investigators, over 100 new prosecutors, 30 or more other new attorneys, plus additional support personnel to strengthen the enforcement of criminal and civil laws concerning financial institution fraud."

The Congress worked very hard on the S&L bill to strengthen the ability of regulators and prosecutors to discover, stop and punish fraudulent behavior. We also extended the statue of limitations for financial institution crimes, increased jail sentences, and provided for forfeiture to the government of any illicit gains by fraudulent operators. We also decided that the Nation needed to devote even more resources to tracking down and punishing those who looted our savings and loan industry. Section 966 of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 [FIRREA] signed into law by the President last August 9 authorized $75 million dollars, rather than the $50 million requested by the administration, to strengthen the Justice Department's ability to investigate and prosecute crimes involving financial institutions.

On April 23 the Attorney General made a major address about fraud in financial institutions. He said "attorneys from the Justice Department fraud squads talk about an epidemic of fraud among the S&L's presently in default." But the administration, despite the growing evidence of the degree of looting that took place in failed S&L's, has never requested the full amount of money authorized by Congress to go after wrongdoers. Instead it has continued to keep a cap on money expended to go after those who looted Government insured institutions. This is a foolish economy by the administration and is not consistent with President Bush's pledge that his "administration would make every effort to recover assets diverted from S&L institutions and to place behind bars those who have caused losses through criminal behavior."

Senator WIRTH's amendment is designed to provide that the enforcement money authorized by last year's FIRREA bill is appropriated so that the Justice Department has the needed resources to hire the toughest prosecutors and best investigators to go after crooks who have left the taxpayer holding the bag on the S&L problem. Spending money to prosecute wrongdoers will not only put S&L crooks in jail but could help defray the cost of the total problem if the criminal investigators are able to track down the illicit profits made by the such wrongdoers.

I am pleased to be able to join Senator WIRTH in offering this most important amendment.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation? We had a unanimous-consent request last Friday, during the beginning of a filibuster, I believe. We had a unanimous-consent request, and a number of us agreed to offer amendments with the understanding that a certain amount of time will be set aside for the debate on those amendments, and then we were going to move on to other issues.

Will the Chair inform me, what was that unanimous consent? Is debate limited to an hour, or what is the situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair clarifies the question as asked by the Senator to indicate that although an agreement was reached to consider a certain number of amendments in a certain order, no specific agreement was reached with respect to how those amendments would be disposed of.

Mr. WIRTH. So having agreed to come at 1 o'clock and come at 1 o'clock, with an understanding there was an hour, and presented this amendment, anybody can come in during the afternoon or evening up until the time of the vote to further debate this amendment, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment in the order would be the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD].

Mr. WIRTH. Does that mean somebody could not come in and debate this amendment further? Is there a time agreement so that debate on this amendment is then precluded until we get to a vote, or can other Senators come in and discuss the amendment later?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no specific time agreement on the amendment of the Senator or any other amendment.

Mr. WIRTH. So the hour that we agreed to was just a general descriptive time as to what might happen on the afternoon of Monday rather than a specific time, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would observe that the Senator has probably caught the flavor of that particular unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. WIRTH. Finally, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator CRANSTON, be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WIRTH. I yield the floor. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS].

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I will just take a few moments. It is not an amendment so manifestly with merit as to be passed overwhelmingly. The truth is, Mr. President, this is the third attempt to cut the Panama appropriation. We had it once in the Appropriations Committee. A second time it was voted down by the Senate in a close vote. Maybe they are beginning to prevail by lessening the amount each time. It seems to be a determined campaign to somehow or the other cut Panama.

These amendments are not intended to help tourism; not to clean up the Savannah River site, as was stated in last week's amendment; not to help women, infants, and children feeding; or not to help Hugo. They have pursued various tacks in their effort to cut Panama aid and that is what this is all about.

I can speak with some experience relative to both tourism and to the amounts needed to try to clean up this S&L mess. It so happens by a coincidence that last Thursday we heard the Attorney General of the United States, and the very points being made now by my distinguished colleague from Colorado we were insisting upon because we can even make a better argument. The U.S. Attorney General had cut, in his request, white-collar crime enforcement by 65 positions. That is exactly what we were cross-examining him on. We asked: Why cut when we have over 1,000 cases backed up, from $100,000 to $1 million, that are just untouched for lack of personnel.

Of course, he indicated that that report and request was a misprint and that he had plenty of money and resources. But I rather believe that the distinguished Senator from Colorado is more nearly on target. I think we will be increasing the request because, if we are going to spend some $360 billion, a matter of $30 million or a matter of $300 million or $3 billion more for enforcement is nominal in the view of this Senator. So there is no argument about getting the money.

This is practically the 1st of May and we will be moving to mark up that bill in the next 90 days. We will have an appropriation where the funds will come just as quickly as any kind of supplemental can be expended. So we should not be distracted by the chicanery and the fraud and the crime of the savings and loan institutions. I am for cleaning 9 that up and we are going to do our dead level best to put in far more money than the Attorney General has requested.

Now, with respect to tourism, it so happens that the principal industry of Panama is tourism. The principal industry of my State of South Carolina now happens to be tourism. I can tell you that 30 years ago we could not get commissions for tourism. We did not have budgets. We had volunteers within our development board and we orchestrated what we called the committee on tourism, which now has been transformed, under subsequent administrations, into formal commissions. With the minimal amount of investment, but surely more than $30 million, in my State and other States, they do a great job. The community of Myrtle Beach I think spends millions of dollars—just one section of my State. The State of Virginia, I am confident, will spend more than the $14,300,000 that the Federal Government is spending right now.

Now, mind you it is not that we care more about tourism in Panama than tourism in the United States. It is because they did red line the United States Tourism and Travel Administration for several years, under President Reagan.

Incidentally, after the effort that we started in South Carolina, I implored our friend, the late Secretary of Commerce, Gov. Luther Hodges, to start a Federal tourism program when he came into the Kennedy administration. He said he would be glad to start one if I would give him back Jerry Albright. As Governor of South Carolina, I had a kind of affirmative action plan for recruiting brains and talent wherever I could find them. It so happened that I got the gentleman who instituted the Research Triangle, the gentleman who worked on Governor Hodges' technical training program, and the gentleman who worked on his tourism, all to come down to South Carolina. And so Jerry Albright came to Washington. The tourism initiative was headed up by Voight Gilmore, who is now a senior vice president of the travel agencies of the United States of America. The United States Travel and Tourism Administration has been doing an outstanding job, and they have been hamstrung.

I know full well that when you have a devastated area, you try to accentuate the positive. I am still trying to rebuild my own home in Charleston. But in the coastal region of South Carolina where Hugo hit, we are not moaning and growning or crying.

In contrast, we are devoting an extra effort for Spoleto, the arts festival that we will have next month. We have Leonard Bernstein, from the New York Philharmonic, and others coming down. We are spending what extra money we have to make sure, because we want to regenerate this greatest of South Carolina industries. Tourism revenues exceed $4 billion now in my State. In fact, I think by the year 2000 you could go from Little River, NC, down to Savannah, GA, and it will be veritably a French Riviera, just go right on up the coast: Hilton Head, Kiawah Island, Cape Romain, Santee Flyway, De Bordieu, Litchfield, Myrtle Beach, right on up to the North Carolina line.

So we have been soliciting and getting increased contributions right in my own backyard in the last couple of weeks. And I am trying now to work on several that have been generous in helping us here at the national level. To do what? To get people all back to work. I am confident that is what was in this particular plan for Panama.

And to the unknowing it sounds outrageous. How in the world here in an emergency supplemental can we be spending money on tourists? How in America can we spend money on anything that we destroyed down there? Well, obviously, our primary goal must be to try to get the people back to work in their primary industry, which is tourism.

So I look at the amendment of the Senator from Colorado for what it is. It is a third bite at the apple to cut Panama. They are trying to cut it. They have it from $500 million down to $420 million. They tried again to cut it down from $420 million. They could not. They tried again on the floor. They could not. Now they are trying again. That is exactly what this is.

I hope that this great interest in America's expenditure in tourism will persist because we will have that budget come up. I hope you will join me with the increases here and we will try to get for America double our present budget to get it up to what we did for Panama.

In fact I hope this amendment fails, so that we can put up $30 million. When my time comes to bat for America's tourism I can say the opposite of what the Sentor from Colorado said. I can say, aha, we did not question tourism when we were trying to help our friends down in Central America. Why not help our own people? That would be my argument. I hope I will be given that argument, and that this amendment will fail.

Mr. WIRTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH].

Mr. WIRTH. Thank you, Mr. President.

I was delighted to hear the distinguished chairman's support for tourism in the United States. I believe we have an enormous amount to do. Recreation and tourism has also become, I believe now, the No. 1 industry in the State of Colorado; perhaps No. 2, but enormously important.

But the issue is not are we going to support tourism in the United States. I hope we support it more. The issue is one of relative priority. The Senator from South Carolina has to understand this is exactly what we are talking about here. We are talking about spending $30 million to promote tourism in Panama in an emergency supplemental bill—a dire emergency supplemental bill which requires us to spend $30 million to promote tourism in Panama. That is twice the amount that we spend to support tourism in all of the United States—all around the globe. That, by itself, makes no sense.

This is not an attempt to go after Panama, although I do believe the amount for Panama is too high. But this is what this amendment is all about, a question of priority. Do you think the American people really want us to spend $30 million promoting tourism in Panama when the S&L fraud extortion issue insider abuse continues unabated?

How bad is the fraud question, Mr. President? Again, let us remember this amendment says we are not going to spend money to promote tourism in Panama. Instead we are going to spend the same amount of money to try to clean up fraud and insider abuse at S&L. It is that simple.

We have discussed the relative merits of tourism in Panama versus tourism anyplace else.

Now let us discuss the size and scope of the fraud question.

Let me put some other things on the table. The distinguished Senator was absolutely correct in talking about the 1,000 backlogged cases that are on the inactive file because the FBI does not have the resources to enforce them. The Senator from Illinois talked about 20,000 referrals that have come in—20,000 referrals that have come in related to financial institutions that the FBI cannot respond to.

Let me give you some other data. In October 1988, a report of the House Government Operations Committee found that insider misconduct caused or contributed to more than three-quarters of all thrift failures. That is, after extensive discussion the House Government Operations Committee found that fraud or misconduct caused or contributed to more than three-quarters of all thrift failures, three-quarters coming out of this. And yet we are not enforcing them. We are not going after them.

Last June the General Accounting Office issued a report that examined 26 thrift failures and compared them to a similar sample of 26 solvent S&L's. It is a classic control group situation, those that have failed and those that have not failed.

In doing that analysis, Mr. President, the General Accounting Office found that activities at each of the insolvent institutions appeared to be fraud and insider abuse. Investigations, or legal action, have been initiated against 25 of these 26 thrifts or against persons associated with them. It is rampant in the S&L's that failed, according to the General Accounting Office study—or 26 that failed and 26 that did not.

Most recently, Attorney General Thornburgh, whom we referred to and discussed earlier, spoke these words, Mr. President: An "epidemic of fraud" in the S&L industry. The Attorney General said there is an "epidemic of fraud" and said that at least 25 to 30 percent of thrift failures can be attributed to criminal activity by S&L officers.

So we have three independent measurements of the size and scope of the fraud, insider abuse problem; House Government Operations Committee, General Accounting Office, and the Attorney General, So what are we trying to do?

We are trying to do something about this. We are trying to increase the amount of money available to the FBI and to U.S. attorneys to do the job they have told us they would like to do and to give them the resources they have told us they need to do the job.

The problem is very severe, and it is documented everywhere. The American taxpayer knows that something is very much amiss out there. They are asking each one of us, as they should: Senator, what are you doing about this? And that question could at least give them one small answer, which is to say well, we increased the enforcement capabiality of the FBI, and the U.S. attorney. We increased it to the level that they requested. We gave them all the resources they said they needed to pursue these 1,000 inactive back cases, the 20,000 referrals, and the epidemic of fraud referred to by the Attorney General.

That is the issue in front of us, Mr. President. The issue in front of us is, do we want to enforce, do we want to pursue the fraud, do we want to pursue the embezzlement, do we want to pursue the insider trading as aggressively as the FBI and the U.S. attorneys tell us they need to do it or do we want to spend money on tourism in Panama? It is a very, very simple choice which we will have on a vote later this afternoon.

Thank you very much, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS Mr. President, we all can make the comparisons. Here we are comparing $30 million to promote Panamanian tourism versus $30 million to the savings and loan institutions. The truth, of course, is that this is a bill for Panama and Nicaragua. I would hope we could have stuck to just that purpose and not gotten into the gymnastics of all kinds of picayune offsets touching every program of the Federal Government.

But if the Senator wants to set off $30 million, then I want to set off the conscience of my colleagues with regard to the $33 billion fraud that is in this bill; not just a piddling $30 million for Panama, and not the fraud by S&L managers and operators, but the fraud by the U.S. Senate sitting right here now, where we have the spectacle under this particular dire emergency supplemental bill, Mr. President, section 320, putting off budget $33 billion for the S&L bailout. And he wants to grab the little fellow out there and the little savings and loan that got caught up by falling property values and so on. I want to catch the big Congress and Senators who are saying "Look, we believe in truth in budgeting, except as applies to ourselves, of course, when we finance the savings and loan bailout." We say "Do not Worry about it, do not provide for it, just put it off budget and get permission to do so by amending the Budget Act without any discussion."

I would say we have had a good dozen session perhaps of the Budget Committee this year. We have talked about the Moynihan initiative.

We have talked about the initiative of Senator SANFORD from North Carolina on how to get truth in budgeting. Various Members have said we ought to go to a 2-year budget process. Some have said let us amend the Budget Act to repeal Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. But at no time have we discussed or even raised the question of putting the S&L bailout off budget to the tune of $33 billion.

When we went into the Appropriations Committee in that meeting last Tuesday at 5 o'clock, we were all given the text of the bill for the first time. I went right to work because I knew I could be cross-examined on my section, and I wanted to make sure we had everything in there that we knew about and could justify. The staffs had been working these things up. And then we went down the different sections of the bill and reported it out.

But in the closing section, there was this monumental, $33 billion sleeper amending the Budget Act on a supplemental appropriation bill, all in violation of the rules of the Senate. I only found out about it the next day.

Mr. President, I have been working to ensure the integrity of Social Security, as have many other Senators, not just this year, but last year and previously thereto. Then, at the beginning of last year, the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] said let us put the Social Security funds out of the budget calculations and stop ransacking the Social Security trust fund.

I introduced a similar bill at the same time. After several weeks the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] joined with the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] and they wrote a "Dear Colleague" letter that we would spend only a portion of the surpluses to reduce the deficit, and over time phase the Social Security surpluses out of the budget calculation.

I resisted that and said, "Let us get it all off." And the exchange ensued over the next several months of 1989, where I finally got almost all of the Democrats on the Budget Committee as cosponsors on my bill, and then we began high-level meetings with the leadership. It certainly was not my intent to ever try to upstage our distinguished leader, on Social Security, Senator MOYNIHAN. He has been in the vanguard. He has done an outstanding job and served on the Greenspan Commission and continues to serve as chairman of that particular subcommittee in Finance.

I readily, in most instances, follow his leadership on this particular score. But there seemed to be some idea about whose bill they were going to put up. I made the suggestion that we have the leader lead us, Senator MITCHELL. And the fact of the matter is, Senator MITCHELL, with the Speaker on the House side in a joint appearance with Senator MOYNIHAN, myself and others, set forth an initiative, as a matter of principle and policy, to cease counting the Social Security surpluses in our budget estimates.

Well, I had been promised on my own bill—and we were all joining in behind that bill—that we would bring it up on the short-term debt limit. At that particular time, I could understand our leader, Senator MITCHELL's dilemma. If I insisted that we maintain that particular promise, then some other good work of the Senate had to go wanting.

I said, all right, I will give up on that, but let me, on the final debt limit extension, get my vote. So I was promised an up-or-down vote then, and the rest of that is history. I did not get it at that time. And we were in the wee hours of the morning around here, and in the final days and nights of the session, when both Senator HEINZ and myself, for example, were promised a vote on Social Security in the earliest part of the coming session.

Now we are practically into May and have not heard of it. We were told to wait until we get up to the budget procedures. I am beginning to, as the expression goes, "smell a rat." What you say in polite language is that a suspicion is created that what we are going to do is take the valid proposal by Senator MOYNIHAN, work him into the Finance Committee extensions and treatments, say we will bring it up on a tax bill, and what they really mean is reconciliation, and by the time the distinguished Senator, author of the Moynihan initiative, gets a chance to raise it in the Finance Committee, they are going to look at him and say you cannot make that motion unless it is revenue neutral. And he will be put to the task of finding some $36.5 billion in offsets.

In December of last year Senator MOYNIHAN said there was no need to increase Social Security taxes on middle-American working people. In January, I said I agree, I want to be a cosponsor, and the way I would offset the FICA tax cut is with a value-added tax. And I, on the very first day, submitted such a proposal.

I have, since that time, updated the proposal with an actual budget. I have written articles in the Washington Post and in other publications about my plan.

I do not think we ought to be amending the Budget Act in a supplemental. Of course, the rules of the Senate do not hold that we ought to be doing that either. You can appeal that ruling and get a supermajority of 60 Senators, and if a supermajority of 60 Senators thinks it is important enough to put the S&L bailout off budget, then I think a supermajority of the Senate will think it important enought to safeguard Social Security.

On February 20 we had a sense-of-the-Senate resolution by Senator SASSER, the chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator KENNEDY and others, to the effect that it was the will of the Senate that we use the peace dividend to get rid of the deficit, and they used the words, stop the thievery and embezzlement of Social Security funds.

So the other evening I said, look, I intend to propose an amendment to attach the Moynihan plan to the supplemental. I was ready at that time, but the ranking member of the Budget Committee, the Senator from New Mexico, could not be with us on Friday, so I yielded to the request to wait for his return.

When we brought this issue up in the Budget Committee, the attitude was "scat." Everybody evacuated. We waited an hour. The distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee was there with me. I appreciated that. He and I sat there almost an hour and no one showed up.

When I finally spoke and concluded my remarks, the staff called their Senators, the room filled, the quorum was present and everybody hollered "Vote, vote, vote, vote."

The reason given for not supporting it was because it would cause an increase in the deficit. Of course, when the Washington Post reported on it and said it had no effect at all, that was amusing to me. They never will accurately write what is going on in this country.

Let me tell you your choice on the deficit. You can choose to ransack the Social Security trust fund in order to reduce the budget deficit, in which case you simply deepen the deficit in the trust fund on a dollar-for-dollar basis. Or you can protect the integrity of the trust fund by opting for honest spending cuts and tax increases to reduce the deficit.

What we have been doing, unless and until we approve Senator MOYNIHAN's initiative, is embezzle those surplus Social Security moneys as fast as they come in and allocate them to our spending on any and all programs, while claiming that our spending deficit is lower. And we talk about a surplus in Social Security that, which is absolutely false. Nothing is left in the trust fund but these little slips of paper, IOU's going in the drawer, and with another 5 years of this conduct we will add over $500 billion to the trust fund deficit. And when they go to spend the trust fund money in the next century, they are going to have to raise taxes from somewhere in order to get the money, or they are going to have to eliminate 500 billion dollars worth of spending somewhere.

I can tell you here and now there is no money there. There is no "there" there. And people ought to understand and understand it clearly.

Moreover, you cannot any longer say in Washington "Read my lips. I am against new taxes." They are for new taxes, beginning here in January of this year, when the FICA payroll tax went up yet again.

Senator MOYNIHAN said, in December, "Let us roll back this increase in Social Security taxes." President Bush says, "No, let us go ahead with this increase and stop messing around with Social Security."

And the dummy press acted as though Senator MOYNIHAN were the one who was messing around. He was the one trying to stop the messing around. The messing around is being done by the President, by you, by me, and by all the rest of us in this Congress who have been spending the money of Social Security on any and all spending programs for the Government—foreign aid, welfare, FBI, EPA, you name it. That is where your surplus Social Security moneys are going.

So, it is a very interesting thing now. We have new taxes and have had hearings. Ever since they started falsifying the figures on Gramm-Rudman-Hollings these last 3 years, I have proposed value-added tax. I testified that it could apply to all consumption: The more you consume, the more tax you pay. The less you consume, the less tax you pay. And to take care of the lower-income groups, we would exempt food, housing, and health care.

They still want to claim it is regressive. You do not have to talk about a regressive tax or no tax. You are now talking about which is the more regressive of the two taxes, because you either are going to have an increase in payroll taxes on middle- and lower-income Americans—most regressive in my judgment—or a value-added tax on all consumption, not just the wage earners of America.

So, we are beginning to paint ourselves into a corner, a delightful corner. The gymnastics you see going on the floor of the Congress are designed to avert the train wreck, so that when the two trains meet, namely, the train of fiscal irresponsibility meets that other train of reality coming down the track, all we need do is toot at each other because the problem will have been solved.

We first start with the President who puts in the OMB plug of 58.9 billion bucks. That is low balling the deficit for next fiscal year and saying, really, all we need to do is raise $37 billion in order to meet the $64 billion Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target.

So he puts in that low-ball estimate, which is exactly the stunt we pulled last year. We left at Thanksgiving and said we met the $100 billion target and when we came back in January the deficit was already $158 billion.

So we start at the kickoff on the 10-yard line of the other side, on the problem itself. We low ball the estimate by $58.9 billion to make our job easier. Of course, we have been doing this for 10 years.

I do not have anything against those running for election this year. I will be running here in another 2 years. I know I will be labeled, "Here is the fellow who has been trying to tax us." I am going to say, "Here is the fellow who has been trying to pay the bills," so we quit raising the most discriminatory tax of all, namely, the interest cost on the national debt, jumping in increments of $30 billion. This year it is $27 billion. The total debt is already in excess of $3 trillion.

So you have a new $27 billion spending program that began on October 1 of this year. Everybody is against spending. But here we are going to spend $27 billion for nothing, just for the carrying charges.

Up in the Budget Committee we are trying to put a figure on all the various programs, Senator KENNEDY's health program, Senator DODD's child-care program, Vice President QUAYLE's go to Mars program, education, research, all the initiatives that everybody is running around the country saying they are all for, and if we had to do them all and start them this year, it would cost about 19 billion bucks.

Here we are going to spend $27 billion right this fiscal year for absolutely nothing.

Alternatively, if we can get rid of the deficit and debt and interest costs, we can allocate moneys for good programs. So I think we have to excise this fiscal cancer and not go along with another sham, with both sides trying to hide the problem and banboozle the public on a bipartisan basis. Bipartisanship on this score is what has gotten us in all this trouble in the first place.

We bipartisanly snooker the American public. We say as pollsters and politicians posterity can do nothing for us; we see no reason to do anything for posterity. Let us look at the next election and to heck with the next generation around here, put it in a supplemental; sneak it by; never discuss it; never have a hearing on it; just amend the Budget Act. We sneak by $33 billion for the S&L bailout, but raise heck about $30 million for tourism in Panama.

Of course, I have indicated to Senator MOYNIHAN that he should bring up his FICA tax rollback proposal. If he does not—and, of course, if the super majority feels that this is the time to amend the Budget Act—then I will. But I would certainly yield to the leadership by Senator MOYNIHAN on this score because I think he is being misled about waiting on the Finance Committee to consider it, waiting for a tax bill. It seems like the leadership on budget has said we cannot wait on the S&L bailout. We have to get going right now and amend that Budget Act right here in April of this year. If they want to sneak this in, then I think that we ought to sneak in something for the good of the American people and stop what has been characterized by the Senator from New York as the thievery in Social Security.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM). The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Bruce Moore of the Department of the Interior's departmental manager program be allowed the privileges of the floor as if he were a member of my staff during the consideration of my amendment to H.R. 4404, the supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal 1990.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1555

(Purpose: To forgive producers who have been adversely affected by a major disaster or emergency occurring in 1990 from repaying certain advance deficiency payments, with an offset)

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to laying aside the pending amendment for the purposes of considering the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota?

Without objection, the clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD], for himself and Mr. PRESSLER, proposes an amendment numbered 1555.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . (a) Section 14 of Public Law 101-220 (7 U.S.C. 1421 note) is amended by striking "refunded, such refund shall not be required to be made prior to July 31, 1990." and inserting "refunded—

"(1) the refund shall not be required to be made prior to July 31, 1990:

"(2) in the case of producers on a farm that is located in a county that is affected by a major disaster or emergency in 1990 declared by the President under the Disaster Relief Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5121 et seq.), the refund shall not be required, for that portion of the crop for which a disaster payment is made under section 201(a) of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988 or section 101(a) of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989; and

"(3) in the case of producers on a farm that is located in a county with respect to which the Governor of the affected State has a request pending for such a declaration, the refund shall not be required prior to the date the portion of the crop for which a disaster payment is made under section 201(a) of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988 or section 101(a) of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989.".

(b) None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by the Rural Development, Agriculture, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1990 (Public Law 101-161) shall be used to pay the salaries of officers and employees who carry out the export enhancement program established by section 1127 of the Food Security Act of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 1736v) to the extent that the aggregate amount of funds, and the value of commodities, used to carry out the program during fiscal year 1990 exceeds $522,000,000.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, this amendment is a simple one. It is simple, but it is critically important.

Mr. President, this amendment would forgive farmers who are plagued by continuing drought from making advance deficiency repayments on bushels that were lost due to the drought in 1988 or 1989. The cost of this amendment is $30.8 million. It is offset in the amendment itself by reducing the budget authority for the Export Enhancement Program by $44 million which will produce the $30.8 million of outlays to make this amendment budget neutral.

Mr. President, let me just take a moment to explain in layman's language what this is all about. Back in the droughts of 1988 and 1989 farmers received part of their deficiency payments in advance of planting. Deficiency payments are simply the difference between the target price for a commodity and the market price. In other words, if wheat has a target price of $4 and the market price is $2.50, a farmer receives, simply put, a deficiency payment of $1.50 bushel.

Advance deficiencies are made based on an estimate of what the relationship between the target price and the market price will be. The advance deficiency provides a 40-percent payment in advance of the anticipated deficiency payment. So, in our example, the farmer would receive 40 percent of $1.50 a bushel, or 60 cents.

In fact, Mr. President, that is what occurred back in 1988 and 1989. The problem was, after they had received that advance payment, the drought sharply reduced commodity supplies. As a result, the price rose in the marketplace and the deficiency payment was, thereby reduced. The farmer was then asked to pay back the deficiency payment that he had received, the advance deficiency, the 40 percent of the projected deficiency payment, because the price had gone up. In addition, the 1988 disaster legislation prohibited farmers from receiving a deficiency payment and a disaster payment on the same bushel.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, rising prices eliminated deficiency payments on the few bushels that he did produce. The Disaster Act of 1988 also eliminated deficiency payments on the bushels that he lost because of the drought. The result is that we are asking farmers to pay back deficiency payments because of a price increase and income they never received because those bushels were lost to the drought.

Mr. President, at the time of the 1988 bill, I said on the floor of the Senate, on July 28, 1988, at page 10204 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD: "Mr. President, one reason that I am offering this amendment"—the amendment I was referring to was a delay in the payback of the various deficiencies that we have been discussing—"is because of the uncertainty of the budget numbers. Very frankly, I want to be very direct about this. If we learn later on that there is more budget room than we were told of today, I will move next year to forgive the repayment of these advance deficiencies. We do not know that now. We do not know that there is room, if there are additional savings or not. But the best way we can preserve the flexibility and give farmers that added hope is to act now to defer the repayment until July 31 of next year. That makes this virtually a no-cost amendment unless we find there is additional budget room, at which time I will move as I say, to give farmers that additional assistance."

Mr. President, the record is clear. At the time of the 1988 drought, I came to my colleagues and I said we ought to forgive these advance deficiencies as part of the drought relief bill. The administration at that time said no, the savings are not going to be sufficient to pay for the drought relief package that we have. And so they said you cannot forgive the advance deficiencies now.

I said at that time, let us delay the repayment of advance deficiencies until we determine whether or not the administration is right on the budget issue. Let us find out if the savings are sufficient to add to this package.

Do you know what, Mr. President? We found that the savings were sufficient. The administration's calculations were wrong. In fact, the savings as a result of the drought in 1988 were $10 billion, the cost was $6.4 billion, so there were $3.6 billion of additional savings.

In 1989, I made the same argument. Once again we were told there were not sufficient savings to pay for forgiveness of advance deficiencies. We were told that the savings from the drought would be about $970 million. Instead, they turned out to be about $3 billion. The cost of the drought package was $1.2 billion. So we had additional savings of $1.8 billion.

Mr. President, the drought continues. I have provided for my colleagues a handout that shows the headlines across my State in recent days.

Following are a few of those headlines:

"Drought Looms for a Third Year"; "Dust Bowl Dry Festers on Prairie"; "Farmers Caught Between a Drought and a Dry Place, Look for Aid"; "'90 Drought: It's Official"; "Farmers Wonder Just When Drought Will End"; "Drought is Now a 'Natural Disaster'"; "North Dakota Mediator Says Farmers Need Good Crop to Stay Alive."

Mr. President, I will just read a couple of brief comments from these articles which have appeared in the press in my State over the last 7 or 8 days.

The first story is an article that appeared April 22. The headline is, "We're in Drought's Tightest Grip. Moisture Worse Than '88; Cattle Sold for Lack of Feed."

The story begins like this, Mr. President:

Like some Norse troll, the Midwestern drought that seized the Nation's agricultural midsection more than 2 years ago has gotten smaller, uglier, and meaner.

Two years ago, it covered nearly everything between the Rocky Mountains and the Appalachians with what was called—in the terms used by the National Weather Service—severe to extreme drought.

By now, the area of mid-America in severe to extreme drought has shrunk to cover not much more than North Dakota and northwest Minnesota. If it's any consolation, nearly everything west of the Rockies is still in severe to extreme drought.

Mr. President, the next story, entitled, "Dust Bowl Dry Festers on Prairie," begins this way:

North Dakota's thirsty topsoil may be moist enought to till, but farmers planting their spring crops could be risking a Dust Bowl reprise if rain doesn't come * * *

The quote from an agricultural expert. The State Game and Fish Commissioner says:

My understanding is when that moisture comes back, it's going to be 4 or 5 years before we're able to recover.

Agriculture's drought woes, well documented since the statewide dry spell began in 1988, haven't abated in the aftermath of what the National Weather Service called the driest North Dakota winter since statehood.

Let me repeat that, Mr. President: the driest winter in 100 years in my State.

Subsoil moisture levels are "very alarming," judged adequate in only 4 percent of the State by the latest State Agricultural Statistics Service report * * *

The next article I would refer my colleagues to says: "Drought is now a natural disaster." This article says:

The dry weather in North Dakota is so serious it's no longer considered a drought but instead a natural disaster, two State officials said Saturday.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have these articles printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, it is no longer a drought; it is a natural disaster. My State is at risk. My State is facing the most severe economic pressure in its 100-year history and we are here asking for assistance. We are here asking, not just for my State, but for any State that continues in extreme drought. The repayment forgiveness that we are asking for here today would only apply for those bushels that were lost in 1988 or 1989, never produced, never got the benefit of the higher prices.

And we are asking, Mr. President, that forgiveness occur only if the drought continues, only if we have a disaster declaration by the President of the United States. That is the only way anyone could be covered under this proposal.

Mr. President, we are asking that the cost of this be offset, fully and completely, so there is no addition to the deficit as a result of this measure. The amendment will reduce the cap on the Export Enhancement Program by $44 million to produce the $30.8 million of outlays CBO says is necessary to fund the program.

Mr. President, why take a nickel from the Export Enhancement Program? Well, Mr. President, I would be the last one to stand on this floor to ask for taking money from the Export Enhancement Program unless there was strong evidence that money was not needed in the Export Enhancement Program. It appears there are sufficient funds within the Export Enhancement Program to fund its expected activities, and at the same time have the resources necessary to provide the drought relief that we seek.

Mr. President, I would like the record to reflect that for fiscal year 1990, the Export Enhancement Program is authorized at $566 million. The Department of Agriculture informs me that $183 million of awards have been completed.

In addition, there are $210 million of outstanding initiatives that are obligated. In addition, there are $132 million of awards under consideration that might be obligated. That is a total of $525 million, probably much less, Mr. President. The Export Enhancement Program is authorized at $566 million. That is at least $41 million that is available. We need $44 million.

Remember, of the $525 million, $132 million is under consideration, has not been obligated, and there is a good chance that some of it will not be obligated. In fact, CBO scores the Export Enhancement Program at $500 million, even though they are authorized $566 million, because they anticipate only $500 million will be used. Therefore, there is room to take out the $44 million to fund the drought relief package I have outlined today.

Mr. President, one always hesitates to stand and ask for something from one's colleagues, but I am standing and asking today because my State and States that surround it, including Montana and Minnesota to the east, and South Dakota to the south, are in serious trouble. The farmers of our States are being asked to repay money by July 31 of this year, Mr. President, which they simply do not have. They do not have the money to pay back.

Mr. President, frankly this should have been included in the drought packages of 1988 and 1989. We were told then there was not sufficient savings to fund this part of the program. That turned out to be wrong. We have a chance to right that wrong today.

Mr. President, I ask very sincerely of my colleagues that they will consider this request and honor it. It is terribly important, not only to my State, but to any farmer who is caught in the grip of continuing drought.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

EXHIBIT 1

WE'RE IN DROUGHT'S TIGHTEST GRIP

(By Stephen J. Lee)

Like some Norse troll the Midwestern drought that seized the nation's agricultural midsection more than two years ago has gotten smaller, uglier and meaner.

Two years ago, it covered nearly everything between the Rocky Mountains and the Applachians with what was called—in the terms used by National Weather Service—severe to extreme drought.

By now, the area of mid-America in severe to extreme drought has shrunk to cover not much more than North Dakota and northwest Minnesota. If it's any consolation, nearly everything west of the Rockies is still in severe to extreme drought.

The big corn and soybean states—Iowa, Illinois, Indiana—and the Southern Plains winter wheat regions have gotten plenty of moisture in recent months.

But farmers in North Dakota and northwest Minnesota just getting out into the fields face even worse conditions than the nightmarish spring of 1988, to this point at least. Even if predicted rains fall this week, it will take a lot more moisture than that to break the drought.

Northwest North Dakota is about as dry as it's ever been at this time of year, and one of the driest areas of North Dakota is Divide County, tucked into the northwest corner against Montana and Canada.

Crosby, the Divide County seat, is nearly 11 inches behind in precipitation since Jan. 1, 1987, according to the NWS. That's equal to losing a full growing season of rain in Crosby, based on historical records. Moreover, 1 inch of that deficit has been earned since Jan. 1, as less than half the normal precipitation had fallen there by April 15.

It's measurably worse now than either of the previous two years' beginning of the crop year, said Keith Brown, Divide County extension agent.

"Right now, it's worse than it was last year," Brown said. "Last winter (1989) we had some snow, but we really never had any significant snow cover this winter."

The cumulative effect of more than two years of moisture deficits is building up, he said.

"We had some stored soil moisture going into 1988. There's virtually no subsoil moisture now," Brown said.

Many of the county's farmers fallow half their land each year to conserve moisture, and that has helped, Brown said. "I think we have enough for germination provided they don't overwork the soil."

Some cattle producers already have begun selling their cows rather than hope for pasture and hay crops to provide enough feed.

Farmers will put in their small grains crops of durum, barley and oats. But they will scrimp on buying and applying seed, fertilizer and herbicides. That will save expenses and besides, there's not much yield potential to spend money on when the water to grow the crop just isn't there, Brown said.

Weather experts contradict each other when they speculate when and if the drought pattern will break.

The drought started in some parts of Minnesota in October 1986 and has not abated, said Greg Spoden, climatologist with Minnesota's Department of Natural Resources. No one really knows if the pattern will continue, but one thing is clear. So far it has, Spoden said. It just means it will take more abnormal weather on the wet side to make it up. And the odds of having that kind of year get worse with each day of less-than-normal precipitation, he said.

The heavy snows and then rains over much of Minnesota and North Dakota in March were made to order, Spoden said. They were much needed and very effective. The top-soil still retains some of that moisture, although the hot, dry winds of last week evaporated a lot of it. But subsoil moisture levels remain way below normal.

Much of the soil in western North Dakota has less than 2 inches of stored water in the top three feet or so, and much of that is not available to many crops that can't root down deep enough to reach it, county agents said.

In the case of Crosby, for example, it will take more than twice normal rains from April 1 through July 31—the growing season for small grains—to make up the 11-inch deficit. In an average year, only about 8 inches of rain falls on Crosby during those four months.

Eight inches, crop experts say, is about the minimum amount of water needed to grow a minimum what crop, one that's barely worth harvesting.

DUST BOWL DRY FESTERS ON PRAIRIE—FARMERS CAUGHT BETWEEN A DROUGHT AND A DRY PLACE, LOOK FOR AID

(By Dale Wetzel)

North Dakota's thirsty-topsoil may be moist enough to till, but farmers planting their spring crops could be risking a Dust Bowl reprise if rain doesn't come, a farm spokesman said Monday.

The specter of thick clouds of blowing dirt, already a reality in some counties, is but one of a list of drought-related wounds continuing to fester, officials said at a drought planning session.

"I don't know what to do, and I'm speaking for many farmers," said Monty Burke, a McKenzie-area farmer who is president of the North Dakota Farm Bureau.

"If they don't put the crop in, they know that they're in trouble, and if we do put the crop in and it gets to blowing on us, we know we're trouble," he said.

So serious is the problem that Lloyd Jones, the state game and fish commissioner, says he now refers to North Dakota's plight as a natural disaster.

"It's gone beyond a drought. I don't think we're giving proper attention to the issue when we just refer to it as a drought," Jones said.

"My understanding is when that moisture comes back, it's going to be four or five years before we're able to recover."

Agriculture's drought woes, well documented since the statewide dry spell began in 1988, haven't abated in the aftermath of what the National Weather Service called the driest North Dakota winter since statehood.

Subsoil moisture levels are "very alarming," judged adequate in only 4 percent of the state by the latest state Agricultural Statistics Service report, said Agriculture Commissioner Sarah Vogel.

The state's rangeland isn't faring much better. Eight-one percent of it is considered to be in poor or very poor shape, Vogel said. Hay production has plummeted from 5.2 million tons in 1986 to 2.96 million tons on Dec. 1, 1989.

Gov. George Sinner already is considering whether to declare a statewide drought disaster, even though spring planting has just begun.

"It's a difficult question," Sinner said. "It is early in the planting season, and you don't want to cry wolf and have the rains come, and lose your credibility with the federal agencies."

Farmers' problems, while a key concern, are only the beginning:

Jones said 40 to 50 lakes are virtually certain to suffer fish kills unless the situation improves. He is particularly conerned about Devils Lake, where the fish could begin dying in large numbers in July.

North Dakota's wetlands have virtually dried up, rendering the state's waterfowl production almost non-existent, Jones said.

The state Water Commission is monitoring Cavalier, Fort Yates, Mohall, Parshall and Stanley for possible water problems, said Milton Lindvig, director of the commission's hydrology division.

Robert Allan, the state fire marshal, said he had reports of prairie fires in January, "which is almost unheard of in North Dakota."

Sinner said he would explore the possibility of assistance from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in hauling water and drilling wells for cattle ranchers, although an agency spokesman, Donald Reuter, said that route would be difficult.

Robert Christman, head of the North Dakota division of the U.S. Agricultural Conservation and Stabilization Service, said more liberal emergency feed provisions for cattlemen are in the offing. Regulations should be ready by mid-May, he said.

Sinner said he likely will extend a series of fire-prevention measures now required on public lands to private land as well. That would ban trash and brush burning during times when the danger is considered extreme.

Sinner said he also would look into whether farmers could receive federal farm program or crop insurance benefits without actually planting a crop, because tilling could prompt disastrous erosion.

"I'll have to get my thinking cap on in the next couple of days," Sinner said.

DROUGHT IS NOW "NATURAL DISASTER"

(By Rodd Aubrey)

BISMARCK.—The dry weather in North Dakota is so serious it's no longer considered a drought but instead a natural disaster, two state officials said Saturday.

Agriculture Commissioner Sarah Vogel and Game and Fish Commissioner Lloyd Jones said the drought is the worst of the century.

"This is a long-term situation, even more significant than even a drought," Jones said. "It's so abnormal."

Vogel said she's unsure how farmers will manage through such a tough year, despite disaster aid they're likely to get.

She said if rains fall every week this spring, there could be enough moisture for crops.

"However, if it were to skip a week or two and turn hot like it did last year, the crops would have nothing to draw on in the subsoil," she said. "That is the danger and that is what has me the most worried."

The two made their comments Saturday afternoon on the news show "Prairie Public Journal."

Larry Manthe, a forecaster at the National Weather Service, said scattered thundershowers are expected Sunday night, as well as Tuesday through Thursday. The storms could generate from a trace to up to an inch or more of precipitation, he said.

But the upcoming rains won't end the drought.

"It takes a long time to break a drought," Manthe said. "Just a few days of thundershowers won't break it."

Last week, Gov. George Sinner declared a statewide fire emergency because of the dry conditions. Under the plan, people can't burn outdoor fires or travel off main roads when the weather service declares the fire danger very high or extreme.

The same day Sinner made his announcement, a grass fire burned 640 acres of land along the Missouri River south of Bismarck. Other smaller fires were reported across the state as well.

Jones said that even if the state begins getting normal levels of moisture, it will take a long time to recuperate. Lake Sakakawea's levels are so low, for example, that it may take five years of regular rainfall before it's back to normal.

Jones also predicted more animals would die because of the drought.

The drought was one of the reasons 1,000 geese died near the Tewaukon National Wildlife Refuge earlier this month, he said. As water levels drop, the quality of what's left dimishes.

In addition, more animals are gathering to the few spots where water is available, spreading diseasees quickly, he said.

Wind erosion also dwindles the amount of vegetation for animals to eat, he said.

Vogel said wind erosion is three times as bad this year as it was last.

FARMERS WONDER JUST WHEN DROUGHT WILL END

WING.—Sanford Williams usually sees snowdrifts in his fields all winter. But this year he saw powdery clumps of dirt, the legacy of a drought that refuses to lossen its grip on his North Dakota farm.

He got 10 inches of snow and a half inch of rain earlier this month but the moisture was far from enough.

"We're still terribly, terribly dry," Williams said late last week. "When the snow melted there wasn't any runoff. It went right into the soil. We need very, very substantial amounts of moisture to do us any good at all."

Jerry Murrey, 52, who farms about 10 miles west of Williams, worries that the water tables beneath farms and rural towns will drop, drying up their wells. Murrey, who's been farming all his life, never has seen such dry conditions.

"You pray that it's going to end," he said.

Williams, 37, said his wheat crop last year averaged 19 bushels an acre compared to an average of 40. The previous year, he got only about 3 bushels an acre, and his barley and oats crops were total failures.

Last year brought rains and relief to many states. Farmers planted more crops and the drought faded from the headlines. But it persisted in North Dakota.

January and February were warm and dry with temperatures reaching into the 40s. Fargo reported the warmest January on record.

Most of western North Dakota has less than 4 inches of moisture in the soil—not nearly enough to nourish William's grain, which needs nearly twice that amount.

Even in the fertile Red River Valley farmers have been praying for rain. A foot of snow in Fargo two weeks ago brought smiles to their faces.

North Dakota farmers normally produce about 16,000 pounds of potatoes per acre, but last year's crop averaged only 11,000 pounds per acre.

The valley potato crop was so small last year that most growers don't even have enough potatoes to meet their contracts with processors, said Lloyd Schmidt, executive director of the Red River Valley Potato Growers Association.

American Crystal Sugar Co., in Moorhead, Minn., saw its production plummet from a record 6.4 million tons in 1987 to 4.9 million tons in 1988. The company's growers harvested 5.5 million tons last year but the sugar content was depleted by the drought.

John Enz, the state's climatologist, said warm weather prior to the last week's snowfall thawed the frozen soil, allowing it to absorb much of the snowmelt.

"We couldn't have asked for a better scenario," Enz said. But he added that it's much too early to declare the drought over.

"Now we've picked up enough moisture that perhaps the top 18 to 24 inches of soil will be wet," he said. "We have enough water to grow the crops into June, but then we'll need rain."

Last Week's snow brought .63 of an inch of precipitation to Williams' 2,200-acre farm, but he figures he'll need up to 8 inches before planting time.

Williams, the father of three young boys, acknowledges that much rain is unlikely, but he remains hopeful. The alternative is to leave cropland unplanted to conserve moisture.

Federal disaster aid has kept him and other North Dakota farmers afloat. The state got more than $400 million in assistance for 1988 crops and about $95 million last year.

"You've got money available, but you're going backward on your equity," Williams said. "We're also putting off much needed capital purchases such as new farm equipment."

Hay for cattle also has been scarce, forcing Williams to sell off part of his herd. He faces the prospect of selling more cattle this year if the rains don't come.

"If we lose our cattle," he said, "then we've lost our livelihood out here."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, let me say that the distinguished Senator from North Dakota has been very resourceful and very aggressive in his effort to obtain the largest amount of disaster assistance possible from the Federal Government for the farmers and ranchers and others who are entitled to benefits in the State of North Dakota.

He is a member of the Agriculture Committee, which has jurisdiction over the farm programs and legislation that defines eligibility for benefits such as deficiency payments, and other farm program benefits. It is a pleasure for me, as a member of that committee also, to work with him on those programs.

We are right now, as a matter of fact, writing a 1990 farm bill that will set out the legal authority for the Department of Agriculture to make program payments to farmers who participated in and who are eligible to participate in those programs.

We also worked together to write the Disaster Assistance Act, which was referred to in the argument in support of this amendment.

It was at that time that the Committee on Agriculture had an opportunity to try to devise some additional eligibility for those farmers who had suffered serious damage as a result of disasters—drought, floods, and disasters that occurred in the agriculture sector 2 years ago. We all remember the devastation caused throughout the country by those adverse weather conditions and the problems we had in the food chain, with price fluctuations that were caused at that time.

One of the ways that we approached the problem that year with the administration in order to gain support for the bill was to use the money that would have otherwise been spent by the Department to make program payments to compensate disaster victims.

The way we went about that was, as the Senator mentioned, to use the funds that would be saved in the deficiency payments to make disaster payments to those who were drought victims or flood victims, because throughout agriculture, the prices increased unexpectedly because of the reduced supply of crops in many commodity areas.

While the Department may have projected at the beginning of the 1988 crop year that farmers would be entitled to deficiency payments, by looking ahead at the crop prices that were anticipated, knowing what the target prices were they could anticipate that at the end of the planting season when farmers were marketing their crops that there would be deficiencies owed by the Secretary of Agriculture under these programs to individual farmers. Because of pressures brought by the Agriculture Committee members—the Senator from North Dakota one of them, and with many of the rest of us joining in this chorus suggested that advance deficiencies be made to farmers. Also for budget reasons, the Agriculture Committee members, were trying to use that as a way to get around, in effect, the requirements of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act and avoid sequester. These little tricks are sometimes used to satisfy the requirements that we here in the Congress impose upon the programs and the way they are administered.

The point is that if you were a disaster victim in 1988 and did not produce a crop, you could not sell your crop at market, therefore, you did not earn anything from the increased prices. You did not have anything to sell or you had so much less than you would have had because your crop was devastated by bad weather.

Then, as we were writing the farm bill, the question came up, do you get to keep your deficiency payment even though you did not produce anything and could not sell it and did not incur a deficiency, or do you get a disaster benefit? The decision was made that, across the board, we would have this rule written into the law: You either received your deficiency payment or a disaster benefit; you were not entitled to both as a matter of law.

That is the problem which is identified in this amendment. Some farmers, of course, when they received the deficiency payment, used it, spent it, paid off an old debt, whatever you do with money that you get under a Government agriculture program. However, when, you found you would get more from the Government from disaster benefits, you wanted to qualify for disaster benefits.

The eloquent arguments were made at the time, let us postpone the repayment of the deficiency payment because a lot of farmers just simply do not have the money to repay the advanced deficiency payment; it has already been spent. A grace period was permitted by the Congress, which postponed the requirement to make the advanced deficiency repayment if you elected to receive a disaster payment.

We are confronted with a situation of what to do about that now. The deficiency repayments have been deferred again. We are in 1990, and we are at a point where it is time to pay them back. A lot of farmers have paid them back; in fact, most have done so. I suggest to the Senate, that the question is, Do we make an exception for those identified in this amendment? There are a lot of exceptions that probably could be justified on the basis of need, and there is no doubt, when there is a disaster, the victims are never fully compensated, no matter how generous the disaster assistance program. I wish that when Hurricane Camille hit the gulf coast of Mississippi, there had been enough money in the Federal budget to fully compensate every Mississippi disaster victim that year. There was widespread and deep devastation throughout the State of Mississippi and other States. Other Senators can remember disasters of similar proportions that have hit their States. The Senator from South Carolina today talked about the devastation and the problems and the recover from Hurricane Hugo. We can remember Hurricane David. I have just returned from Ocean Springs, MS, where they are still suffering the effects of Hurricane Helena that came through that small town.

We continue to wrestle with the problem: How do we deal fairly with the citizens of our Nation when they are beset with a natural disaster, whether we are talking about a drought, a tornado that rips through a town in Kansas, a hurricane that devastates the gulf coast, or floods in West Virginia. We have seen a lot of varied disasters, and we continue to deal with them.

One of the first bills that I recall the Senate passing when I came to the Senate was a disaster relief act that was designed to have a standard for relief that would be made available to disaster victims. It bypassed the temptation for the Congress to enact ad hoc disaster assistance bills each time there was a disaster. The notion was that Senators and Congressmen from the affected States would come to the Congress and urge special legislation whenever a disaster would strike.

That was the pattern. That is what happened in Camille; it happened in Hurricane David. As a matter of fact, I think that was the one that sort of ended it all, because the Congress got carried away to the extent it was making loans and then forgiving the loans. The disaster assistance was so generous in some respects that the Members realized they could not continue to afford that kind of disaster assistance benefit program on an ad hoc basis. We needed a standard for disasters—the SBA loan program, emergency food stamps, unemployment insurance benefits, Farmers Home Administration loans at low-interest rates for certain kinds of needs that agriculture producers would have. Many different kinds of benefits are now part of a package that is administered by the Federal Emergency Management Agency. That agency, of course, coordinates the benefits, and every time there is a disaster, they come in and take a look. Governors certify which areas are the hardest hit, and qualify for benefits. We make direct payments of loans, of grants to local governments for bridge repairs, road repairs and so forth. That is a wide range of entitlements under those programs that were enacted.

For example, we do not have such a special disaster benefit package in place. There is a federally subsidized crop insurance program for those who want to take advantage of Government assistance. There are, as I pointed out, Farmers Home Administration loans and other benefits under the regular disaster assistance statute.

But, what this request of the Senate is today is to make an exception to the exception. We would like very much to do that. But why not make a similar exception for the people of Ocean Springs, MS, who suffered disaster consequences? They have not been reimbursed in any special way.

What we are being asked to do now is to anticipate the probabilities that some farmers in the States of North Dakota and maybe others are going to have problems this year because of the continuing drought—in fact, the effect that they will have on this year's crop and in consideration of that continuing need to forgive a repayment requirement from a 1988 disaster.

I am simply trying to explain to the Senate what is at issue here; not whether there is a need, not whether it would be a very generous thing and sensitive thing for the Congress to do to yield to the request of the Senator from North Dakota, but trying to put in perspective what is being asked.

Every effort was made in the writing of the Disaster Act of 1988 to be fair to every disaster victim, and to use the funds that were available to the committee at the time in as sensitive and fair a way as possible to fully compensate victims of weather disaster that year.

Not everybody was happy. There are farmers in my State who feel that they should have gotten more out of that program. There were cutoffs of eligibility. A certain level of disaster loss would have had to occur in each county to be certified as eligible for certain disaster benefits under that act. That is an arbitrary percentage. We even wrote in there that you needed to administer this disaster program on a case-by-case basis. And in spite of these arbitrary cut offers of eligibility every effort would be made to ensure that the maximum benefits could be available to each producer.

In writing the bill we said to the Secretary of Agriculture that these eligibility guidelines and rules, in spite of that being sensitive we authorized him to make some exceptions in trying to achieve fairness. But you reach a point where you would be unfair to the other victims if you made such an exception as that being requested by the Senator in this amendment. Other victims of that disaster, other victims of future disasters, may see an opportunity to come in and get a little bit more, if your Senator is willing, and just keep asking for deferment of repayments. You may reach a point where the Congress gives in and says, oh, OK, that was good enough for some farmers but not for all.

Mr. President, there is a point at which we have to look at the amendment in a critically analytical way and make a decision as to whether or not it should be included in this supplemental bill.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. COCHRAN. I am happy to yield on that.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator acknowledge that the only way anyone gets the benefit of what I am proposing here today is if you suffer a third disaster? In other words, the Senator makes the point that it is somehow unfair to others who also suffered in the 1988 disaster who are not victims of the continuing disaster. Would the Senator acknowledge that the only way you benefit from what I am proposing here today is to suffer a third year of drought disaster?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I acknowledge that is the argument of the Senator. I am suggesting that is an argument only, that he is arguing in behalf of a benefit that was made available under the 1988 Disaster Act.

If the argument is being advanced that this is for the crop-year's disaster that has not yet been planted, harvested, sold and for which a deficiency payment or a disaster benefit has not yet been established, then this amendment is certainly not an emergency amendment, not a dire emergency supplemental matter and should not be on this bill.

I think we hear the point loud and clear. We are talking about a benefit that the Senator is claiming is now earned because of a continuing drought in a certain part of this country. That is 1990, the 1990 crop-year. The Senator is asking to be relieved of an obligation to repay a 1988 deficiency payment.

If there is a disaster for which the Congress responds this year with a special disaster assistance package, it should include all of those who are involved in the drought or who are suffering from adverse weather conditions. We should look at the entire agriculture sector to determine whether or not there should be special disaster relief legislation this year.

To come into the Senate when we are considering a supplemental appropriations bill and to add a section to make this narrow eligibility available for some farmers, in this Senator's judgment, is an appropriate way to legislate that entitlement.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will have a few more points to make and I will make them. The Senator can continue to argue them in behalf of his amendment. If I have said anything in these few statements the Senator would like to question, I would be happy to yield.

Mr. CONRAD. The Senator would to this extent. What we are seeking to do here today is to address the dire emergency—the Senator questions whether it is a dire emergency. I say to my good friend that we face the payback on July 31. This is probably the last legislative vehicle that we can use to address that.

I say to my friend, once again, that you only get help if you, in fact, have the third year of disaster. It takes a Presidential declaration.

I might add to my friend the letter that came from USDA responded to an earlier version of the amendment that says it works if a government has an application; that only suspends the decision until the President makes a determination. So only if you are faced with a disaster, Presidentially declared, do you get any help under this provision, and the reason——

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I reclaim my time and I will be glad to continue to debate the amendment. But I have the floor now. I think I will continue my argument, and when I have completed my argument, the Senator can, of course, reclaim the floor and talk as long as he likes.

Mr. President, the amendment also suggests that to get the funds to make these payments to those who would be entitled under this amendment, we should divert funds otherwise available for the administration of the export enhancement program.

The Senator, I think, mentioned $44 million of budget authority that is available for the export enhancement program to fund this special disaster assistance program that is estimated to cost about $30 million between now and the end of this fiscal year.

I hope Senators will notice what that could do to our efforts to protect agricultural markets from unfair competition in the international marketplace. The export enhancement program is one of those programs that has been very successful in offsetting unfair practices such as, the erecting of barriers to trade by competitors, the use of subsidies in international agriculture trade by the European Community and others, which deprive our farmers and our exporters of the opportunity to compete in many markets around the world. That is what the export enhancement program is designed to do, and it has been very effective in achieving that result.

This year we are estimating that agriculture trade is going to bring into the United States over $40 billion. This is a very valuable contribution in the effort to reduce our trade deficit, to maintain our healthy economy, and to keep ourselves moving in the right direction as we try to manage the future of our economy.

I want to suggest that this could have a very serious effect on our continuing ability to maintain the openness of these markets for agriculture producers and exporters. It is not at all certain that this is a fair trade in terms of offsets of one program for benefits to a selected group of producers.

Let me also just raise one question, since I know the Senator from North Dakota is going to respond further to some of the remarks that I have made. In looking at his amendment, there is a question as to whether or not by legislation a special category of beneficiary is created. It has to do with not just being in an area declared to have been affected by a major disaster or emergency by the President, but there is a provision reciting eligibility "in the case of producers on a farm that is located in a country with respect to which the Governor of the affected State has a request pending for such a declaration."

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Let me complete my remarks, and I will let the Senator talk as long as he wants without interruption. I will be happy to yield when I have completed my question. I am raising a question, and I will yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. CONRAD. I want to inform the Senator that the amendment has been changed to address that concern.

Mr. COCHRAN. Could the Senator send me a copy of the amendment so I will know what is in it?

Mr. CONRAD. If the Senator would like, I will read the language that has been changed to address the concern.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will sit down and let the Senator talk, but I do raise the question about the definition of eligibility in the amendment. The amendment that I was handed by our subcommittee staff and this provision in it, which suggested to me that a special category of beneficiary was being identified in this language which, in my judgment, amounts to legislating a new category of eligibility, which the Agriculture Committee has not passed on. We have not had any meetings to discuss this, and if that is not the effort being made by the Senator, I am sure he will point that out.

I suggest to the Senate that this is a very special suggestion being made by the Senator. I think we should be as generous and sensitive to the problems that he has in his State with his agriculture producers. We want to do that in every State, though, and I want to be sure that the Senate fully understands what we are being asked to do.

Mr. CONRAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi raises a point that deserves a response. We have attempted to respond by altering the amendment in a way that addresses the concern that he raised.

I just read from the amendment itself:

In the case of producers on a farm that is located in a county with respect to which the Governor of the affected State has a request pending for such a declaration, the refund shall not be required prior to the date the President makes a decision on the request, for that portion of the crop for which a disaster payment is made under section 201.

In other words, Mr. President, the Governor's request would only provide protection until the President decides. I hope that addresses the concern of the Senator from Mississippi.

The Senator also makes the point about the importance of the export enhancement program. No one could agree more. But I point out that last year we had $770 million budgeted and only used $388 million. That is less than half. This year, as I have outlined, there is $525 million that might be used in an authorization of $566 million, so there is $41 million available at least. We are using $44 million in this amendment.

The other point I want to make is that the Department has sent a letter to Senator LUGAR, which may have been distributed to our Senate colleagues, that again addresses a previous version of the amendment. We took note of concerns that were raised by Senators like the good Senator from Mississippi, in order to address legitimate issues that were raised. The letter from the Department indicates that this amendment applies to both lost and produced bushels. It does not. It applies only to lost bushels, crops that were never produced and never got the advantage of the increase in price because they were never produced.

No. 2, I want to make the point to my colleagues that we have altered the part of the amendment that deals with the question of a Governor's declaration of natural disaster. We have eliminated that problem by indicating that the Governor's declaration of disaster and application for a Presidential declaration would only delay repayment until the President has decided the matter. Until the President has acted on the matter, that is the fair way to provide relief. If the President makes a disaster declaration, the amendment provides for the forgiveness of the advanced deficiencies at that point. The administration said there was not going to be sufficient savings from farm programs in 1988 and 1989 to forgive deficiencies. That is the reason we worked to obtain a deferral on the payback. That is the reason we deferred repayment in 1989, to find out if there were sufficient savings or not. In both cases the administration was wrong. There were sufficient savings, more than sufficient savings to provide the additional relief.

So now we are not asking to go back and forgive it for 1988 and 1989 for everybody. We are asking that we address those that have continuing drought this year, a third disaster, a Presidentially declared disaster. It does not seem unreasonable; it does not seem unfair. When California had an earthquake, we responded; when South Carolina had a hurricane, we responded; when much of the Nation had a drought in 1988 and 1989, we responded. Mr. President, my State is faced with drought again. It is not a question of maybe or what the future will hold.

We face a drought now, the driest winter in 100 years, Mr. President, the driest winter in 100 years, and we need help. I do not like standing and asking for help from my colleagues, but I am compelled to do so by the circumstances.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I rise in support of an amendment offered by my colleague, Senator KENT CONRAD of North Dakota. The amendment that Senator CONRAD has crafted is a fair one. It would forgive the advance deficiency payments that producers received on production that was subsequently lost.

Mr. President, no one knows better than I the effects the ongoing drought has had in the Northern Great Plains of this Nation. Montana has been as parched as any of its neighbors. Even as spring brings renewed optimism to the farms and ranches of the Northern Plains, the specter of drought looms on the horizon. There are areas of my State where drought has become an ongoing tragedy.

The amendment offered here would serve to return some equity to an injustice that has been compounded by the drought and the bureaucracy. Producers who signed up for the program received their advance deficiency payments on crops not yet harvested, suffered through a terrible drought that prevented them from harvesting a crop, have now found themselves being asked to repay the advance deficiency payments.

Mr. President, these people have no funds to repay the deficiency payment. The crop that they counted on harvesting and selling to repay the Government payment never came up. They never made a dime on the production that this amendment covers. Money that was spent on seed and feed and other operating expenses was a sunk cost for which there was no return. There simply can't be a repayment.

Mr. President, this is not Government money that is making anyone a fat cat. This is Government money that serves as a needed safety net for our family farms across this country. Let us make it a safety net that works.

I yield the floor.

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I must oppose this amendment, as does the administration. I do so for several reasons.

First, there is the question of cost. The sponsors of the amendment list its cost at $30.8 million. I wonder how many of my colleagues realize that this budget score is derived from a February 1989 baseline—that is, from projections of crop and weather conditions that are well over a year old?

Now, since the issue at hand deals with fiscal 1990 expenditures, the February 1989 baseline is the right one to use, officially speaking. Let us be fully aware, however, that CBO did not expect many disaster declarations in Northern Plains States in 1990. How could they? How could they have forecast 1990 weather a year ahead of time? That is why this amendment costs only $30.8 million.

USDA, however, has estimated the amendment's cost on a current-conditions basis. The Department believes that costs would run between $125 and $200 million. CBO concurs with at least the lower end of this estimate, depending on exactly which overpayments are affected by the amendment, a subject also in dispute.

My second difficulty with this amendment is that these overpayments have been delayed three times already. First, they were delayed until July 31, 1989. Then they were delayed until December 31, 1989. Finally, on the last night of last fall's Congressional session, they were delayed until July 31, 1990.

I know that some farmers are suffering and would prefer not to pay back the money they owe. But we have, in effect, made them an interest-free loan of this money for over 2 years, since they first received the advance payments in the spring of 1988.

Throughout our discussions of the two disaster assistance acts passed in 1988 and 1989, we consistently spoke of delay, not forgiveness, in unearned advance deficiency payments. We also established the principle that farmers would not receive both deficiency payments and disaster payments as to the same bushel's worth of production.

By forgiving these debts now, however, we will violate both these principles. The payments were to be delayed, not forgiven; now forgiveness is the order of the day. And since farmers received disaster payments for bushels they failed to produce, they were not to be entitled to a deficiency payment on that bushel as well; but now, under this amendment, they are so entitled.

My third objection to the amendment is that it does not require farmers to demonstrate a 1990 crop loss in order to qualify for forgiveness. Instead, all farmers in a county declared a disaster are eligible for forgiveness, whether or not they themselves suffered a loss. Anyone who has farmed knows that one side of a county can be devastated while the opposite end of the county produces good yields. Why is there no needs test in this amendment?

Fourth, I believe this amendment calls into question the whole system of advance deficiency payments. We make these advances at planting time, and they help farmers' cash flow. They have been a useful farm policy tool. But we make them to farmers on the clear understanding that if final payments should be much less than expected, any unearned portion of the advance will be refunded.

If we now set the precedent that advance payments will be forgiven if the political pressure is great enough, I know one Senator who will look very closely at whether the 1990 farm bill should allow advance payments to the same degree as in the past. And to the extent that the Secretary has any discretion whether to offer advance deficiency payments, I suspect that discretion will be very sparingly used.

Barley producers have raised what may be legitimate questions about the calculation of their deficiency payment. It appears to me that USDA has done nothing inconsistent with the 1985 Food Security Act, but there is a plausible case to be made that in the new farm bill, which the Agriculture Committee is working on now, we should either include malting barley prices in setting the barley target price, or, more likely, simply allow producers of malting barley to operate outside the farm program.

Such considerations, however, have nothing to do with past deficiency payment calculations. Farmers knew the rules of the farm program when they signed up, and they made their decisions accordingly. I see no reason to change the rules retroactively.

On November 21, 1989, the Senator from North Dakota and I entered into a colloquy on the Senate floor on these issues. During the course of an amendment which the Senator then offered, I pointed out some concerns I had with further delay in advance deficiency payment refunds. The Senator said, and I quote, "With respect to the deferral of payments authorized by this amendment, I will not seek further delay in repayment except in extraordinary circumstances. Specifically, I will not seek such a delay except for producers suffering crop losses of 35 percent or more in the 1990 crop year."

Now, the Senator's statements at that time referred to further delays in repayment, not outright forgiveness. However, in his statement upon introduction of his amendment, the Senator stated, and I quote again, "Barley producers are not asking that advance deficiency payments on their short crop be forgiven, only that repayment be delayed until July 31, 1990."

As I have previously said, the amendment before the Senate today would not require producers to suffer a crop loss of 35 percent or more before qualifying for forgiveness. Instead, the test would be whether the producer happened to reside in a county for which a disaster declaration has been made or requested.

The real question in my mind, though, is not whether today's amendment is consistent with the understanding we had last fall. Whether it is or not, I still regard it as a bad precedent, for the reasons I have stated. We have passed two very generous disaster bills in a row, and the 1989 bill has so far overrun its budget by $500 million. The time has come for a more rational and restrained approach to these problems, and we can begin by rejecting this amendment.●

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the amendment to the emergency supplemental which was proposed by the Senator from North Dakota recognizes the continuing effects of the drought that has plagued parts of this country since 1988. I recognize the disastrous consequences this drought has dealt to farmers' incomes in these areas, and in no way discount what the rural communities have endured.

My home State of Kansas suffered, too, from the drought years of 1988 and 1989. Kansas wheat farmers felt the blow as their 1989 winter wheat harvest fell by 152 million bushels from 1987 levels. That is a 42-percent decline in production. I introduced legislation last year to provide disaster assistance for those farmers and for all producers of this country who were adversely affected by the drought. Certain Senators held up the passage of that important relief package until they knew if a disaster was going to occur in their State.

The 1988 Disaster Assistance Act foresaw the need for repayment, but in recognizing the depleted cash-flow of producers delayed them until July 31, 1989. Since then, Congress has further delayed the repayment on several occasions. Today, some advance payments have been repaid, while others are due on July 31, 1990.

The Senator from North Dakota has proposed an amendment which targets a specific geographical location which continues to experience continued drought. The amendment does not recognize the fact that some advance payments have already been repaid. Nor does the amendment reflect a fundamental principle of the 1988 and 1989 Disaster Acts: that farmers were not to receive both a disaster payment and a deficiency payment on the same bushel's worth of production.

A very important issue which this amendment ignores is equity. Farmers would not benefit from the amendment unless they lived in a county declared a disaster area for 1990. In such counties, farmers would not have to prove an individual 1990 crop loss. Therefore, some farmers who had a 1988 disaster would not be eligible for forgiveness, whereas some farmers who did not have a 1988 disaster would be eligible. Also, what about those producers who complied with the law and have repaid their advance payments? Are we to reissue those payments? This amendment sets the stage for a nightmare of paperwork and outcry from producers who have already recognized the intent of the law.

In order to offset the cost of this amendment, the Senator from North Dakota has proposed to cut the Export Enhancement Program [EEP] and redirect those funds. This would undercut one of the most successful trade packages in the 1985 farm bill. EEP has been a major workhorse in combating foreign trade barriers and keeping foreign markets open for our agricultural commodities. USDA believes that this proposed cut in EEP to pay for deficiency payment forgiveness might seriously endanger export sales under EEP, since the program was cut to $566 million in last year's budget reconciliation bill.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOSTAGE RELEASE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I indicate my thanks to all those who have been involved in the release of yet another hostage that has just been announced, Frank Herbert Reed, and say thank you for all of us and for all Americans and, more particularly, for members of Mr. Reed's 91-year-old mother and his family.

Again, it could be an indication of improving relations with some of the countries who are holding the hostages, whether it be Iran, groups controlled by Iran, or hostages being held in Lebanon.

I particularly thank President Asad and those Syrian officials who have been cooperative and helpful in hostage release of Mr. Polhill and now the release of Mr. Reed.

In my view, the leaders of those countries should understand that we are grateful and that we do consider this to be a humanitarian thing to do. But we will not be satisfied until all American hostages and all other hostages are released. We are opposed to terrorism in any form and will not condone terrorism in any form.

I do know that some of the leaders in that part of the world are frustrated sometimes by what we do in the Congress and by the resolutions we pass that are quite sensitive in that part of the world. I hope that we do not pass any resolutions here in the next few days. Let us give everything a chance to work. The bottom line is let us do all we can to free all the hostages, including, of course, the Americans.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I announce that I am prepared to go forward with the amendment that is listed in the series of amendments to be debated this afternoon with the rollcall stacked, I think, at 7 o'clock this evening. This is an amendment by this Senator in his capacity as chairman of the Subcommittee on Readiness, Sustainability and Support of the Armed Services Committee which has, as my colleagues know, jurisdiction of military construction in this country and all over the world.

The amendment is cosponsored by Senator SAM NUNN, the chairman of the committee, and I would simply not want to proceed further without my distinguished colleagues, the senior and junior Senators from Idaho, being here because it affects their State and one of their constituents.

But I am here to put them on notice that I am here prepared to go ahead. We are the next amendment in line and we are on the Dixon-Nunn amendment.

While I am waiting, I might take this opportunity, Mr. President, to clarify my position well in advance, particularly because I see my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, on the floor. I want to make it clear in the fullest sense that I do this in my capacity as a Senator and in my capacity as the chairman of the jurisdictional subcommittee.

I hope everybody understands I have absolutely no quarrel with my warm friends who represent the State involved, who are doing their work as they see it for their constituents. This is not my idea in the first instance. May I make that clear, Mr. President, that I am acting in my capacity as a Senator and in my capacity as a Senator who has the responsibility of chairing a major subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee that has about a third or better of the military budget, a good deal of which is military construction.

The matter involved here is one in which the Air Force takes strong exception to what occurred when the supplemental was marked up in committee. They have come to me. I think discussions have taken place between the Senators who represent the State involved and the Air Force as recently as this morning. I had said from the beginning I would not go forward unless the Air Force wanted me to. I am informed they still want me to.

I do hope that everybody understands here that I am an instrument of my own committee, the subcommittee I chair, and the Senate. I do not pass in any way personally upon any of this nor do I have a personal quarrel with anybody here. I am doing my job as a Senator, and I sure hope, as this thing unfolds, nobody thinks otherwise, because sometimes some of these things are not as much fun as other things around here.

Having said that, I see that my colleague is here, and if he is ready, I am ready.

Mr. President, if I may make inquiry of the Chair. I do see my colleague, the senior Senator from Idaho, here. My understanding is that there is a 2-hour time limit, evenly divided; is that correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are no formal time limitations on amendments.

Mr. DIXON. I thank the Chair. The chances are it will take a good deal less time without a time limit to do this.

AMENDMENT NO. 1549

Mr. DIXON. At this time I believe the desk has my amendment. Perhaps that is the best way to start. I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is needed to seek to set aside the pending Conrad amendment.

Mr. DIXON. I ask that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], for himself and Mr. NUNN, proposes an amendment numbered 1549.

At the appropriate point in the bill, insert the following:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the language in this Act restricting obligation or expenditure of funds appropriate in fiscal year 1990 for Air Force Operation and Maintenance pending settlement of the dispute regarding Contract Numbered F29650-82-C-0201 is hereby nullified."

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I thank the clerk.

Mr. President, the reason we have this language in here nullifying a provision of this supplemental appropriation bill is that the committee amendment containing this feature of the supplemental has been adopted and this provision is part of the bill.

This supplemental appropriation, like all supplementals, has as great deal in it. I do not know how many Senators have gone to the trouble of looking at the list, but there is a long list in this supplemental. It is not just, as we know, Panama and Nicaragua; it is a whole lot of other things.

One of the provisions in this bill, Mr. President, is a provision which fences some money. It precludes the Air Force from expending $29 million in the O&M account, the operations and maintenance account, until not less than $7 million is paid to Shipco General, Inc., a construction company in Idaho, to settle a claim.

In other words, the Air Force is now being in a position of not being able to expend $29 million until they pay $7 million to a contracting company, Shipco General, Inc.

The Secretary of the Air Force has written me a letter. Because, Mr. President, when they called me and asked me to take exception to this on the floor, I said, you know, "Frankly, I do not have a dog in this fight. I do not have any particular desire to go out and quarrel with my colleagues about a matter that, quite candidly, could be rather personal to them involving something in their State."

As a general matter, Mr. President, it would not be the practice of this Senator under these circumstances to come to the floor. I am just not interested in coming out here and causing grief to my colleagues. That is the kind of a hairpin I am and the way I have operated for a long time in public service. But I also take my responsibilities seriously. We ought not to be in this place if we do not.

The Secretary of the Air Force—not he personally, but when his office contacted me, I said, "Look, if you want to send me a letter from the Secretary of the Air Force telling me your problems and saying what you want to do, that is my job and I will do it."

Well, every Senator, in accordance with the Senate rules, has on his desk a "Dear Colleague" letter from me as chairman of the Subcommittee on Readiness, Sustainability and Support of the Committee on Armed Services. I point out, Mr. President, I acted after clearing it through my chairman, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, Senator NUNN, and after conferring with him. So he has full knowledge of everything and his imprimatur is on this amendment. He is a cosponsor of it.

Here is what I say:

Dear COLLEAGUE: H.R. 4404, the FY1990 Supplemental Appropriations Bill, contains a provision which would preclude the Air Force from spending certain operation and maintenance funds until not less than $7 million is paid to Shipco General, Inc., a construction company, to settle a contract claim, notwithstanding the pendency of a lawsuit concerning this claim.

The attached letter from Secretary of the Air Force Donald B. Rice strongly opposes this inappropriate interference with the ongoing litigation of this contract dispute.

Senator Nunn and I will offer an amendment to nullify this provision in this bill.

And that is what I have done.

My dear friend and distinguished colleague will present his side of this. But let me present the Air Force's side and then I think the 100 Senators here, using the exercise of their own sound judgment, I am sure, can make their decision about what ought to be done.

As I said, this bill has in it a provision that fences $29 million in the Air Force's O&M account which says you cannot do anything with this unless you pay $7 million to Shipco General, Inc., a construction company. The Secretary of the Air Force has sent me a letter objecting to that. My amendment would take that out and leave this in the courts.

Here is the story as told to me by the Air Force. May I say I do not know anything about these facts. I do not know Shipco. I do not know about this case. What I know is given me by the Air Force and I am here to present the Air Force point of view. Here is what the Air Force says:

Shipco, an Idaho construction company, received a $3.5 million contract to rehabilitate 155 housing units at Kirtland Air Force Base in New Mexico during 1982-1983. So they got a contract from the Air Force to rehabilitate 155 housing units for $3.5 million in Kirtland. The Air Force terminated Shipco for failure to make progress and Shipco's surety completed the work. The Air Force paid Shipco and its surety $4.5 million, which includes Shipco cost claims for extra work and the surety's higher cost to complete the work.

So a lot of this sounds familiar. Here is a $3.5 million contract. Already $4.5 million at that point, I am sure, had been spent. The Air Force stopped the work. The Air Force got surety to complete it. The Air Force paid $4.5 million for surety to complete the work.

Shipco filed a claim for $35 million, 10 times the amount of the contract. The claim for some reason I do not understand was subsequently reduced to $14 million.

After determining that the matter should be treated as a termination for convenience, rather than a default, the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals—there is an Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals that heard this—ruled that approximately $12 million of the costs were unallowable because they involved consequential damages. That portion of the ruling is now under appeal to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

All that part of this has been litigated in the administrative agency that has jurisdiction, the Armed Forces Board of Contract Appeals, and it is up on appeal.

Last September, this same board directed the parties to negotiate two issues. One, the amount of profit on the work Shipco performed; and two, excess surety costs which the Air Force was trying to recover back. The provision in this bill seeks to guarantee that Shipco receives at least $7 million, which is twice the value of the contract.

Here we have a contract that was for $3.5 million for 155 rehabs that the Air Force has already paid $4.5 million on, where there is litigation and there has been a hearing and it is up on appeal. And now under this bill, if this supplemental remains intact and passes, they would get another $7 million. So we would have spent, in effect, for 155 housing rehabs in New Mexico, if my addition serves me, $11.5 million for a $3.5 million deal.

Here is what the Secretary of the Air Force says to me in an April 26 letter, which I am going to put in the RECORD in a second.

Dear SENATOR DIXON: The Senate supplemental appropriations bill contains a provision (Section 207) which restricts the obligation and expenditure of $29,000,000 of Air Force Operation and Maintenance funds. The Air Force is strongly opposed to this provision.

Section 207 states:

Of the bill before us, the supplemental—

Of the amount appropriated in FY 1990 for Air Force Operation and Maintenance, $29,000,000 shall not be obligated or expended until not less than $7,000,000 is expended as settlement for the pending dispute regarding Contract No. —.

Then naming it, which is in the amendment.

This is the Secretary of the Air Force, Don Rice, part of this administration, saying to me this. I will go on and quote directly.

The referenced contract was a $3.5 million contract for the renovation of military family housing at Kirtland AFB, New Mexico. The Air Force terminated this contract for default for failure to make progress, and Shipco's surety completed the work. The Air Force paid Shipco and its surety approximately $4.5 million which includes Shipco's claims for extra work and the surety's higher costs to complete the work. Pursuant to the disputes procedure in the contract as required by the Contract Disputes Act of 1978, Shipco appealed the termination to the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals (ASBCA) and successfully persuaded the ASBCA to convert the termination into a termination for convenience.

Shipco initially submitted a termination for convenience claim of $35 million but later reduced the amount to $14 million. Although the Air Force settled and paid Shipco part of its claim, the Air Force refused to pay an amount for consequential damages claimed by Shipco in the amount of $12 million since these kinds of damages are not allowed under the standard termination for convenience clause. Shipco appealed to the ASBCA which upheld the Air Force position. The only remaining issue concerning Shipco's termination claim is the amount of profit, if any, Shipco made on the work it performed. Shipco has claimed a profit of approximately $550,000 whereas the Air Force believes that Shipco would not have made any profit. The ASBCA returned the profit issue to the parties for negotiation. In January 1990, Shipco appealed that part of the ASBCA decision concerning consequential damages to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit (CAFC) where the case is still pending.

So it is in the appeals court. The litigation is up on appeal.

The Air Force is strongly opposed to Section 207 for several reasons. First, the case is before the appropriate forums for resolution. Section 207 constitutes an interference with the contract disputes process established by Congress in the Contract Disputes Act of 1978 and will undoubtedly encourage other contractors to seek a similar course of action.

Second, the figure of $7 million is clearly directed to recovery of consequential damages which are not allowable. The ASBCA decision in this regard is based on long-established precedent and is consistent with decisions of the U.S. Claims Court and the U.S. Court of Claims (now the CAFC). Shipco has admitted in its legal papers before the ASBCA and the CAFC that there is no precedent for its position.

I do not say that. That is what the Secretary of the Air Force says. So far as I know, it is true, but I do not know.

Third, even if the Air Force could otherwise negotiate concerning consequential damages, there is no apparent support, such as a detailed audit, for the $7 million "floor" or the $29 million for that matter. Shipco's figures have fluctuated widely over time; despite having earlier reduced its claim from $35 million to $14 million, Shipco just two months ago notified the contracting officer that its damages at Kirtland AFB were $31 million. Congress should be especially wary of legislating any specific dollar figure in light of these circumstances. We must also not lose sight of the fact that these figures pertain to a $3.5 million contract.

We hope this information is helpful and would ask your assistance in opposing Section 207.

DONALD B. RICE.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this statement from the Secretary of the Air Force in the form of this letter of April 26 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECRETARY OF THE AIR FORCE,
Washington, April 26, 1990.

HON. ALAN J. DIXON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Sustainability, Readiness and Support, Committee on Armed Services, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DIXON: The Senate supplemental appropriations bill contains a provision (Section 207) which restricts the obligation and expenditure of $29,000,000 of Air Force Operation and Maintenance funds. The Air Force is strongly opposed to this provision.

Section 207 states:

DONALD B. RICE.

Mr. DIXON. I say this again without knowing it. This is in my notes. My friend from Idaho may want to dispute it.

The Air Force, in the arguments given me, claims that the two Senators, or someone, has—they say the two Senators from Idaho have introduced a private relief bill that has been referred to the Judiciary Committee, to pay $14 million to Shipco for this $3.5 million. That private bill is accompanied by a Senate resolution referring the private bill to the claims court for a review.

They go on. I am not going to burden the Senate unnecessarily. But should that be true, and I presume it is true but I yield and I would believe anything my friend from Idaho would say in that regard, I assure my colleagues. I am reading from the papers given me.

But it would appear we have here, in an oversimplification, what began as a simple $3.5 million contract for a rehab in New Mexico by an Idaho contractor, in which—and I do not know the facts—there was a dispute about the work being done, and the contract was terminated.

It was completed, I take it, by someone else under the surety bond. The Government paid $4.5 million already. A hearing has been had by the jurisdictional administrative agency. That is on appeal to the court of appeals, and I presume will ultimately be disposed of.

I am told, if this is true, that there is also a special bill, and I suppose all of us at one time or another have introduced one. I think I have introduced one in the 9 years I have been here. I hope I do not have to do more than another one for the next 9; one every 9 or 10 years would be plenty.

But, as I would do in certain situations, and I have no criticisms of this, my friends apparently had a special bill here sent to the Judiciary, and that will ultimately be resolved.

On most of those not much is done, but sometimes I guess some are disposed of adequately. But there are all kinds of other things floating around about this. I simply press the case for the Air Force, which is asking me to do this, that if we go ahead and permit this to stay in the supplemental, so far we will have paid $11.5 million on a $3.5 million contract, which I do not think is very wise. It may be the Air Force in the end is going to pay more if they lose this lawsuit. That is their problem. They did not come asking me to get them a good result, obviously only to see it does not happen on this bill. That is the position of this Senator on the jurisdictional authorizing committee.

Beyond any closing comments I might have, I expect this is all I want to say on the subject. But I ask my colleagues to consider whether we are going to start doing this, because I think it is a precedent that may come to some grief in time. I yield the floor.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I, of course, rise in strenuous opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. It will help perhaps if we sketch a little of the background of why we are, first, in the procedural sense and, second, on the substance of the amendment and of the claim.

First, in the procedural sense, there was no effort by the Senator from Illinois or anyone else to oppose the committee amendment when the committee amendment was before the Senate and the committee amendment was adopted without objection. Since that time, apparently the Air Force has contacted—apparently, and I do not mean to misquote the flow of events; I do not know what they were, so I say apparently—apparently since the Senate approved the committee amendment, the Air Force has asked the Senator from Illinois to undo that action by an amendment that is not an amendment to the committee amendment, but says, "Notwithstanding any other provision of law"—another way of getting around the committee amendment, even though the committee amendment has been adopted.

Now, with respect to some of the process background—and I do not mean to belabor this subject too much, but I do want the Senate to understand why we are here. It is not exactly as the Air Force would have you believe.

Mr. President, during full committee markup of the supplemental, I offered an amendment which was unanimously adopted and is part of the bill under consideration today. I rise to explain why I offered this amendment so my colleagues will better understand the history of this dispute with the Air Force.

Mr. President, I think we all agree that the Government should be responsible for damage it inflicts as a result of a wrongful act. In a nutshell, that is what this amendment is designed to address. In this instance, the Air Force made a unilateral, arbitrary decision to terminate a contract for default. I want you to remember that. They took the action claiming there was a default on the part of Shipco. Some 3 years later and after thousands of dollars expended by the affected small contractor, the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals held that the contract was terminated, not for default, as the Air Force had claimed, but for the convenience of the Air Force. It was after 3 years of litigation that that determination was made. Since that time, I have been working with this small contractor to return him to the position he was in prior to the Air Force's unjustified action.

Mr. President, least anybody have any doubt about it, I never heard about Shipco. I did not know any of the persons involved until this matter was called to my attention following the reversal of the Government's actions by the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals.

Mr. President, I have met with the most arrogant, foot-dragging bureaucratic resistance I have experienced while serving as an elected official, and I have been in elective office of one kind or another for 40 years. It is only as a result of this resistance that I felt compelled to deal with this problem in this fashion.

For the benefit of my colleagues, let me give a brief history of this dispute to demonstrate the need for the amendment. Prior to the award of this construction contract at Kirtland Air Force Base, NM, Shipco General, Inc., had previously performed numerous Government construction contracts for the Department of the Air Force at such places as Grand Forks Air Force Base, ND, Travis Air Force Base, CA, Mountain Home Air Force Base, ID, and elsewhere. Shipco had completed all of its prior Federal Government construction contracts on schedule and to the complete satisfaction of the Federal Government authorities. It is important to recognize that in the past all of their contracts have been happy. The Government was happy. The contractor was happy.

But something happened at Kirtland Air Force Base. Shipco was awarded the Kirtland Air Force Base contract in October 1982 for the construction of repairs and renovations of 155 onbase houses. Shipco commenced construction promptly and initially was making satisfactory progress on the contract.

I want to refer again to that happy prior experience with the Air Force because, anticipating nothing different in this case, in this case Shipco commenced construction. Based upon all their experience in the past, they went ahead and bought a lot of the materials. They had no reason not to. Their experience had told them that they were going to get along fine on this contract, too.

They stored numerous expensive materials at the job site and processed the payment request in accordance with Government regulations. The Kirtland Air Force Base contracting authorities refused to make initial payments to Shipco. Because of the failure of the Air Force contracting authorities to process payment for Shipco at the beginning of the job, Shipco became cash negative in excess of $500,000 within the first 3½ months. Shipco did not have and did not need an extensive line of credit prior to its work at Kirtland Air Force Base. Because of the large cash negative problem created by the Air Force, Shipco applied for and received its first extensive line of credit from a bank in Idaho. The bank was secured by proceeds from the Kirtland contract.

Shipco had to employ an attorney, who, in turn, made written demands and threatened litigation in order for Shipco to receive its first progress payments at Kirtland Air Foce Base. Although the attorney was able to get progress payments commenced, Shipco remained cash negative throughout the job and was never able to retire the line of credit with the Idaho bank.

The contractor did not create that situation. The Government created that situation. Shipco had difficulty in getting the Air Force authorities to accept the work that was performed by Shipco. The Air Force inspector at Kirtland subjected Shipco to a rigorous standard of inspection that exceeded the standards set out in the contract documents. Materials that Shipco was required to use on its contract under the terms of the contract specifications were rejected by the inspection personnel because they were "unsatisfactory" and Shipco was required to replace these materials with a higher quality product not specified in the contract. This was not required by the contract; it was required by Government personnel.

Shipco personnel visited the housing units constructed by the other contractor, which contained the identical specified materials as the Shipco contract and found that these materials were acceptable to the inspection authorities when they were installed by the other contractor but the materials had not been acceptable to the Air Force when installed by Shipco.

The Air Force amended Shipco's contract—they did not ask Shipco. They amended the contract to make a daily delivery of two completed housing units acceptable to the Air Force.

That was a demand for a change in the contract and they told Shipco you take this change or we will not make your progress payments. They now try to say that was voluntary. Let me ask you how voluntary it is when a small contractor with a gun at its head will say, I will try to get along with you.

The Air Force now says that was your fault, you did not have to do that, you are bound by it. Shipco protested this amendment to the contract but they were compelled to accept it. After Shipco's contract was amended to require Government acceptance of two completed buildings per day, that is a new provision in the contract, not in the contract at all before this, Shipco continued to make progress under the contract.

Shipco was ahead of its overall contract progress. Even after they got the two buildings per day requirement forced on Shipco, the Air Force refused to accept the two units per day. They threatened Shipco with termination of its contract and the Air Force could not accept two buildings per day.

Shipco met with representatives from the Air Force and explained that the Government acceptance of two buildings per day was only being prevented by the unreasonably high inspection standards of the Air Force inspection personnel not required by the contract. The Air Force would not accept this as a just justification.

On October 27, 1983, now almost 7 years ago, the Air Force terminated Shipco's contract for an alleged default even though Shipco was ahead of the overall progress schedule at the time. They were ahead of schedule under the contract. The Air Force terminated them for default. The termination was based upon the failure of the Air Force to accept two buildings per day from Shipco.

At the time Shipco's contract was terminated—get this, because it will tell you something about how they were operating at the time at Kirtland Air Force base with respect to this contractor—the contracting authorities had the base security police armed with M-16 rifles go to the job site and at gunpoint force a lockup of the job, abandonment of the jobsite, and the physical departure from the base of all construction personnel.

When one plumber protested this action, he was arrested by the security police.

Shipco was unable to perform an inventory of materials and progress to the time of termination because they were thrown off the base by the security personnel. The job was simply abandoned in the condition that it existed at the moment the security police arrived.

Shipco and its attorney attempted to get the termination set aside through negotiations with the contracting authorities but was unable to persuade them to reinstate the contract. At the time of termination the Air Force was withholding retainage from Shipco. The Air Force was refusing to pay for any Shipco claims for an equitable adjustment, increasing Shipco's contract by the cost of the overinspection, and the Air Force refused to pay the final fine progress payments to Shipco.

Because the Air Force alleged that Shipco had defaulted in their contract, Shipco's subcontractors made claims against Shipco for breach of the subcontracts. Of course they were unable to pay the subcontractors their final progress payments because the Air Force had not paid Shipco the final progress payments. Shipco was unable to retire the bank line of credit and Shipco was unable to pay its suppliers and employees because the job which has previously been in a cash negative position had now been terminated with a large unpaid outstanding payable from the Air Force which would not be paid.

Shipco appealed the termination of the contract to the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals, claiming that the termination was not, in fact, for default but for the convenience of the Government.

I want you to remember that. They appealed on the basis that the termination was not, in fact, for default, but it was for the convenience of the Government. The Government did not want them there, the Government decided to get them out of there, the Government got them out of there, but it was not the fault of Shipco.

Shipco's bonding company, with Shipco's approval, completed the construction of the project, but, of course, was forced to hire new job site management, go through a learning and startup curve, replacing construction materials which had been vandalized or lost due to the weather, when the jobsite had been abandoned at gunpoint by Shipco, and was required to perform an increased scope of the work because of Air Force demands for added work items.

That is something the Air Force did not tell Senator DIXON. The part of the reason that it cost more to get the contract was they added work items to the construction completion.

I am going to recite here something, not because this was an experience that Shipco alleged happened to them, but it tells you something of what was happening at Kirtland Air Force Base in that period of time now nearly 7 years ago.

The project manager hired by the bonding company—this is not Shipco. This is the company that comes in after Shipco had been kicked off the job. This project manager testified at the trial of the Shipco case before the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals, and in that testimony he described an incident in which an inspector who had previously performed inspector's wife's illness. The inspector pointed out a dishwasher that was being installed on the project and told the project manager that his wife could be much benefited by having a dishwasher to relieve her of the difficulties she experienced when trying to wash dishes in her ill condition.

The inspector went on to tell the project manager that inspections would be a lot easier if the inspector did not have the problem of worrying about his wife's dishwashing problems.

Mr. President, I am not telling you this story because it was Shipco's experience, but I am telling you that story because it is so consistent with the kinds of problems Shipco was having before they were kicked off the job.

The project manager refused to install a dishwasher at this invitation and inspections became more difficult for the bonding company thereafter.

Mr. President, that is a pattern of the conduct that Shipco had been seeing before this, although they did not allege any of this shakedown attempt themselves. But, the shakedown attempt did occur to the contractor that took Shipco's place in the completion of the project.

But that is not the basis upon which the Board of Contract Appeals made their decision, nor was it what Shipco asked them to make the determination on. Shipco's appeal was decided on the question of entitlement, which converted the termination from default into a termination for the convenience of the Government. There is a very, very important and significant difference between those two.

Shipco also was awarded entitlement to extra money for the higher inspection standards. Because of the termination being for the convenience—and remember this—that was not decided until 3 years after the termination of the contract, and after expenses of litigation, before finally the Government was told you could not do it the way you tried to do it. You said it was his fault and it was not his fault, it was for the convenience of the Government. Because it was for convenience of Government and not for default, Shipco was entitled to be paid for its costs incurred, impacts, interest, settlement costs, and so on, together with extra compensation for the elevated inspection standards.

The Air Force repaid the bonding company its impacts, and has paid Shipco a small fraction of the moneys owed to Shipco, but has otherwise refued to pay Shipco anything; anything, nearly 7 years after they are thrown off the job.

Because of the Air Force's refusal to pay Shipco in full, Shipco's creditors having been unpaid, there are numerous suppliers, subcontractors, banks, former employees, and trade auditors in New Mexico, Idaho, Utah, California, and elsewhere who have not been paid by Shipco and cannot be paid by Shipco until the damages are paid to Shipco by the Air Force.

The principals of Shipco have had numerous lawsuits filed against them personally because they personally guaranteed many of the trade accounts. Real estate properties, including the home of the president of Shipco have been foreclosed upon. A family trust has had to take out bankruptcy because of the creditors that assert claims arising out of the Kirtland Air Force Base contract.

Shipco has lost its creditworthiness, lost all of its banking lines of credit, lost its bonding capacity, lost its equipment, and lost its ability to continue as a viable business entity, not because of their fault, but because of the action of the Government.

Shipco's only solution to reestablishing itself and paying off the numerous unpaid creditors, restoring its bank lines of credit, and attempting to reobtain a bonding line so as to continue in business, is through the Air Force payment of Shipco's claims from Kirtland Air Force Base.

Until that happens, Shipco will remain a financial black hole. Mr. President, I believe there is a real miscarriage of justice which can be corrected by the Air Force. I am very concerned that the Air Force is unwilling to deal with this problem in good faith, and that is why I feel so strongly about this matter and have been willing to push it to this point.

Mr. President, there is a little bit more history and background to where we are here today. Last year I offered report language which has accepted by the DOD conference committee. The language fenced $29 million of Air Force operation and maintenance funds until a settlement was reached on this matter.

I received a letter from Under Secretary Anne Foreman saying that the Air Force would negotiate in good faith to resolve this matter. Remember, Mr. President, that this has occurred nearly 7 years after the termination of the contract, nearly 4 years since the board of contract appeals reversed the contention of the Air Force and said, "You cannot terminate that contract for default; there was no default." There must be a contract termination on the basis on the convenience of the Government. And we finally put the language into a report on an appropriation bill saying to the Air Force, "Settle this contract dispute."

The response was, "Hey, we do not owe them anything, but, yes, we will negotiate." Well, what happened? The Air Force has failied to even respond to the Shipco request to negotiate. That was only last fall, 6 months ago. So perhaps 6 months does not sound like a very long time, but to me, Mr. President, that is hardly good faith.

I believe the Government, in this case the Air Force, should be more responsive to men and women of this country. I do not believe that this amendment is a perfect solution of the problem. However, until the Air Force demonstrates a willingness to act in good faith and respond to a small contractor who has been wronged by Government action, I am left with no alternative.

Senator DIXON informed the Senate last week he intended to contest this because he had been contacted by the Air Force and directed by them to raise this issue. We have met with the Secretary of the Air Force for over an hour this morning, trying to find out why it was they object.

After all is said and done, about all I can really figure out is the Air Force said we are not going to pay. We do not have to pay. We do not care what you say, we are not going to pay.

That is exactly the treatment Shipco has been getting for several years now. It is suggested by my colleague that there is a bill for personal relief pending in the Judiciary Committee. That is true; there is a bill for personal relief.

When I ran into this problem with the Air Force last year, and after we put this report language in the appropriations bill last year, and after the Air Force said, we do not think you are doing this right, we should not have to negotiate, they said, in effect, why do you not introduce a bill for personal relief and settle it that way. So I introduce that bill.

What was the response of the Air Force? I introduced the bill in the Judiciary Committee in March 1989. The Air Force was requested by the Judiciary Committee to comment on the bill and failed to do so. I almost said refused. They stonewalled. They did not do anything. The Judiciary Committee came back again and asked, "Can we receive your comments on this bill for personal relief?" That was 6 weeks ago, and the Judiciary Committee, to the best of my knowledge, has not yet received a reply to the request for comments on legislation.

Mr. President, I recite that because it has been recited by the Senator from Illinois, and because I think the Senate is entitled to understand that I believe that that is a part of the pattern that we have experienced. I do not know what else we can do when the Air Force says, "We do not intend to pay; we do not think we owe it. We are not going to pay any attention to the language in the Appropriations Committee report, because we do not think we have the authority to negotiate a settlement where we do not think we owe anything," when they then object to the language we try to draw to bring about a bill for personal relief.

There is, it seems to me, a fundamental question of fairness which needs to be addressed here. It is not what the amount of the original contract was; it is not how much as been paid for the housing; it is not how much the Government has already paid; it is what has happened to one individual contractor in this country, a small outfit that dared do business with the Government. And when the Government decided in one case, after years of happy relationships in all other cases, that they were going to get this fellow off of the job, they drove him off the job, and they refused then, and refuse now, to pay. They said we are going to kick you out for default.

Even the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals said, "You cannot get away with that." They refuse to even adjust it, as though it had been a contract termination for convenience of Government in the first instance. If they had treated it as a contract for cancellation of the contract for convenience of Government, all of these other events would not have transpired. It is clearly a case where the Air Force was wrong. They have been found to be wrong, and they refuse to make whole the person that was hurt.

Regarding the amount of money, I do not know what the appropriate amount of money is, but I do know if you look at the items in contention and the time value of money and the amounts still owed and the interest on those amounts still owed, it aggregates at least $29 million. Probably updated, it is over $30 million today. The report language that I had in the bill last year said up to $29 million, negotiate. The Air Force said, "We will negotiate." The Air Force did not negotiate.

My own best guess is that if you are going to try to put this fellow back into business where he was at the time the contract was terminated nearly 7 years ago, it would take at least $7 million. So I put a floor in the amendment this time. The Air Force said, "We do not want to negotiate. We do not know what the amount should be, because we do not think we owe anything, and we do not intend to pay anything." So I put a floor in of $7 million. Somewhere between 7 and 29. The Air Force says, "Both figures are ridiculous, we will not even talk about them."

My friend from Illinois said he is only doing job as subcommittee chairman. I suggest to my friend from Illinois, just as a prosecuting attorney has duties, so do Senators. A prosecuting attorney's job is not just to prosecute the guilty, but to protect the innocent. A job of a Senator of the United States is not just to represent the Government, but to see that the Government treats its citizens fairly.

I submit to you that in this instance, the Government is not treating its citizens fairly, demonstrably on the record; it is not treating its citizens fairly, and if we are going to get any justice, it will not be because we have persuaded the Air Force to be kinder and gentler, it is because we will have ordered them to do something they should have done without order but refuse to do. I think the duty of a Senator is not just to say yes, sir, to the Air Force, I will do what you want, Mr. Air Force. Our duty is to protect the interest of the citizens of this country, as well.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONRAD). The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I understand that my friend, the distinguished junior Senator from Idaho, will also be speaking in a moment about this. I will be reasonably brief. I may ultimately say a few words in closing again as well. I do feel compelled to respond to my distinguished friend from Idaho who has served here for a great many years, both in the House and Senate, in my view with distinction. He is a man I greatly admire.

Not too very long ago, I expressed to him in private my personal regard for him and my admiration for the fact that in the prime of his life, after many distinguished years of public service, he had opted on his own without any direction from his constituency to retire and enjoy other things in life, and I congratulated him on his profound good judgment in seeing that there are other things but being inside this Beltway. I feel the warmest regard for him, and I take into account his statement about the duties of a Senator in comparing those to the duties of a prosecutor in arriving at the truth. I have served in other lives as a prosecutor, and I did defense work as well, and I have served as a trial lawyer I think in one part of my life of some reputation.

I would be the first to concede I do not know the truth about this argument or where all of the merits may be. My on experience in most litigation I was ever in my lifetime that was hotly contested was that most of it was in dispute and a good deal of it was hard to understand. I can remember trying simple automobile accident cases where there were 11 or 12 witnesses and everybody told a different story. I am absolutely of the opinion that every one of the 11 or 12 were telling the truth as they saw that automobile accident.

This is a little more complicated than an automobile accident, and there is a little bit more money involved. I do not really know who is right or who is wrong.

Here is what I know, though, that there has been a lot of litigation already. I hold in my hand the 1990 Commerce Clearing House report on this case at page 22,355 of that report. I am not familiar with these kinds of cases. If we were doing an appellate court case or something of that type, I would give you direct citations.

I am going to put this in the RECORD. But this is almost the equivalency of what we see, may I say to my colleagues, in written opinions in the appellate courts of our States and of the Federal Government. Here is an opinion that has been rendered. Here is a page talking about all kinds of numbers and everything that has been disputed. Here is all kinds of opinion about this case that goes on almost interminably as lawyers are almost always bound to. But here are six pages on this case, Mr. President.

Part of this case on appeal from this decision to a court of a higher level. I do not know who is right. Another part of this case has been re-referred to the administrative agency that heard this whole thing in the first place. They are saying to them in the part that has been referred back to find out two things.

I have counsel from the Armed Services Committee here who understands these matters better than I. I am a lawyer but this is not the work I did in my other life.

This part is up on appeal. The court has also sent this back and said to the parties negotiate two things, one, the amount of profit on the work which Shipco actually performed, and two, excess surety costs which the Air Force is trying to recover.

So part of this whole decision has been rendered, part has gone up to the appeal court for the Federal circuit involved. Other issues have come back to the board to try to resolve it between the parties.

I am instructed here that a letter has been sent by the Air Force—my friend refereed to the Judiciary Committee—to Senator HEFLIN, who is the jurisdictional subcommittee man in that committee, on this whole dispute from the resolution of it on the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. DIXON. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. McCLURE. Does the Senator know when that letter has been sent, if it has been sent?

Mr. DIXON. I do not. I am told that the letter has cleared and not yet transmitted.

Mr. McCLURE. It has not yet been transmitted to the committee.

Mr. DIXON. That is correct.

Here is the only point I make. Again, I stress what I said in the beginning of this whole discussion. I do not have a dog in this fight. I am just here doing my job as a Senator for the jurisdictional committee, but all of this is in tremendous dispute everywhere, apparently. What is clear about this supplemental is that that dispute is resolved by this supplemental appropriations bill.

I will just tell you my own historical experience which is probably worth nothing, but I feel compelled to tell the story anyway. I went to the Illinois Legislature as a kid in my twenties in the Illinois House. I will never forget the biggest fight I ever remember in the Illinois House was over a couple hundred dollars for a State policeman uniform that got all messed up in an automobile accident. I do not know how it ever got in the legislature in a private piece of legislation. But even in the Illinois Legisilture, in the 1950's, where the budget for a biennium of 2 years was only a billion or so, a couple hundred dollars was not much money. We spent, as I recall, days arguing about whether the price of the belt was right and the pants, the shirt, and everybody got involved in it. It do not know whatever happened to that. But I remember that everybody could understand a couple hundred dollars and had an opinion about it.

What is my point? I am telling you if we are going to start getting in here and disputing all these things about contacts and what is the right way to get rid of them, and what is the right amount, and so forth, and that is going to be a subject of public discourse and debate in the Senate of the United States, we do not have time for this work.

I guess my point is, Mr. President, that without regard to who is right or who is wrong, I have to say from a simplistic standpoint I think with due reference to everything here and the highest personal regard to the Senators involved that the Air Force is right in saying this is not the way to settle this dispute. I am confident that that is correct. I ask unanimous consent to print this opinion in the RECORD for what it is worth.

There being no objection, the opinion was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ASBCA Nos. 36034, 36035, and 37842, September 26, 1989. Contract No. F29650-82-C-0201.

Defaults—Remedies of Contractor After Improper Termination—Termination for Convenience Clause—A contractor was entitled to recover for loss of business, loss of bonding capacity, loss by its principals for property used as security, or other similar items after a default termination was found to be improper and was converted by the board to a termination for the convenience of the government, because its recovery was limited by a Termination for Convenience Clause. The contractor erroneously relied on the Termination for Default Clause that provided that the contract would be equitably adjusted if the default termination were converted to a convenience termination because that provision applied only if there was no Termination for Convenience Clause. The contractor also argued that its contract rights and remedies were in addition to other rights and remedies; however, the subparagraph of the Default clause upon which it relied referred exclusively to government rights and remedies. The contractor's argument that the conversion constituted a change entitling it to an equitable adjustment under the Changes clause was denied because of the express contract provisions concerning terminations.

Convenience Terminations—Recovery—Profit—A contractor is entitled to recover profit after its contract was terminated for the convenience of the government if it can prove that the contract would have made a profit, A contract was terminated for default; the termination was later converted by the board to a termination for the convenience of the government. The contracting officer concluded that the contract was a loss contract and denied recovery for profit. However, there was insufficient evidence of the profitability of the contract, and the matter was remanded to the parties to negotiate.

Bonds and Sureties—Performance Surety—Performance v. Payment Bond.—A surety for both performance and payment was not entitled to recover for cost payments it made prior to the termination of a contract, because those payments were made pursuant to the payment bond and therefore were not compensable by the government, However, the surety was entitled to recover the unpaid balance of the contract price for additional work it performed to complete the contract.

Bonds and Sureties—Performance Bond Surety—Improper Default Termination.—Because the government improperly terminated a contract for default, the performance surety that completed the contract for default, the performance surety that completed the contract was entitled to not only the balance of the contract price, but also any reasonable excess costs that it incurred in completing the contract. The rationale for such entitlement is that if the government had found another contractor to complete the work, it would have incurred such additional costs but would not have been able to recover them to the original contractor because its death termination was improper.

For the appellant: Maddox and Snuffer, Murray, Utah, by Denver C. Snuffer, Jr. For the government: Col. Robert L. Schaefer, USAF, Chief Trial Attorney, and Mark E. Landers, Trial Attorney.

Before Buro, Spector and Riismandel, Administrative Judges.

Burg, Administrative Judge: This contract in the amount of $3,522,220, for renovation of 155 military family housing units at Kirkland Air Force Base, was terminated for default on 27 October 1983. By decision dated 10 April 1986 the termination for default of this contract was converted to a termination for convenience and we determined the applicant was entitled to eleven (11) equitable adjustments for extra work. Shipco General, Inc., ASBCA Nos. 28206 and 29942, 86-2 BCA ¶ 18,973. On 26 November 1985 appellant filed a settlement proposal seeking $12,564,963. This was followed by a certified settlement proposal filed by appellant on 22 May 1986 revising its claim to $35,235,853. Thereafter, the termination contracting officer was instructed not to conduct any negotiations because the Air Force Office of Special Investigations was conducting an investigation involving an allegation of false claim submission on the part of Shipco. The Department of Justice also instructed the Termination Contracting Officer, that no negotiations go forward. By letter dated 29 April 1987 appellant's counsel was notified by the contracting officer as follows:

1. On 24 April 1987, the office received authorization to commence negotiations on Shipco General Inc's claims under contract number F29650-82-CO2010 [sic]. Accordingly, and at your request, we have scheduled an intial fact-finding session for 1000 hours on 12 May 1987 to initiate negotiation on the 11 claims sustained by the ASBCA.

2. To maximize the productivity of this fact-finding session, we again ask that you provide all available documentation and cost data, including hours, rates, materials, and all other appropriate detail, for each sustained claim in accordance with DAR 7-602.29(a).

Appellant arrived for the meeting on 12 May 1987 prepared to discuss settlement of its entire termination claim and, when informed that the meeting was limited to the 11 claims for which the Board had found entitlement and that, as indicated in its letter this was a fact-finding meeting so the Air Force would listen but would not negotiate, appellant insisted that a reporter be present to record the meeting. The meeting was reconvened on 13 May 1987. From review of that transcript and the letter quoted above, it is clear that appellant misinterpreted the purpose of the meeting. Appellant focused on the first sentence of the letter rather than reading it as a whole. The letter is quite specific that the subject of the meeting was the 11 claims which our decision of 10 April 1986 concluded constituted contract changes for which appellant was entitled to equitable adjustments. These items have now been settled and paid in the amount of $179,398 and they are no longer at issue before us in ASBCA No. 36034.

At the meeting noted above on 13 May 1987, appellant filed a certified revised settlement proposal. Unlike the previous proposals, it was handwritten. In it, appellant reduced its termination claim from $35,235,983 to $14,039,074. By final decision dated 23 September 1987 the termination contracting officer disallowed $14,061,880 and determinated that $(22,806) was an appropriate settlement for termination for convenience of the contract. The $22,806 was offset against the amount due appellant for the 11 claims for which we had concluded it was entitled to an equitable adjustments, resulting in the payment of $179,398 pluus interest noted above. The final decision disallowed $11,604,247 claimed by appellant as settlement expenses and is the remaining subject of ASBCA No. 36034. The settlement expenses claimed by appellant include the following:

Element of proposal:	Amount
Serverance [sic] pay	$6,000
WR profit guarantee	55,000
WR certificate of deposit for bonding	100,000

Following the termination for default, appellant's surety, Industrial Indemnity Company, completed performance and incurred costs in excess of the amount still unpaid on the contract. Because, in order to obtain payment and performance bonds, for this contract, appellant, its "principals" and unnamed "others" has indemnified the surety, agreeing to reimburse Industrial indemnity in full for all sums which the surety paid or all costs incurred as a result of any liability on the payment and performance bonds, appellant filed claims in the amount of $1,180,000. In a second final decision issued on 23 September 1987, the same day as the final decision the appeal from which has been docketed as ASBCA No. 36034, the contracting officer made a unilateral determination that $930,000 was allowable for the claimed excess costs of completion. Appellant's appeal from this final decision seeking $1,725,000 for costs incurred and sums paid by Industrial Indemnity, was docketed as ASBCA No. 36035. Modification P00007, dated 10 December 1987, allowed payment of $1,050,179.45 in partial settlement of the termination claim and consisted of $930,496 (including the $930,000 discussed above) as a "partial payment" and $119,683.45 as interest on that payment. By final decision dated 4 August 1988 the Government rescined the above-noted final decision of 23 September 1987 and demanded return of the $1,050,179.45 on the basis that the recognized excess surety costs allowed by the earlier final decision exceeded the contract price and were thus noncompensable. Appellant filed a timely appeal from the 4 August 1988 final decision which was docketed as ASBCA No. 37842.

The Government has filed a Motion for Summary Judgment in ASBCA Nos. 36034 (Termination for Convenience-Settlement Costs) and ASBCA No. 36035 (Excess Costs of Completion) which is opposed by appellant. Appellant argues that there are serious factual disputes which require an evidentiary hearing making a motion for summary judgment inappropriate.

ASBCA NO. 36034

Appellant has advanced a number of arguments to support its position that it is entitled to recover for loss of business, loss of bonding capacity, property loss by principals of appellant used as security, and other items of a similar nature. One of its primary arguments is that it was not paid in accordance with the Termination for Default clause since the "rights" referred to in that clause include the prompt payment of the contractor's claims, that appellant was not paid at the time of the termination in 1983, and that, therefore, the Board must determine "how much Shipco is to be paid to restore them 'as if the notice of termination had been issued pursuant to' the Termination for Convenience Clause." The particular provision of the Termination for Default clause upon which appellant relies provides that:

(e) If, after notice of termination of the Contractor's right to proceed under the provisions of this clause, it is determined for any reason that the Contractor was not in default under the provisions of this clause, or that the delay was excusable under the provisions of this clause, the rights and obligations of the parties shall, if the contract contains a clause providing for termination for convenience of the Government, be the same as if the notice of termination had been issued pursuant to such clause. If, in the foregoing circumstances this contract does not contain a clause providing for termination for convenience of the Government, the contract shall be equitably adjusted to compensate for such termination, and the contract modified accordingly.

Appellant cites no precedent, arguing that these are matters of first impression. We also have found no precedent. We attribute that not to the fact that this is a unique and new argument presented by appellant but to the fact that appellant has failed to apply a basic principle of contract interpretation—namely, that a contract must be read as a whole. The provision quoted above requires the termination to be treated as a termination for convenience. Since the parties both agree that the contract before us contained a termination for convenience clause, settlement of the claim must be pursuant to that clause which provides:

(e) In the event of the failure of the Contractor and the Contracting Officer to agree, as provided in paragraph (d), upon the whole amount to be paid to the Contractor by reasons of the termination of work pursuant to this clause, the Contracting Officer shall pay to the Contractor the amounts determined by the Contracting Officer as follows, but without duplication of any amounts agreed upon in accordance with paragraph (d),

(i) with respect to all contract work performed prior to the effective date of the Notice of Termination, the total (without duplication of any items) of—

(A) the cost of such work;

(B) the cost of getting and paying claims arising out of the termination of work under subcontractors or orders as provided in paragraph (b)(V) above, exclusive of the amounts paid or payable on account of supplies or materials delivered or services furnished by the subcontractor prior to the effective date of the Notice of Termination of Work under this contract, which amounts shall be included in the cost on account of which payment is made under (A) above; and

(C) a sum as profit on (A) above, determined by the Contracting Officer pursuant to 8-303 of the Armed Services Procurement Regulation, in effect as of the date of execution of this contract, to be fair and reasonable; provided, however, that if it appears that the Contractor would have sustained a loss on the entire contract had it been completed, no profit shall be included or allowed under this subdivision (C) and an appropriate adjustment shall be made reducing the amount of the settlement to reflect the indicated rate of loss; and

(ii) The reasonable cost of the preservation and protection of property incurred pursuant to paragraph (b)(ix); and any other reasonable cost incidental to termination of work under this contract, including expense incidental to the determination of the amount due to the Contractor as the result of the termination of work under this contract.

The total sum to be paid to the Contractor under (i) above shall not exceed the total contract price as reduced by the amount of payments otherwise made and as further reduced by the contract price of work not terminated. Except for normal spoilage, and except to the extent that the Government shall have otherwise expressly assumed the risk of loss, there shall be excluded from the amounts payable to the Contractor under (i) above, the fair value, as determined by the Contracting Officer, of property which is destroyed, lost, stolen, or damaged so as to become undeliverable to the Government, or to a buyer pursuant to paragraph (b)(vii).

The termination for convenience clause quoted above is quite specific as to the compensable costs under a termination for convenience claim. The cases have consistently held that the termination for convenience clause does not permit recovery for types of costs sought by appellant for "loss of efficiency" such as amounts for the loss of business, loss of bonding, loss of credit worthiness, and involuntary bankruptcy. See William Green Construction Co. v. United States, 477 F.2d 930 (Ct.Cl. 1973); H & J Construction Co., ASBCA No. 18521, 75-1 BCA ¶ 11,171.

We recognize that appellant maintains it is not seeking consequential damages, that it is only asking to be made whole "as if" the termination for convenience occurred back in 1983. Regardless of what one calls it, appellant's recovery is limited to items specifically permitted by the termination for convenience clause or those which have been specifically provided in the contract or by statute. It does not cover types of costs which appellant now seeks. We do not know whether appellant has abandoned an argument presented to the Government prior to the final decision, namely, that it is entitled to recover these costs under subparagraph (e)(ii) of the termination for convenience clause set forth above as "reasonable cost(s) incidental to termination of work under this contract." To the extent appellant still maintains that position, it is in error. Nor is lost profit recoverable under the termination for convenience clause. Nolan Brothers v. United States [13 CCF ¶82,495], 405 F.2d 1251 (Ct. Cl. 1969).

Appellant also argues that it is entitled to recover because of "rights" preserved under subparagraph (f) to the termination for default clause which provides:

(f) The rights and remedies of the Government provided in this clause are in addition to any other rights and remedies provided by law or under this contract.

Appellant's reliance on that clause is misplaced. That clause specifically pertains to the Government, not to a contractor. Where a contract contains a termination for convenience clause, recovery has been limited to that clause and other common law recovery for breach of contract was precluded, William Green Construction Co. v. United States, supra.

Another argument made by appellant is that conversion of the termination for default to a termination for convenience constitutes a contract change for which appellant is entitled to an equitable adjustment pursuant to the Changes clause of the contract. The termination for default clause provides the method of adjustment if such termination is found to be in error. Namely, the termination shall be treated as a termination for convenience if that clause is present in the contract. Since this contract contained the termination for convenience clause, appellant's recovery is pursuant to that clause and not to the changes clause in the contract.

In his final decision, the contracting officer concluded that this was a loss contract and that appellant, therefore, was not entitled to recover profit. Appellant challenged that this is a loss contract. It points to a series of computations which were presented to the contracting officer during his deposition, where, when one of the figures was varied, the result was the same as previously. While mathematically that could occur, when the actual figures are inserted into the computation more than one will probably vary, so that the result may differ. We are not persuaded, therefore, that the formula used by the Government is inappropriate. Whether appellant was in a loss position will have to be recalculated. If it results in appellant's not being in a loss position, it will be entitled to profit. If it results in appellant's being in a loss position, appellant will not be entitled to profit. That is a matter for the parties to compute.

ASBCA NOS. 36035 AND 37842

In ASBCA No. 36035 appellant seeks costs incurred by its surety for which it and its "principals" and "others" (unspecified) are liable in excess of the amount allowed by the contracting officer in his final decision. That decision was rescinded and demand for repayment has been demanded of a substantial amount already paid to appellant and its surety jointly. Appellant's appeal from this later final decision has been docketed as ASBCA No. 37842. Since the Board and parties agreed that ASBCA No. 37842 would be combined with the earlier appeals and no new pleadings would be required, the file in ASBCA No. 36035, including the Government's Motion for Summary Judgment, will be consolidated with ASBCA No. 37842.

The Government argues that payments by Industrial Indemnity, appellant's surety, made for costs incurred prior to termination of this contract, were made pursuant to the payment bond and that it erroneously considered the repayment as made pursuant to the performance bond and concluded that costs were compensable to the amount paid. The final decision demanding repayments was issued and the earlier final decision withdrawn when this alleged error was recognized.

To the extent that the payments were for subcontractor costs incurred prior to termination of this contract, payments were pursuant to the payment bond. Recovery for such payments by appellant's surety for costs incurred prior to the termination of this contract is as a subrogee to appellant and, therefore, is limited to the amount appellant would have been entitled to receive. United States v. Munsey Trust Co., 832 U.S. 235 (1947); Peerless Insurance Co., ASBCA No. 28887, 88-2 BCA ¶ 20,730. In addition to that recovery, the surety would be entitled to recover up to the unpaid balance of the contract price for additional work it performed in completion of the contract. Where the termination for default has been held erroneous, a surety may also be entitled to recover reasonable excess costs of completion on the rationale these are costs which the Government would have incurred had it found another contractor to complete the contract and which it would not have been able to recover from the contractor. Carchia v. United States [19 CCF ¶ 82,617], 485 F.2d 622 (Ct.Cl. 1973).

SUMMARY

The Government's Motion for Summary Judgment is partially granted as to ASBCA No. 36034 in accordance with the foregoing and denied in ASBCA No. 37842. ASBCA No. 36035 is consolidated with ASBCA No. 37842 and ASBCA No. 36035 is stricken from the docket and all documents in that docket are transferred to and become part of ASBCA No. 37842. The matter is remanded to the parties for negotiation of any remaining amounts in accordance with this opinion. In the event the matter has not been resolved within 90 days from the date of this decision, the parties are to inform the Board so that further proceedings can be scheduled.

Mr. DIXON. It goes in the RECORD, but it shows a lot of time has been spent and a lot of lawyers and judges and others have looked at this already.

I shall read one more thing the Air Force advised me about on the question of time and reasonableness here: I am told by the Air Force that Shipco had problems getting the units to pass final inspection that they were doing, and Shipco in an attempt to set a delivery schedule offered to deliver 10 houses a day. That is the Air Force's side of it.

The Government indicated that the delivery schedule of that kind was unrealistic and Shipco would not be able to do it. The Air Force contends it reduced it to two houses per day and the contract was formally modified to include this two-houses-per-day schedule and the Air Force says Shipco could not meet that and the Government finally terminated the contract for default.

Mr. SYMMS. Will the Senator yield for a question on that one point?

Mr. DIXON. I will, except I do not know the facts other than what I read off that printed page. I admit that.

Mr. SYMMS. If I could say this and then I will speak. I do not want to interrupt my friend from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. I do not mind the Senator interrupting.

Mr. SYMMS. I make one point. All the details my good friend bring out now are totally irrelevant because the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals has already stated the reason this contract was defaulted was because of convenience for the Government. It was not because of default of the work. That was the rule. Those details are irrelevant.

Mr. DIXON. I thank the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. President, he has gone right to the heart of it.

The next thing I wanted to read was this. Here is what the Air Force says in direct answer to that point. ASBCA is the board that heard this.

The ASBCA rejected Shipco's primary arguments that the Government had overinspected the work and had failed to make progress payments. However, the ASBCA ruled that the two-houses-per-day modification was not supported by consideration, notwithstanding the fact that Shipco itself had proposed a ten-house-per-day delivery schedule. Based on this narrow, legal technicality, the ASBCA converted the default termination into a termination for convenience. Shipco General, Inc., ASBCA Nos. 29206, 29942, 86-2 BCA ¶ 18,973

Then the Air Force goes on to say:

Shipco then filed an application for attorney's fees under the Equal Access to Justice

Act, . . . which entitles prevailing parties to attorney's fees unless the Government's position was substantially justified or special circumstances make an award unjust. The ASBCA ruled that the Government's position in terminating the Shipco contract for default was substantially justified. Shipco General, Inc., ASBCA Nos. 29206 and 29942, 87-2 BCA ¶ 19,877. At the time of this decision, the "substantial justification" test meant that the Government's position had to be more than reasonable. Accordingly, the ASBCA stated: "However, we conclude, based on the particular facts present in the appeal, that the Government's position in ASBCA No. 29206 (the termination for default) was more than reasonable, and, therefore, was substantially justified within the meaning of the Equal Access to Justice Act."

Mr. McCLURE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. McCLURE. Is the Senator trying to read that section on the basis to indicate that the Board of Contract Appeals did not set aside their determination and the Air Force determination was a defaulted contract rather than a convenience of the Government? Is that the purpose for reading that section?

Mr. DIXON. No; my purpose for reading that section is they found that the convenience part, while appropriate, did not, notwithstanding that, allow attorneys' fees or anything for Shipco and that the Government acted reasonably.

Mr. McCLURE. If the Senator will yield further. Let us be very careful when reading that to say that it said they were not entitled to attorneys' fees. It did not say "or anything."

Mr. DIXON. I did not mean to say "or anything." I do not think I said that.

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator did say that. I just want to make the point that the finding with respect to the Equal Access to Justice Act has nothing to do at all with the determination that it was wrongful to have terminated for fault, and it was only correct to characterize the termination as convenience of the Government and not for default of the Government.

That language has nothing to do and can have nothing to do with the finding of the Board of Contract Appeals that the termination was not for default of the contract. Am I not correct?

Mr. DIXON. I guess in answer to the Senator's question, let me tell you what this Senator is saying, may I say to my dear friend for whom I have the highest personal regard. I am not saying anything about this dispute, about who is right, because I do not know. I have never been there. I do not know anybody at Shipco. I never sat down with the Air Force and walked through this. I have never gone to New Mexico and looked at where they are building the buildings. I do not pretend to come here and know anything.

The only thing I am saying here, as a lawyer in my other life and still am, and as a Senator, I can read that this thing is in litigation. It has been tried at the administrative level where we created a law in the Congress saying it ought to be tried, parts on appeal, parts down with the board still being disputed, under a direction to make two decisions of factural questions there, much as you make a decision in a court of a factual thing, applying the law to the facts. The whole thing is in dispute.

All I am saying is the facts. I do not have any personal argument with anything the Senator from Idaho or his colleague may say here, and would probably rather be in another place than here in this argument. All I am trying to say is the supplemental appropriation bill in question, H.R. 4404, is not the place to be solving this.

I do not have any problem with my colleagues accommodating the thing in committee. I was not there and did not know about it. I am just saying it does not belong on this bill. That is all I am saying.

In that regard, I think the Air Force is right; Not on the dispute itself. The Air Force may be wrong on the dispute. The Supreme Court may later make the Air Force pay more than the $7 million floor my friend from Idaho suggests, the bottom number, with the top being $29 million. But I do not know what the number is and I do not believe this is the place to determine it. That is all this Senator is saying.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, it is certainly not this Senator's wish to have to be here on the floor to take issue with my good friend with whom I came to the Senate from the State of Illinois. I think he knows my admiration and respect for him. I had the privilege to work with him on the Armed Services Committee for the 2-year period that I spent on that committee. I must say that it was 2 years that I truly enjoyed in the Senate, being a part of the Armed Services Committee.

But I want to say every Senator has a dog in this fight. The reason we have a Defense Department is to defend individuals against tyranny and government oppression.

There has been a terrible wrong, in my opinion, against Shipco and the people that own Shipco. It has decimated the livelihood of a family. And it has been determined by the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals that the Air Force did terminate the contract for the convenience of the Government.

Now I do not know exactly what happened. I have suspected that the Air Force wanted some other contractor besides Shipco to continue to do that work. They could find no default. Senator McCLURE made the case very well here and I hope Senators will follow it carefully. Shipco had done numerous jobs for the Air Force on military bases that had all been satisfactory and where there had been no problems.

Every Senator has a dog in this fight because we are talking about an individual that in my opinion has been wronged. I think the case was made. I will not go back over the case. I urge my colleagues if they are not here, if their staffs will please tune in, get the RECORD, see what Senator McCLURE stated.

I think it is no secret here in the chamber that the Air Force is probably one of this Senator's favorite bureaus. But I want to tell my colleagues if it were the IRS treating a citizen this way, Senators would be outraged. The Air Force is a very popular bureau with most people in this country. But if it were the IRS or some other agency that is less popular, there would be outrage around the Senate floor because of the way this company had been wronged by a giant Government bureaucracy.

There are a few things that disappoint me. I thought this morning that we might have had some kind of an agreement. The senior Senator from my State and I met in the Secretary's office this morning with the Secretary and others. It was my understanding if we had something that only affected Shipco, was not precedent setting, and did not take funds out of operations and maintenance, that it would not be opposed.

I think that was a good-faith understanding, and I do not fault those involved for changing their position because I think since that time other parties have entered the fray. But I had a very good friend of mine who used to be in the military. He told me one time that the Defense Department has too many lawyers and not enough warriors.

So what happens is they have a lot of lawyers interfering, and pure and simple justice will be denied on the basis of a rigid legal interpretation by a faceless bureaucracy. Poor little old Shipco; it is just too bad, fellows. We are washing our hands of it. We cannot set any kind of precedent just to keep one company from going under.

So because of the chintziness, if you will, of the Federal Government for the short term, they will suffer in the long term over this in more ways than one.

One reason is this drives the small entrepreneurs out of the business of Government contracting, period. How can people compete with this? How can they stand this? How can a small individual stand up against the Government?

They wait, they wait, they wait while the Government carries on without penalty or loss. The contracting officer who started this dispute in Kirtland Air Force Base, for all I know, has retired from the Air Force now and is drawing a pension. And I do not begrudge him the pension.

But I want to make the case, in the meantime, Shipco's owners have been badly wronged. What we want is a solution. It may be unfortunate it has to be debated on the Senate floor, but it seems to me this is the last recourse.

If the Air Force is going to oppose the private relief bill, if they are going to oppose the report language that Senator MCCLURE inserted in the report last year, if they are going to oppose the amendment this year, what they are really saying is they oppose any settlement of the Shipco case.

In my opinion, this is wrong. It is poor policy. We should not condone it. And we should not necessarily just bow down and take it, as Members of the U.S. Senate, from the bureaucracy.

Set aside that this happens to be a very popular bureaucracy, the United States Air Force. Set that aside and think back about the rights of these individuals.

They have been bankrupted. They have lost their money, their equipment, their bonding capacity. The family has suffered terribly; the very home in which the family lives may soon be lost, all because the Air Force refused payment. It has had a direct impact on where we are today.

The Air Force has refused payment and created a whole series of events that have led to the bankruptcy, the insolvency, and the destruction of some very fine people.

Mr. President, I know of no more that needs to be said. I think Senator MCCLURE, my senior colleague, has outlined this as clearly as is possible, and my colleague from Illinois has presented the Air Force's point of view.

I want to go back and repeat one thing that I think is very important. If the contract had been terminated for convenience rather than default at the outset, Shipco could have paid off all its liabilities. The company would not be in the situation it is in today and my colleague and I would not be here on this floor.

What happened here is a giant, faceless bureaucracy kind of pushed this aside, and 3 years the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals determined the termination was strictly for convenience of the Government. I think that is a very important point.

It has now been 7 years since this all started.

My senior colleague made it very clear. We do not know how much is just. What is a person's life worth? Those are questions that are difficult to answer. I hope my colleagues will not support the Dixon amendment. I hope they will keep the bill as the Appropriations Committee had thought that it should be. It appears there is going to be opposition. We thought we had worked out substitute language. But I personally can see no point to offering it now. Either we are going to help right what I consider to be a wrong, or we are going to turn our backs on it, wash our hands of it, hope the problem goes away and hope that a lot of small contractors do not find out about cases like this, so they will continue to bid, so the Government can get competitive bids on the projects that they do, so the taxpayers can be properly treated.

Mr. President, this is strictly a case of a very rigid, unrelenting, patient bureaucracy running roughshod over a single individual from my State, and I must say I resent it greatly. I am disappointed, to say the least, that we have been unable to get some kind of a resolution out of this that seems to be just and fair.

I have to say also I can understand better some of the complaints my constituents have been making to me recently with respect to the seeming inflexibility of the Air Force in handling other matters in the State.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. MCCLURE. Mr. President, I will once again appeal to our colleagues not to vote for the Dixon amendment. I do not think either my colleague or I have taken great pleasure in the hours and hours of time we spent trying to get a resolution of this problem over the months and now years of time that we have been working with it.

I do not think we really relish the idea of coming to the floor of the Senate and asking our colleagues to involve themselves in the plea of one small contractor for justice.

It has been suggested that the amendment is imperfect. My colleague has made reference to the fact that we, this morning, negotiated—I should not say negotiated; we had a conversation with the Secretary of the Air Force. And with General Moore, the head of congressional relations. And with the chief counsel for the Air Force.

We were trying to find a way in which we could state this so that they would not find the objection they have found and asked the Senator from Illinois to raise on their behalf.

I thought, as my colleagues had recited, that we, perhaps, had found something which in good faith would permit them to withdraw their objection at this time. My understanding is that they have not so communicated with the Senator from Illinois.

But I will say to my colleagues, if indeed we find a better way to solve this problem than is the language contained in this amendment, and we can get an agreement on it before the conference on this bill is completed, I for one will be very happy to substitute a better solution for the one outlined here.

I do not mean to be boring in repetition, but after the weeks and months and years of effort to bring this to a resolution, I have found no other solution that promises the equitable relief which one small outfit seeks and deserves.

I hope the amendment is rejected, and again I will reiterate, if a better solution is found between this time and the time this conference on this bill with the other body is completed, and we can apply that better solution, I, for one, would applaud and embrace that better solution.

But pending that and until such event, it is my hope that the Senate will support the action taken in the Appropriations Committee, at subcomittee and full committee level, and presented to the Senate in the form of the committee amendment, which has heretofore been adopted by the full Senate. I yield the floor.

Mr. DIXON. I yield the floor, Mr. President. As I understand the previous order, Mr. President, this amendment will come up for a vote in the schedule at 7 o'clock in its order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not believe that is the order. I do not believe the order sets the first vote at 7. I believe the order sets it at not before 7. I am not sure that the order that was entered sets forth the order in which the votes shall occur.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will vote on the amendment now unless it is set aside by consent.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I am happy to set it aside until later. I do not mind voting on it now, but I thought there was some kind of an understanding we were not going to vote until 7. I am obviously here, but I am suspicious that some of my colleagues may not be, and I would not want to inconvenience anyone.

If I may respectfully inquire of the Chair, what happened to the Wirth amendment that I debated with others earlier? When is that going to be considered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All of those amendments were set aside by consent. There was an informal understanding that there would be no votes until 7 p.m.

Mr. DIXON. I am willing to set mine aside by unanimous consent and go along with whatever procedure the distinguished leaders and my friend, the distinguished President pro tempore and chairman of the Appropriations Committee, may ultimately resolve be the correct procedure.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the majority leader at some point during the afternoon, I am sure, will take the floor and attempt to get an order that would place the votes in whatever sequence he may at that time wish to have the order state. At this point I cannot find the language in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD pertaining to the agreement. It does not show up on the calendar precisely with respect to the points that have been raised here. But for now I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on page S5195 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 27 the majority leader is quoted in part as follows:

> It is my intention that the votes on these amendments that may be ordered on Monday not occur prior to 7 p.m.; that if the times follow approximately as anticipated—and obviously it will not occur precisely as we anticipate—that by about 7 we should be ready to vote on all of these amendments.
> Therefore, Senators should be aware that on Monday evening, beginning at 7 p.m., there could be as many as 10 votes, since there are eight amendments with two possible second-degree amendments to them. So Senators should be aware of that and make their plans accordingly.

The agreement itself that was entered into does not specificate at all with respect to the voting on the amendments or with respect to the time when the votes will begin. It is my understanding that the majority leader will at some point in the afternoon seek to sequence the amendments and indicate as to when the time for voting will begin. That will remain to be ordered by the Senate.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have a technical amendment which I ask unanimous consent may be in order for me to bring up at this time with the understanding that no more than 4 minutes would be utilized on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1556

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], proposes an amendment numbered 1556.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

> On page 7, strike out all on line 20 and insert in lieu thereof: "government of the Republic of Lithuania in Vilnius."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this technical amendment seeks to avoid any confusion over existing United States policy concerning the Baltic nations. We all know that for the last 50 years the United States has steadfastly refused to recognize the illegal Soviet occupation of the Baltic nations. During these five decades we have also continued to host diplomatic legations in Washington, DC. Those legations are the remnants of the preoccupation governments of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia. By maintaining that relationship, the United States has continued to recognize the existence of the nation-state of Lithuania, even though the Soviets have been in de facto control of Lithuanian territory and the government there.

Unfortunately, the current committee language does not make that distinction clearly enough. The provision, in providing money for the President to use at his discretion, reads as follows:

> That such property as may be necessary shall be leased or purchased and diplomatic and other personnel be assigned to Lithuania as soon as possible if the United States formally recognizes the independent nation-state status of the Republic of Lithuania.

The amendment changes the phrase "independent nation-state status of the Republic of Lithuania," to read "independent government of the Republic of Lithuania in Vilnius." This may not seem like an important change, but I am told that in the jargon of diplomatic recognition it is substantial. The United States has continued for 50 years to recognize the nation-state status of Lithuania; it is the new Government in Vilnius that lacks diplomatic recognition. This modification correctly states the existing situation.

Mr. HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. With respect to the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, and the Commerce Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, on the Republican side of the aisle, we are prepared for this technical amendment that the Chair offers at this time. We support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment (No. 1556) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KOHL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

AMENDMENT NO. 1557

(Purpose: To increase appropriations for the School Dropout Demonstration Assistance Act of 1988)

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, in behalf of myself, Senators PELL, KENNEDY, MCCONNELL, WILSON, LEVIN, NICKLES, SHELBY, LIEBERMAN, BIDEN, SIMON, KASTEN, DODD, HOLLINGS, ROTH, HATFIELD, SPECTER, BOREN, FORD, HEINZ, and BENTSEN, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL], for himself, Mr. PELL, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. WILSON, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. SIMON, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. DODD, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. ROTH, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. BOREN, Mr. FORD, Mr. HEINZ, and Mr. BENTSEN, proposes an amendment numbered 1557.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

> On page 37, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:
> SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS
> (INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)
> For an additional amount for "School Improvement Programs," $19,945,000, to remain available until September 30, 1991, for continued funding of existing dropout prevention demonstration projects funded in 1989, as authorized by title VI-A of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as amended: Provided, That $2,400,000 of the amount provided herein shall be derived by transfer from funds appropriated in Public Law 100-436 for part E, section 465, of the Higher Education Act, as amended.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I do not plan to take much of the Senate's time this afternoon. Briefly, this amendment will provide $19,945,000 for fiscal year 1990 to continue funding of existing dropout prevention demonstration projects funded in 1989. Without this appropriation school dropout programs in 31 States will cease this summer, and there will be no funding for the academic year beginning in September.

I will not elaborate on the need to prevent kids from dropping out of school. It is something on which I think we can all agree. As Secretary Cavazos recently stated:

> We are suffering from an education deficit far more threatening to the economic health and well-being of many Americans than the more publicized budget and trade deficits.

My amendment is one means of fighting this education deficit and meeting the domestic emergency facing the United States.

Mr. President, the offset for this amendment is acceptable to the administration. Indeed, it was developed with their cooperation appropriately scored by CBO and cleared by the Budget Committee. The offset would be obtained from surplus funds that are available for cancellation payments under the Perkins loan program for certain public service careers.

As I indicated to my colleagues last week, I would have preferred to not have to transfer money from one education account to another. But my understanding from the Department of Education is that requirements for these payments have been declining each year. Using $2.4 million of these surplus funds for an offset will not curtail or eliminate any activities or have any effect whatsoever on any programs or recipients.

Mr. President, let me conclude by thanking my colleagues for their help in working through this amendment. I want to express my appreciation to Senators HARKIN and SPECTER, as well as the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member, of the Appropriations Committee.

I also want to thank my cosponsors and apologize to one of them in particular, Senator LEVIN, whose name was inadvertently omitted when I filed the amendment last Thursday. Senator LEVIN has played a key role in focusing attention on this problem.

I also express my appreciation to Senators MCCONNELL, WILSON, NICKLES, KASTEN, HATFIELD, ROTH, and HEINZ, who have joined in this truly bipartisan effort; also to staff on the Senate Labor Committee, particularly Amanda Broun and Ann Young, who have been very helpful in the development of this amendment.

Mr. President, this year alone, projections tell us that over 650,000 American students will drop out of school. Approximately 8,300 of those students live in my home State of Wisconsin. Today, as we consider this bill, over 1,000 teenagers will drop out of high school, according to the Children's Defense Fund. We can expect these numbers to increase if we don't provide the economic resources for dropout programs.

The futures of high school dropouts are not particularly bright. More than a third of all high school dropouts cannot find work when they leave school. And when they do—it's usually temporary work. Eighty-six percent of all newly created jobs will require at least 4 years of high school or more. Today's and tomorrow's jobs require basic workplace skills: reading, writing, and computation skills. I believe these skills are better taught in the classroom than on the job site. As a businessman, I understand the burden of having an employee who cannot read an inventory sheet. The Commission on Workplace Quality reports that 1 out of 10 17-year-olds is functionally illiterate. How can we expect to address the needs of these kids—if they are not in school?

Yet there are individuals, agencies, schools, and others who are working to resolve this crisis. We in Congress have a responsibility to provide funds to meet the goals set by the President and the Nation's Governors for increasing the high school graduation rate.

In Wisconsin, we have three programs working to increase the graduation rate by preventing kids from dropping out of high school. The first is through the Lac du Flambeau tribe, the second through the Milwaukee Area Technical College, and the third through the Milwaukee public schools. The Milwaukee public schools have set up a demonstration project in eight elementary schools. Their comprehensive curriculum includes 100 activities at each grade level. These activities address areas of personal and social development critical to children "at risk" of dropping out of school. In addition, the program provides troubled students and their families with educational materials on alcohol and drug prevention.

Another project, run by the Milwaukee Area Technical College, is called "Project Hold." This program has helped over 800 teenage students return to school by helping them recognize the importance of a high school education. Consequently, these efforts have led to the awarding of a high school diploma or equivalent to over 74 percent of its students. The success at MATC does not stop here. Over 50 percent of these students have gone on to postsecondary education. Without this amendment, these projects—and similar projects in 31 States—would be eliminated.

We must continue to raise the high school graduation rate above the current 71 percent figure. There should be very little discussion in the Senate Chamber on whether or not we provide adequate funding for this program. It is essential that we act immediately to ensure continuation of these programs which are succeeding in their efforts to raise the Nation's high school graduation rate, and I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I strongly support the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL]. Over 750,000 American students will drop out of school this year. They will have many reasons for doing so, including poor teachers, broken homes, devastated communities, poverty, drug use, and the need to go to work. Whatever the cause, their decision is a tragedy for them and for the Nation.

These dropouts—along with the other 4.2 million young adults who have no high school diplomas—will have a higher rate of unemployment, greater dependency on social welfare programs, and lower income—22 percent lower than that of the average high school graduate. They represent a significant loss for the Nation in terms of the contribution to our national well-being that they will be unable to make.

A report recently issued by the Department of Education shows that 28 percent of our Nation's 18 and 19 year olds have not graduated from high school. The figures are even higher for minorities: 42 percent of black and 52 percent of Hispanic 18 and 19 year olds failed to gradute. If we consider 20 and 21 year olds, the figures look slightly better, but are still too high: 15 percent of whites and 18 percent of black 20 and 21 year olds have not graduated. The number for Hispanics remains intolerable: 45 percent have not graduated.

The report is encouraging in that it shows the gap between black and white dropout rates has narrowed significantly in the last decade. This improvement points to the effectiveness of Federal and local education programs targeted at this population.

Nonetheless, dropout rates—especially the high levels for Hispanics and even higher levels for native Americans—continue to be grossly unacceptable. In my own State of Massachusetts, black students continue to drop out at twice the rate of whites, while Hispanic students drop out at three times the rate of whites.

As part of the national education goals endorsed in January by the Governors and the President, we agreed to raise the graduation rate of high school students to 90 percent by the year 2000. The amendment offered by Mr. KOHL would provide funds for the only Federal program specifically designed to stem the tide of school dropouts. This program is vitally important if we are serious about reaching our goal.

In 1987, Congress passed the School Dropout Prevention Demonstration Act, resulting in $45.6 million in grants over 2 years to local educational agencies, community-based organizations, and private/public partnerships for the development of innovative ways to keep students in school. These methods range from early intervention services for first and second graders to transition programs that help dropouts return to school.

Many of these programs have had notable success. In rural Illinois, Operation Rebound provides transportation, private tutors, and counseling for at-risk students and one-time dropouts who might not otherwise graduate or make the transition back to school. Half of the 300 students served each year go on to higher education.

In Massachusetts, the Cambridge public schools have used their grant to bring social workers and psychologists into 10 schools to work with at-risk students, their families, teachers, and school administrators. Federal funds have also allowed them to hire translators so that teachers can work more closely with parents of Hispanics, Portuguese, and Haitian students.

In Portland, OR, School District No. 1 helps at-risk students through a combination of six programs—drug and alcohol counseling, parent outreach, peer counseling, attendance monitoring, transition services for return students, and a student service center. After only 2 years, the freshman dropout rate has fallen 10 percent.

Through these and other dropout programs, we can help our students and our Nation. At the same time we can acquire better information on how to prevent dropouts. With the data and information generated from this program, we will make major strides in understanding the problems that lead students to drop out and identifying concrete steps to address this crisis.

The action we are taking today would provide funds for the program to continue in the next school year. The President has requested $45 million for the program in 1991. Today's amendment would avoid what would otherwise be a gap in funding between 1989 and 1991.

This modest investment will yield high returns: The Chicago public schools estimate that for each dollar we invest in dropout prevention, we will receive $12 in increased tax revenues and lowered social welfare costs and crime. This kind of investment speaks for itself.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this amendment.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am very pleased to be joining Senators KOHL and KENNEDY in offering this amendment to provide $21 million for the continuation of the School Dropout Demonstration Assistance Act. As the author of both the original act and its reauthorization, I place a very high priority on this program. This is the Federal Government's only effort devoted solely to reducing the Nation's high and most alarming rate of school dropouts.

It funds innovative approaches to attacking the very serious dropout problem that pervades American education. In its short period of existence, it has worked and worked well. This is no time to interrupt funding.

In fiscal year 1989, this program received $21.7 million in appropriations. For fiscal year 1991, the administration has requested a $45 million appropriation. However, no dollars have been appropriated for fiscal year 1990. Without fiscal allocations for fiscal year 1990, current successful projects will have to close their doors by the end of this school year. This disruption will permanently terminate many successful projects. Other projects will be greatly weakened. Either way, it will be to the detriment of students, parents, and communities.

The Dropout Assistance Act currently provides grants to 88 projects in 32 States. These include projects in Iowa, Oregon, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Texas, California, Kentucky, and Georgia to name but a few.

We also have a highly successful project in Providence, RI. This project, the Providence Dropout Collaborative, was formed as a partnership between the Urban Field Center of the University of Rhode Island and the Providence School System. It has brought together the collaborative efforts of the school system, business, community-based organizations, and parents. The program, I am very pleased to report, is making solid headway. It has been able to reduce the dropout rate in Providence from 50 to 42 percent. This success, I know, is mirrored in the 88 other projects throughout the Nation. We must continue this progress.

Building a world-class work force requires us to call upon the full talents of every member of our society. The need to strengthen our competitiveness in the international market demands nothing less. We must keep our students in school and ensure that time spent there is productive. Otherwise, these school dropouts will be an endless drain on our economy. They will either be unemployed and require direct Federal and State assistance, or they will be permanently held to low-skill, low-paying jobs that offer little hope of expanding our national productivity and economic growth. It is both wrong and unwise to let our Nation lose ground in the global economy because high-skilled jobs go unfilled while unskilled workers remain unemployed.

The administration's budget request for the School Dropout Program is a recognition of the urgency of combating the dropout problem. The President's voice is a welcome addition to what we have been saying for many years. I am greatly concerned, however, that just when there is strong support from the White House, we in Congress might fail to take the action I believe so necessary in this area.

For over 25 years our Nation's dropout rate has been a consistent 25 percent. Among minorities in our major cities, it reaches as high as 80 percent. This is a situation we have finally begun to address on the national level, and we simply cannot afford a halt in the progress we are making.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment to provide uninterrupted funding for the School Dropout Demonstration Program.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I would not think we need a rollcall vote on this amendment unless that is desirable to another Member.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared on this side. I do not believe it will require a rollcall vote. Senator HARKIN, chairman of the Labor-HHS Education Subcommittee, supports the amendment, and has no objection to it. Senator HATFIELD is here, and he will speak to the wishes of Mr. SPECTER, the ranking member.

The amendment does have an offset and it is deficit neutral. As Senator KOHL has explained, this amendment extends 1989 dropout demonstrations that now exist in 31 States and the District of Columbia. These demonstrations expire on August 31, 1990, and the amendment will extend them until September 30, 1991.

As the Dropout Demonstration Program receives no funding in fiscal year 1990, this amendment is necessary to extend these demonstrations for 1 year, when we expect the fiscal year 1991 funds will be available against which they can compete. The offset comes from surplus funds available from the teacher cancellation payment under the Perkins Loan Program.

I commend the distinguished Senator and his fellow cosponsors in offering the amendment on my side. I am prepared to accept the amendment, and hope that the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANFORD). The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I am happy to join with my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL], in cosponsoring this particular amendment. I think Senator KOHL has put his finger on one of the most tragic of all of our educational problems of which we have too many; that is, the dropout. I know of nothing that creates a greater and more potent candidacy for delinquency and difficulties than the school dropout. So it is not just a matter of the loss of the educational experience for the individual but it is the impact upon the family, the community, and the country.

I might say we have had two such projects in operation in our State; one in the metropolitan area of Sheridan where we have had special emphasis on the middle school level, although it has covered everything from kindergarten through the 12th grade. We have had substantial and very definite success in this program of monitoring, and counseling, and all things that go in to make up the program. This Senator is urging our support for it.

We have another program in a more rural setting. There we have had an almost unbelievable phenomenal success in returning to the classroom and for graduating 482 out of 484 students over a 5-year period. As I say, nobody believes it hardly when they see what has happened here, unless they know the detail and the reasons behind it.

So I commend the Senator. We certainly can testify from our State about the cost-benefit ratio, and the cost effectiveness of this program.

Mr. President, I rise to support the efforts of my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL] to extend funding for the National School Dropout Demonstration Program for fiscal year 1990.

Congress authorized this program as part of the Hawkins-Stafford School Improvement Amendments of 1988 in order to address the growing national problem of school dropouts. Two-year grants were awarded to support local efforts to keep our elementary and secondary students in school to complete their education.

This immensely popular program, which prompted 852 applications for funds to the Department of Education in 1988, is currently in place in 89 communities. Local educators and community organizations across the country are identifying potential dropouts and preventing them from leaving school, encouraging reentry into school, and assisting at-risk students in the elementary and secondary grades. These functions could not be more vital.

Yet the continued funding of this program is in jeopardy. While both the House and Senate have passed reauthorization legislation, it was not done in time for the fiscal year 1990 appropriations process. Therefore, funding for these programs is due to expire shortly. It is my belief that we must continue our commitment to decrease the high number of school dropouts in this country.

In my State, Mr. President, two dropout demonstration programs are currently operating—one in the Portland public school district and one at the West Valley Academy in Sheridan, OR. Let me briefly share with my colleagues, the tremendous work of these two programs.

In Portland, funds have been used to develop a cluster plan to serve students at risk of dropping out of school in kindergarten through 12th grade, with a special emphasis on middle and high school students. The project has enhanced the coordination of in-school services, attendance monitoring, peer counseling, and prevention of the use of drugs and alcohol. During the last 2 years, this effort has yielded a substantial decrease in dropouts, particularly in the ninth grade where students have been served both in middle school and in high school.

West Valley Academy in Sheridan, which has been in existence for 5 years, has successfully graduated or returned to their home public school setting, 482 out of 484 students. This remarkable record has been accomplished by creating a family setting which nurtures these troubled youngsters in every sense of the word.

The at-risk children admitted to West Valley Academy first undergo extensive evaluation and are then placed with the teacher who seems to best meet the particular student's specific needs. Compassion, love, and personal support are designed to enhance each student's self-image. Until their emotional state of mind and self-concept is stabilized, these children will be destined to fail.

Clearly, both of these extraordinary programs need to be replicated and enhanced. Through additional Federal funds in fiscal year 1990, our Nation can continue to make an investment that will pay incredible dividends.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise in support of extending funds for the National School Dropout Demonstration Program for fiscal year 1990.

The main purpose of the program is to support local efforts to keep our elementary and secondary students in school to complete their education. Local educators and community organizations across the country are identifying potential dropouts and preventing them from leaving school, encouraging reentry into school, and assisting at-risk students in the elementary and secondary grades.

Mr. President, in my State, three dropout demonstration programs are currently operating—the Milwaukee Area Technical College, the Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewa Indians, and the Milwaukee public schools. These projects, along with 86 other programs across the country, will be required to close their doors at the end of the school year if funding is not continued.

While both the House and Senate have passed reauthorization legislation, it was not done in time for the fiscal year 1990 appropriation process. Therefore, funding for these programs will expire in August. Mr. President, it is important that we continue our commitment to decrease the high number of school dropouts in this country.

It is essential that we continue to support a dropout program that is working. I stand committed to working toward education programs that enhance our chance of success in the future—and that is why I support this amendment.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I would like to thank Senators BYRD and HATFIELD for their support, and I would also like to request that Senator SIMPSON be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. WILSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, approximately 25 percent of America's graduating class of 1990 will not be in a cap and gown and march down the aisle. Instead of the diploma, they can look forward to receiving perhaps a welfare check, perhaps a low-paying, menial job, or, unhappily, some all too many will be lured into joining a drug gang and for their pains may have a short, glamorous life that ends with a bullet in the head.

They have not the prospect of real opportunity before them. That has been short cut, tragically. This Nation cannot afford to lose that talent. It is not fair to those kids; it is really not fair to the rest of us. The cost to society both in economic terms and in terms of the lost potential, the productivity, the energy that our society requires, compel us to do all that we can to see to it that each one of them stays in school and leaves it as a graduate, fully prepared for the challenges of the future.

Congress recently reauthorized the School Dropout Demonstration Assistance Act to do just that, to help students stay in school and to complete their education. Never has that been more on point; never has the need been greater. Virtually every day we use the phrase "competition in the global marketplace." Well, it is a global marketplace, and it is increasingly competitive. Our youngsters must stay in school and must at least have the basic skills of communication, the rudimentary knowledge of math and science that are demanded at a minimum by the job market.

Unfortunately, because the act had not been reauthorized prior to the fiscal year 1990 appropriations process, Congress did not include funding for the dropout assistance program in the fiscal year 1990 education appropriations bill. So without an emergency appropriation, the Department of Education will be unable to sustain current grant awards, denying service of the kind that this amendment provides for the at-risk youth in 31 States. Mine is one. California alone stands to lose close to $2 million in dropout assistance in six separate school districts. That is why I commend the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL], and join with him and others in offering this amendment to the urgent supplemental appropriations bill, to provide that necessary support to keep current grantees funded.

The offset included in the amendment does meet with the approval of the Department of Education. So, Mr. President, it is as simple as this: If we want to avoid an enormous and tragic loss, if we want to prevent incalculable human suffering that is in fact avoidable, if we want to save significant public expenditures that we will otherwise have to make in a remedial sense, and not a very cost-effective way either, if we want in short to maintain a highly skilled work force, and young people who are prepared not just for the workplace, but for citizenship, then we must keep them in school, and the Senate must support our amendment. It is that simple, Mr. President.

I commend my friend from Wisconsin, and I urge my colleagues to join with him in passing this necessary amendment. I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Mr. KOHL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KOHL. I want to thank Senator WILSON for his support.

SCHOOL DROPOUT PREVENTION DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise in support of this amendment providing continued funding to the School Dropout Prevention Demonstration Program. This amendment will ensure that the temporary lapse in the authorization of the school dropout program does not force those programs to lay off staff and strand their participants, even temporarily. It would be ironic and tragic if those programs which have shown success so far in developing innovative approaches to the dropout problem are jeopardized because the Federal Government "drops out" in terms of its support for the efforts.

Eighty percent of all prison inmates are high school dropouts. This suggests that if we can keep more kids in school, we can keep more kids out of prison. Our Nation's schools are desperately in need of help in finding innovative solutions to this problem. This is true especially in the inner city. The Chicago Public Schools have a dropout rate of 43 percent, nearly three times the national average. The dropout rate is as high as 80 percent for Hispanic students in some urban areas of the country.

In 1984, the President set out a goal of raising the high school graduation rate to 90 percent by the year 2000. President Bush and the Nation's Governors recently established the same goal for the Nation. In the intervening 6 years between the two goal-setting processes, there was no significant progress on this problem. Unless we help schools find effective ways of stemming the tide of dropouts, the next 10 years will once again show little progress on meeting the Nation's goal.

By funding innovative demonstration programs, the School Dropout Prevention Demonstration Program helps schools test and prove a variety of approaches to keeping at-risk students in school. The demand for funding demonstrates the need for the program: In fiscal year 1988, there were 850 applicants, but only about 10 percent of those applications could be funded with the $21 million available.

Mr. President, it is essential that we find effective solutions to the dropout program. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment to the supplemental appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment (No. 1557) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I have three technical amendments, Mr. President, of which the distinguished ranking member, Mr. HATFIELD, is aware. I ask unanimous consent that I may offer these three amendments at this time, and that the pending amendments be set aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1558

(Purpose: To correct drafting errors in the Vaccine Compensation Act)

Mr. BYRD. I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Mr. BUMPERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for Mr. BUMPERS, proposes an amendment numbered 1558.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. SECTION 1, TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.

(a) SECTION 2111.—Section 2111 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300aa-11) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(5)(A), by striking out "without prejudice" the second time it occurs,

(2) in subsection (d), by striking "(d) except as provided in paragraph (3)," before "(d) ADDITIONAL INFORMATION", and

(3) in subsection (e), by striking "(e)" before "(e) SCHEDULE".

(b) SECTION 2113.—Section 2113(c) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300aa-13(c)) is amended by inserting "the" after "special masters of".

(c) SECTION 2115.—Section 2115 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C 300aa-15) is amended—

(1) in subsection (e)(2), by striking, out "the Program," the second time it occurs and all that follows through "limited to the costs" and inserting the following: "the Program, in awarding compensation on such petition the special master or court may include an amount of compensation limited to the costs",

(2) in subsection (f)—

(A) in paragraph (2), in the second sentence, by striking out "section 2121(b)" and inserting "section 2121(a)", and

(B) in paragraph (4)(B), in the last sentence, by striking out "subsection (i)" and inserting "subsection (j)", and

(3) in subsection (j), by inserting "and" after "1992,".

(d) SECTION 2121.—The last sentence of section 2121(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300aa-21(a)) is amended to read as follows: "If a person elects to receive compensation under a judgment of the court or is deemed to have accepted the judgment of the court, such person may not bring or maintain a civil action for damages against a vaccine administrator or manufacturer for the vaccine-related injury or death for which the judgment was entered.".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATES.

The amendment made by section 1(d) shall take effect as if such amendment had been included in section 6601(n) of Public Law 101-239. The amendments otherwise made by this Act shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. BYRD. The proposed amendment corrects drafting errors in provisions of the fiscal year 1990 Budget Reconciliation Act (Public Law 100-239) which relate to the Vaccine Injury Compensation Act. The Vaccine Injury Act, includes provisions to establish a trust fund to compensate families of children injured or killed as a result of side effects of childhood vaccines. Unfortunately, when minor changes were made to the Vaccine Injury Compensation Act, one of the drafting errors significantly changed the system, allowing claimants to receive compensation through the compensation system, and still file a civil suit for damages. This result was not intended and is contrary to the original purpose of the Vaccine Compensation Act.

This amendment is technical in nature and ensures that the compensation system functions as originally intended.

The amendment has been cleared by the chairman and ranking member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee and the Appropriations Committee.

I recommend the adoption of the amendment by the Senate.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the amendment has been cleared with respect to the subcommittees on our side, the Republican side. I urge the amendment's adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment (No. 1558) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1559

Mr. BYRD. I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Mr. INOUYE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for Mr. INOUYE, proposes an amendment numbered 1559.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 37 after line 12 insert the following:

SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS

In addition to any other amount provided in this bill for "School Improvement Programs" an additional amount is hereby provided to carry out the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986, $2,038,000: Provided, That $1,698,000 shall be for programs for Indian youth under section 5133 and $340,000 shall be for programs for Hawaiian Natives under section 5134: Provided further, That $494,000 of the total amount provided herein shall be derived by transfer from funds appropriated in Public Law 100-436 for carrying out Public Law 98-524.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, last November the Congress passed the Transportation Appropriations Act which included a comprehensive drug package. For the programs in the Department of Education, the drug package we passed and which is now included in Public Law 101-164 was very specific about how the funds should be allocated. Subsequent to our passage of the drug package, the Congress passed Public Law 101-226, which reauthorized the Drug Free Schools and Community Act Program. This subsequent law changed the allocation of drug free schools funding especially for programs for Indian youth and Hawaiian natives. The Department chose to follow the earmarks included in the appropriations bill, which shortchanged the Indian youth and native Hawaiian programs by a total of $2,038,000. This amendment restores funding to those two subsections of the Drug Free Schools Program so that the amount they receive is identical to the amount intended by Public Law 101-226, the most recent authorizing legislation for this program.

Mr. President, the offset is from a rescission of funds provided 2 years ago for a national conference which has not occurred, and at this time is not likely to occur.

Mr. President, I recommend the adoption of the amendment.

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the supplemental appropriations bill. While there are several important funding provisions contained in this bill to address the urgent and dire needs of domestic and foreign programs, this bill also offers Congress an opportunity to clarify the intent of authorizing language under the Drug Free Schools and Communities Act Amendments of 1989 (Public Law 101-226), and to correct a problem in funding which arose under the Department of Transportation Appropriations Act (Public Law 101-164).

Mr. President, members from both the Select Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources were very disturbed to learn that the Department of Education is ignoring explicit statutory direction as contained in Public Law 101-226. The purpose of these amendments, as enacted on December 12, 1989, was to revise certain programs and to provide direction for new funding increases provided under the fiscal year 1990 Department of Transportation appropriation. Nearly $180 million was added to the Department of Education's budget to address the war on drugs, yet the 1 percent and 0.2 percent increase to be made available to American Indian and native Hawaiian programs respectively was not included in the distribution plan for fiscal year 1990. Fortunately, under the direction and thoughtful consideration of Senator KENNEDY and Senator HATCH, the full set-aside was restored on behalf of American Indian and native Hawaiian programs.

Mr. President, I am offering this amendment to honor the commitments made to American Indian and native Hawaiian students so that their schools and communities can work with them to prevent the spread of alcoholism and drug abuse. This amendment will address the helplessness, hopelessness and despair of alcoholism and drugs which affect Indian communities at rates which exceed the alcohol or drug related morbidity and mortality rates by 3, 5 or as much as 20 times the national average. The adequate and necessary funding offered by this amendment will continue to offer approximately 600,000 Indian youth and 85,000 native Hawaiian youth an opportunity to build their self-esteem, to be proud of their heritage and prevent the spread of alcoholism and drug abuse. The solutions to the problems of alcoholism and substance abuse are within reach, the continuation of the Indian program, under this bill, will provide American Indians, Alaska Natives and native Hawaiians with the Federal resources to continue leveraging other tribal resources to combat the effects of alcohol and drugs in their communities.

Mr. President, I want to thank Senator HARKIN for providing our committee with guidance and support on this amendment.●

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the amendment has been cleared on the Republican side of the aisle. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii.

The amendment (No. 1559) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1560

(Purpose: Technical amendment)

Mr. BYRD. I send a technical amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] proposes an amendment numbered 1560.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 35, line 22, strike out "$8,000,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$31,500,000,".

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this is a technical amendment. It is necessary to reflect action taken by the full committee and simply changes the $8,000,000 figure that appears on page 35, line 22, to $31,500,000. This does not add to the bill as reported by the committee but simply corrects a printing error.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the amendment has been cleared on this side of the aisle. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment (No. 1560) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] for his cooperation in moving these technical amendments along.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I have just gotten to the floor. I do want to apologize to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee because I do not quite understand the sequence that we are in right now.

I was actually in the Chamber on Friday afternoon late when the distinguished majority leader propounded the unanimous-consent agreement. Under that particular agreement propounded on Friday, as I recall, the Senator from Arkansas was to follow the Senator from Wisconsin, Senator KOHL, and I understand that the Kohl amendment now has been agreed to and other technical amendments have been agreed to.

My question, Mr. President, probably to the most distinguished Parliamentarian the Senate has ever known, is, am I losing my right if I wait, say, 30 minutes to offer an amendment, or what is going to be the procedure now until 7 p.m.?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is not losing his right to offer the amendment. He is listed as having an amendment on wetlands but it does not require him to be here in any particular sequence. However, he is here in accordance with the sequence set forth by the majority leader. But he will not lose his right to offer the amendment.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, is there a window of opportunity should I decide to offer the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, the Senator does have that opportunity right now.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I would like to advise the distinguished chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Committee that we are in conference on this amendment. It is possible—I do not say probable—that an agreement can be reached, and I would say that in a very few moments I will try to give the distinguished chairman and the ranking member a "yes" or "no" as to whether the amendment will actually be offered. I just did not want to lose my right. I appreciate the distinguished chairman protecting my right.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I hope that the distinguished Senator will proceed with his conference. And I hope, furthermore, that he is successful in working out an agreement that will ease the labors of the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] and other Senators.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, once again let me respond to the generosity of the distinguished chairman. I would feel very reluctant to proceed with my amendment if the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, Senator CHAFEE, were not in the Chamber because I understand he has reservations about it or at least he did on Friday when we left for the weekend.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, a few moments ago I inquired of the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the Senator from West Virginia, if I would be losing my right to offer the amendment on wetlands if I did not actually offer the amendment at 6 p.m.

I know there was a general unanimous-consent agreement on Friday. Since that time, Mr. President, I am pleased to announce to my colleagues that there is the appearance of an agreement being reached. It is also my understanding that at approximately 6:20 p.m. this evening—that is now 50 minutes from now—several Senators who have been involved in this merging of an agreement and an understanding will appear on the floor for the purpose of a colloquy. So that will take place, depending upon the schedule at that moment, but approximately at 6:20 p.m. we will have a colloquy relative to this agreement.

I must say, we worked through the course of the day with several Senators and their offices. In addition to that, Mr. President, we have worked closely with the White House, OMB, EPA, the Corps of Engineers, the Soil Conservation Service, and other interested agencies that have been involved in the wetlands issue.

So we shall return shortly, approximately at 6:20, to engage in such a colloquy to announce the agreement relative to or resulting from the meetings today.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 1561

(Purpose: To authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to compensate owners of property damaged by forest fires that were permitted to burn out of control)

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON] for himself, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. BURNS, and Mr. BAUCUS, proposes an amendment numbered 1561.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 32, after line 24, insert the following new paragraph:

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS, FOREST SERVICE

The Forest Service is hereby authorized and directed to negotiate, compromise and settle certain claims against the United States resulting from the Mink Fire (Bridger-Teton National Forest and Yellowstone National Park), Clover-Mist Fire (Yellowstone National Park and Shoshone National Forest), Storm Creek Fire (Yellowstone National Park and Gallatin-Custer National Forests), and Canyon Creek Fire (Lolo, Helena, Lewis and Clark National Forests) which were originally classified as prescribed fires but subsequently became wildfires. The Forest Service is directed to negotiate, compromise and settle the original claims, or the claims filed by an insurer subrogated to the rights of a claimant, and to negotiate any other claims filed within 90 days of the date of enactment of this Act. Notwithstanding any other provision of the law, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay the amount of cash settlement from the Claims, Judgments, and Relief Act Fund (Public Law 95-26). Provided further, the Secretary of the Treasury shall make no payments for claims which are determined by the Forest Service or the Department of Justice to be invalid under current law.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, this amendment is presented to the Senate with regard to the fires of Yellowstone National Park, and it has been a rather contentious issue for some time, not only the policy of the fire management, but the possible compensation of those persons who had property destroyed.

I do not think anyone can forget the tragedy of the fires that consumed millions of acres in and around Yellowstone Park in 1988. The park has now begun to heal. We are witnessing some very interesting and exciting changes in that ecosystem as Mother Earth attempts to heal herself and go forward, and fire is very much a part of that ecosystem.

But we must not forget that as those fires raged out of control and left the boundaries of the park, that they burned millions of acres of forest land and caused millions of dollars of private property damage and loss. Innocent citizens in Wyoming and Montana stood by as their cabins, their summer homes, their stores, their trailer homes, and their vehicles were consumed by flames, flames that could not be fought because of the policy of "Let it burn."

So Senator WALLOP and I joined with our colleagues from Montana, Senator BAUCUS and Senator BURNS, and immediately began efforts to obtain funding to compensate these persons. Our efforts were originally thwarted by the Forest Service, who claimed no responsibility for the fires because of the "Let it burn" policy.

We were told that since the fires—and the inability to control them—were not the fault of the Forest Service, that they should not have to pay for the damages. It is very important for my colleagues to note that this policy has since been reviewed and revised. The Forest Service must now monitor weather and fire conditions and actively fight fires if they have the potential to become "wild fires."

This is a very important change in our firefighting policy. We have these citizens of Wyoming and Montana who individually suffered thousands of dollars of property damages due to an inappropriate and now truly outdated Federal policy. Even though 2 years have passed, it is only fair and appropriate that these citizens be entitled to make their case and to receive Federal reimbursement for losses without having to go through a lengthy and expensive court case.

There is precedent for what we do here.

We were first unsuccessful in our previous efforts to obtain moneys to compensate these victims, partially because we just did not have sufficient information about the total number of claimants and the total amount of damages claimed. Two weeks ago, we received the necessary information from the Forest Service. There are a total of 92 claims totaling $7.8 million approximately.

This would be the maximum amount of compensation. The actual amount paid out will very likely be less. It will be less under this amendment because it will be based upon the total validity and accuracy of the claim.

In this amendment, Congress is in no way making a statement as to what we believe each claim might be worth. That responsibility is left entirely to the Forest Service. Those officials will closely review and scrutinize each single claim and determine the amounts due for actual property losses. This amendment is our attempt to direct the Forest Service to negotiate compromise and settle these claims without casting any blame or laying any responsibility on that agency for their failure to initially attempt to control the fires.

Senator MALCOLM WALLOP and I, joined by the able Senators from Montana, ask our colleagues to join us in our efforts to help make these citizens whole again. We do make available to victims of hurricanes and earthquakes and tornadoes and flooding, and other acts of God. This is as it should be. Victims of a Federal policy which allowed these fires to burn uncontrolled in and around Yellowstone National Park deserve no less.

So the amendment as presented directs the negotiation, compromise, and settlement of these claims. There is an important clause in the amendment. I believe it helped to rock this amendment off of dead center—it states very clearly:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make no payments for claims which are determined by the Forest Service or the Department of Justice to be invalid under current law.

I think that is appropriate. We are not here to seek a blanket appropriation. Nothing in this amendment would indicate that at all. That is not its purpose. It simply provides that if you "prove up" and you make your case, then you are going to receive compensation.

I will be pleased to try to answer questions.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, the summer of 1988 found some of the most spectacular parts of Wyoming and Montana literally ablaze. Of the 249 fires that raged throughout the summer, only 28 were prescribed natural fires. The others burned unchecked—blackening habitat, killing wildlife and destroying millions of dollars of personal property.

Even considering the dryness of the land, such fires were unimaginable. The resulting devastation was profound enough to demand major revisions in the national fire policy. The "let-burn" policy was basically suspended and replaced with a more cautious management plan.

Millions of dollars of private property was caught in the paths of the wildfires and reduced to ashes. In the cases of the Mink Fire, the Storm Creek Fire, the Clover-Mist Fire and the Canyon Creek Fire the fires were originally classified as prescribed burns but subsequently became wildfires. Private citizens, frustrated because the firefighters could not stop the blazes, had absolutely no choice but to watch as their property burned.

Private property damaged or destroyed in those four fires has now been identified and quantified. Mr. President, I join my colleagues—Senator SIMPSON, Senator BAUCUS, and Senator BURNS in seeking funds for the legitimate compensation due the people who were aggrieved by an inflexible public policy that just didn't work.

Other than by expensive litigation, there is no way for these people to seek restitution for the damages they have suffered through absolutely no fault of their own.

We ask specifically that the Forest Service be given the discretion to determine the validity and accuracy of these Wyoming and Montana fire claims and to make payments only for the amount of actual property loss.

This is the action of a responsible government.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues Senator SIMPSON, Senator BAUCUS, and Senator WALLOP in offering this amendment which is very important to a number of people in our States. Our amendment directs the Forest Service to compensate Montanans and Wyomingites who suffered property damage and loss during the severe fire season in and around Yellowstone Park in 1988.

I want to thank the chairman, Senator BYRD, and his staff Charlie Estes and Sue Masica. The ranking member on the Interior Subcommittee, Senator MCCLURE, and his staff Jeff Cilek and Mark Walker, for their assistance and cooperation in including this provision in this bill. I also want to thank my good friend and colleague, Senator SIMPSON, and Laurie Goodman on his staff for all of the work they did to get this amendment added to this bill. Senators SIMPSON, WALLOP, BAUCUS, and I have all united on this issue a number of times to try and get these folks some compensation. I am extremely pleased that we have finally had some success.

The 1988 fires were the most severe on record in the Yellowstone area. The Storm Creek, Canyon Creek, Clover Mist, and Mink fires all started as natural ignitions that were allowed to burn as prescribed fires. However, once the fires got out of control they were classified as wildfires. I am sure that many of my colleagues remember those fires. They made the national news and sparked intense criticism of the Forest Service's and Park Service's so-called let-burn policy.

The Forest Service and Park Service have stood by their let-burn policy. However, as a result of the 1988 criticism, the Secretaries of Agriculture and interior did appoint a Fire Management Policy Review Team to review national policies and to make recommendations to address the problems experienced during the 1988 fire season. The agencies will admit that the policies needed reviewing—and the Review Team includes some pretty incriminating statements in their final report—but the Forest Service has refused to compensate many of the claimants. In fact, they have denied 45 of the 48 claims decided to date. There are currently 92 claims filed as a result of Storm, Canyon Creek, and Clover Mist fires.

Our amendment directs the Chief of the Forest Service to negotiate, compromise and settle these claims, and any claims filed within 90 days of the date of enactment of H.R. 4404. The language leaves discretion in the hands of the Forest Service so that compensation will be made only for actual damages. However, we certainly intend for the Chief to pay claims which may have been previously denied because of opinions about the let-burn policy and to pay all claims which have merit.

I said before that the Fire Management Policy Review Team's final report dated May 5, 1989, included some incriminating statements about the policies in place in 1988. I want to take a moment to outline some of those statements so that my colleagues can see for themselves that the Federal Government's policy was partially responsible for the damage done to the claimants' property, and therefore should compensate them. I think that the most tell-tale statement in the report is the review team's recommendation that, "No prescribed natural fires are to be allowed until fire management plans meet these standards"—meaning compliance with current policy, direction, and the additional requirements recommended by the report. It is clear that the review team does not want what happened in 1988 to happen again, and believes that unless the policies are changed, it might.

I could cite a number of other examples from the report, but will only mention a few others in the interest of time. The review team in its findings makes the point that the "let burn" policy is intended to allow fires to play a natural role in national parks, but they found that in "some cases this policy has been interpreted to allow managers to manage prescribed natural fires with essentially no prescriptions." The review team also found that some of the fire management plans in place during the 1988 fires "do not meet current agency or departmental policy and contain inadequate prescriptions." So even if the Forest Service maintains that the let burn policy was not at fault, I would suggest that there is evidence that the plans in place implementing that policy were.

Mr. President, I know the people in Montana and Wyoming are not complainers. They would not be making these claims unless they truly felt that they had been victimized. I know many of them feel strongly about the fact that they were wronged. They were evacuated from the area and not allowed back on their property to take preventive measures and as a result, their haystacks, equipment, and buildings were either damaged or destroyed. These are people who make an honest living working the land. They are not out to take the Federal Government—they just want to rebuild their lives. I hope that this amendment will give that opportunity.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise in support of this amendment. This has been a long road. The people of Wyoming and Montana have waited a long time for the Federal Government to acknowledge that something went wrong—terribly wrong—during the fire season of 1988.

While our memory of that catastrophic fire season that burned fully 30 percent of Yellowstone National Park and tens of thousands of acres of private land has dimmed, for those who lost homes and ranches and livelihoods, the memory of that wall of fire is as vivid as if it happened yesterday.

For 2 years now, I have worked with Senator SIMPSON and Senator WALLOP as well as my colleague, Senator BURNS, to make sure that those who paid the price for decisions made in Washington, DC were not forgotten. Time and again, we looked for a way to secure some sort of compensation for those who lost property as a proximate cause of the "let burn policy" that caused most of this problem.

Citizens of the West have a long history of facing natural disasters with stoicism. Forest fires are one of the hazards that the people of Wyoming and Montana are intimately familiar with. But fires that are intentionally allowed to burn, and grow, and gain momentum—until they are virtual fire-storms—are fires of another sort. Then, no effort by man can combat or alter their course of destructive whimsy.

Mr. President, there has been much debate about the wisdom or folly of the Federal Government's forest fire fighting policy during that terrible summer. I do not intend to debate decisions made then. However, there can be no doubt that had several of these fires been fought aggressively from the start, the tragic results might very well have been different.

Mr. President, I particularly want to thank the Senator from West Virginia, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, and also particularly thank Mr. Charlie Estes, who is on the staff of the Appropriatins Committee. Senator BYRD has worked very diligently, very hard to help find the dollars to help compensate people damaged by the fires, and Charlie Estes, with Senator BYRD, has worked equally diligently. I very much thank not only the efforts of the Senators from Wyoming, Senator WALLOP and Senator SIMPSON, as well as my colleague from Montana, but the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, and his very able staff, led by Mr. Charlie Estes.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have reviewed the language proposed by the Senator from Montana and Wyoming. With the understanding that I believe I do understand the language correctly and what I have heard the Senator say as well, and with the understanding that the language does not direct the Forest Service to pay the claims but, rather, to negotiate in good faith with the claimants, I can support the amendment. If the intent is to force the Forest Service to pay the claims which are not valid, then I would have to oppose the amendment on the basis that it would increase the bill's outlay totals and would therefore be a violation of the Budget Act. But the language, as I read it, does not force that. It provides that the Secretary shall make no payments for claims which are determined by the Forest Service or the Department of Justice to be invalid under current law. I believe Senator SIMPSON stated that when he offered the amendment. I ask the Senators if they would clarify their intent with respect to the amendment. Am I correct?

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I say to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that is correct. There is no attempt here to force a settlement upon the Federal Government.

I want at this point to commend the fine staff of the Senator from West Virginia: Charlie Estes and Sue Masica have been very helpful to my staff; Bob Harrison and Mark Smith have worked for Senator BAUCUS; a very fine bit of help from Leslee Bennett from Senator BURNS' staff, and, as I say, the staff of Senator BYRD, to arrive at a result which would not force the chairman of the Appropriations Committee to exercise the Budget Act in order to resist this amendment. That is the purpose for the phrase they are directed to negotiate, compromise, and settle certain claims, and then, of course, the final proviso, which I have previously read. So there is no forcing mechanism. It is "prove up", and, if you do not prove up you fall by the wayside.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, with that explanation, I am ready to recommend that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia for his help and assistance which has enabled us to reach this point without question.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to commend the sponsors of this amendment and staff for having worked it out in this way. I think it certainly is a good solution to a situation that does call for resolution, and I merely want to comment that I appreciate very much their efforts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1561) was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAUCUS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I also thank the ranking member of the committee for his support and of Senator MCCLURE's staff, Jeff Cilek and Mark Walker. I appreciate the willingness and help of all concerned. I thank the body.

Mr. President, I forgot one person. You can often do that here. It is like when you thank people at the Rotary Club. You forget the principal one. From my own staff, a lovely lady, Laurie Goodman. I sincerely thank her. I appreciate very much her consistent help for now about 3 years worth of effort. So to Laurie Goodman, my heartfelt thanks for her fine work.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, if the distinguished managers are presently without any business with respect to the bill itself, I seek unanimous consent to proceed as though in morning business to make some remarks about a matter, but I do not want to impose upon the managers.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator will not be imposing on this Senator.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as though in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE ADMINISTRATION IN WONDERLAND

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, when we leave Washington, we often talk about going back to the real world. By implication, therefore, Washington is not a real place. The administration provided powerful evidence for that proposition in two major decisions it made last week—two decisions that are totally out of touch with reality and which might only make sense in Alice's Wonderland, where everything is slightly out of whack.

Certainly the administration's offset policy had a certain "wonderland" quality to it. It is a decision that is totally out of touch with reality. It is also a decision that totally disregards the statutory instructions for development of offset policy.

As my colleagues will remember, the Congress, in the 1989 Defense Authorization Act, directed the President to establish an offset policy and to monitor and control offset arrangements that involve military systems. The President was also directed to enter into negotiations with all foreign governments that demand offset arrangements. Despite these clear Congressional instructions, the administration has announced a policy that does not meet the requirements of the 1989 law.

The policy statement released by the White House may make sense in "wonderland" Mr. President, because in "wonderland" nothing needs to make sense. But I do not see how it makes sense in the "real" world because it neither follows the clear statutory mandate nor deals with the real problems our businesses face in international competition.

On one hand, the White House stated that "offsets are economically inefficient and market distorting." The President then went on to say, however, that "the decision whether to engage in offsets, and the responsibility for negotiating and implementing offset arrangements, resides with the companies involved."

What the President is really saying, therefore, is: Let these companies be blackmailed into negotiating offset agreements with foreign governments and government corporations. Such an administration policy is nothing more nor less than a sacrifice of the subcontracting industrial base of the United States. The requirements for offsets are levied by the prime contractors on their subcontractors, who must then give up a portion of their production and their technology to manufacturers in the purchasing country.

Therefore, the subcontractors are ultimately placed at a competitive disadvantage as a result of offset requirements.

This administration has—through the guise of this nonpolicy—said, go ahead and transfer defense technology, jobs, and capability to foreign competitors through offsets. I have always been under the impression that the U.S. Government should negotiate policy agreements with foreign governments. This administration, however, seems content to have offset policy set by agreement between American companies and foreign governments.

Mr. President, that is a clear abdication of the administration's responsibility in this area. Foreign countries have developed policies regarding offsets—misguided though they are—but our administration says private industry must deal with offsets on its own!

In just the last 2 months, my office has been contacted by a number of major defense companies asking for help. In trying to sell their quality defense products overseas and here in the United States to the Defense Department, they are being blackmailed by foreign countries into offering huge offsets. The reason these companies came to me is because they cannot get any help from the administration.

Just a few weeks ago, a West German firm offered 100 percent offsets to Great Britain if the English would consider that firm's tank. Yet this administration sits around and issues a do-nothing policy.

The President's statement also directed "The Secretary of Defense in coordination with the Secretary of State, to lead an interagency team to consult with foreign nations with a view to limiting the adverse effects of offsets in defense procurement." This is not what Congress told the President to do. Congress, by statute, said: "The President shall enter into negotiations with foreign countries that have a policy of requiring an offset arrangement * * *" we could not have been more clear. We did not say, "consult." we said, in law, "begin negotations."

Mr. President, the administration must have decided it likes "wonderland," and particularly the Red Queen, because the administration acted like the Red Queen last week by treating Craig Fields, the Director of the Defense Advanced Products Research Agency [DARPA], like one of the Red Queen's subjects. Every time she was the least bit unhappy the Red Queen was apt to scream "off with his head" at whichever hapless subject she blamed for her unhappiness.

The administration did not ask for Craig Field's head, but it did remove him as DARPA Director. Why did this happen? Because he was doing the kind of job that needs to be done, and because he was using his legal authority aggressively and effectively. That is not allowed in "wonderland."

I have spent a lot of time working on the defense industrial base issues since I began serving on the Senate Armed Services Committee. I cannot think of anything more important than maintaining our military technological edge with U.S.-developed and U.S.-manufactured technology. There is a real linkage between civilian and military technology. In many vital so-called dual-use technologies, the military market alone is not large enough to support the kind of research and development effort needed to keep the United States a jump ahead of our potential adversaries and so-called allies. That means we have to have a strong civilian high-technology industry, and we must have an environment in the United States that helps our high-technology firms maintain their international competitiveness.

But there are some in the Office of Management and Budget and at the White House who seem to think that this approach represents industrial policy and that it therefore must be opposed. What Dr. Fields understands, however, is that this analysis isn't about code words like industrial policy. Instead, it's about common sense. The forced departure of Craig Fields as DARPA's Director makes it look like the administration is more concerned with industrial policy ideological purity than it is with our national security.

I would strongly urge the administration to review its offset policy and the demotion of Dr. Fields. I can assure those seeking to circumvent our intent that Congress is not about to join them in "wonderland"; by approving the removal of Craig Fields for doing an outstanding job. Congress is not about to sit still for the nonpolicy on offsets that the administration has proposed.

Mr. President, I urge the administration to return to reality. It should reward those, like Craig Fields, who do such great work, instead of removing them. It should follow the law and recognize the real international situation our businesses face, instead of leaving our businesses at the "Mad Hatters" tea party, where they can get no tea, and no protection from foreign governments' ever-increasing offset requests. Only then will we begin to make progress.

Mr. President, I suppose if there is no one around who wants to do some other business, I am prepared to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McCLURE. Will the Senator withhold?

Mr. DIXON. Yes. I yield the floor.

Mr. McCLURE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

JEFFREY CILEK

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, there are certain landmarks in life, in the life of those in the Senate, and in the Senate staff and their families. Today is one of those, as a young man who has served the Senate Committee on Appropriations for over 5 years, who was on my staff before joining the Appropriations Committee staff, is now leaving the employment of the Senate and going out into that other cruel world out there, where the rewards may be more monetary than personal. But he has found the personal reward, rather than monetary, in working in the Senate. I refer, of course, to Jeffrey Cilek.

Jeff joined the committee staff, I believe, in December 1984, if I am not mistaken, and has served the Subcommittee on Interior and Related Agencies since that time with a great deal of zeal and skill.

It goes without saying that I suspect for all of us we will miss him, not just his diligence and his capabilities which are certainly many—I do not say that casually—but because there was more than that. There was the good nature and the ability to work with other people and, also, never to lose a sense of humor which sometimes around here is the only redeeming grace we have.

Late at night when things are tougher, and they have been for a long, long while, and the staff oftentimes works very late at night, that sense of humor becomes invaluable because it is the sense of humor that redeems situations that have gotten too tense and perhaps too personal, allows people to step back and reevaluate their positions, and see if indeed there is not a way in which a seemingly intractable problem can be solved.

Jeff has that capacity. I know from talking to other members of the staff, at times when I was not there, it came to the fore, the ability to get people to take another look, to work together and to resolve issues.

I also say Jeff is one of the most innovative members of staff that I have had, in trying to find a way to solve a problem that seemed insolvable. Of course, some of those—where we have found those measures, those ways to succeed, where others sought to block the effort—perhaps are not too happy with Jeff who found ways for us to succeed. That, too, is a measure of his success.

But I think it is fair to say that I personally will miss Jeff in the rest of the months of this year. I am sure other members of the subcommittee and subcommittee staffers will miss Jeff as well.

But I think it is fitting that the Senate, as we deal with an appropriations bill—perhaps it is an accident of timing that we can take the time while on the appropriations bill upon which he has given so much time and work—would also be able to say thanks to a job well done. We appreciate your service, we wish you good luck in the job outside the Congress of the United States, and we hope to see you often in the future.

Thank you, Mr. President.

TRIBUTE TO JEFF CILEK

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, though this particular supplemental appropriations bill may seem an unusual forum for a tribute, I would like to offer a few words on behalf of Jeff Cilek, who will soon, much to our chagrin, leave the committee staff for other employment.

Jeff has served as clerk and later as minority clerk of the Appropriations Interior Subcommittee since December 1984. Though the Interior bill can hardly boast of a generous allocation, that subcommittee oversees hundreds of line items and fields perhaps more requests from Members than any other Appropriations Subcommittee. Despite the burdens of oversight which come with that territory, and the attention which Jeff has had to give to the most tedious minutiae, he has served the committee and its members with diligence, intelligence, and good humor.

Mr. President, we will suffer a great loss on the retirement of our colleague and friend Senator McCLURE. That sad goodbye will only be made more so for Appropriations Committee members and staff by Jeff's concurrent departure. He has been a great help and he will be greatly missed.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REID). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Brian Moran of my staff be permitted privileges of the floor today and each day we are on the supplemental appropriation bill, H.R. 4404.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Danforth amendment be the order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1553

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to support the amendment previously offered expressing the Senate's disapproval of the recent Supreme Court decision in Missouri versus Jenkins.

As we know, this ruling grants Federal judges the unprecedented power to order tax increases as a judicial remedy.

Last week on the Senate floor, I expressed serious concerns with this decision and urged my colleagues to support S. 34, a bill which I have cosponsored as introduced by Senator HUMPHREY to restrict the remedial jurisdiction of Federal courts in this area. This legislation currently has 22 cosponsors, and I firmly believe that this bill is adequate to alter the recent Supreme Court decision. Under article III of the Constitution, Congress clearly has the power to regulate the remedial jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Mr. President, the recent Supreme Court ruling extends the power of the judiciary into an area which has traditionally been reserved to State and local governments. It has been a fundamental lesson in American history that this Nation opposes taxation without representation.

In high schools across the country, students learn as a basic premise of American democracy that the legislative branch alone has the power to tax. For over 200 years, elected representatives with authority to tax were directly accountable to the people through the ballot box. Yet, now, the American people do not have this same protection, the same accountability, when taxes are imposed by unelected, life-tenured Federal judges. Now that the Supreme Court has sanctioned judicially imposed taxes, the American citizenry lacks adequate recourse to show their opposition to unnecessary tax increases. While the American public cannot vote a Federal judge out of office, they can properly look to the Congress to remove the power to tax from an independent and insulated judiciary.

The role of the Judiciary is to interpret the law, not to legislate. I firmly believe that the Jenkins decision expands the power of Federal courts into the role of legislating. Under the Constitution, the power to tax is an exclusive legislative right of Congress and the States. This power is derived through article I, section 8 and the 10th amendment in the Constitution.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment and efforts to alter the Jenkins decision restoring the proper balance of authority between the legislative and judicial branches of Government.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the Danforth amendment, No. 1553.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold that, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withhold? The Senator asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I withhold. We do not have a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has suggested the absense of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WETLANDS

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I see several Senators on the floor. I would just like to inquire of any of the Senators who are handling this bill at this time, is there any objection to Senator BUMPERS and myself and hopefully Senators CHAFEE and BAUCUS—I think they are on their way here—engaging in a short colloquy?

If there is no objection, Mr. President, we would like to announce the agreement which will be printed in full tomorrow in the RECORD between the White House, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Office of Management and Budget, the Corps of Engineers, and the U.S. Department of Agriculture as to a very complex issue regarding wetlands.

Mr. President, over the past several years we have seen the development of this issue basically, which was, in fact, in the past, in 1972, in the Clean Water Act, ultimately referred to as swampbuster in the 1985 agriculture bill. We have ultimately seen regulations which have come from various agencies of Government which have very much complicated the lives of many thousands of American farmers throughout our agriculture community.

Mr. President, I would like to say at the beginning that the farmers in our country, to a large part, are the environmentalists of this country; they are the people who year after year and generation after generation rely upon that particular block of land to support not only themselves, to provide a livelihood, but also to provide the food and fiber that feeds and clothes this country and many parts of the world today.

We would also like to say, Mr. President, that pursuant to this agreement, we are pleased to announce that farmers for the first time in a long, long period of time will know the rules. They will know the rules. They will have an understanding about whether they can construct a rice levy; whether they can level their land as they have been in the past, many, many years on the same piece of land; whether they can maintain or not maintain their ditches, that area is going± to be finally concluded in the agreement which will be placed in the RECORD tomorrow.

Also, we strongly feel that this agreement, which has been hammered out during most of this day, is an agreement that represents common sense, of reasonable people coming together with a hard and tough problem and the ultimate result being a commonsense approach to what we have called a very, very difficult decision.

I think, Mr. President, that many farmers across our country tonight hopefully will appreciate this agreement, because it will send a clear signal basically that those normal farm practices that they have been engaged in in the past several years, that they can continue to engage in those practices without any fear of losing the support of Federal or other programs which enable them to plant and grow and produce on normal crop acreage.

Mr. President, I especially wish to thank our colleagues, Senator CHAFEE and Senator BAUCUS, for the instrumental part that they have played in forging this agreement. Also involved, of course, was the senior Senator from Arkansas, who has been a mover in this whole area of attempting to bring about a commonsense approach to a very hard, complex issue, the wetlands concern.

We have also had in our meetings today representatives of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON]; and also Senator BREAUX and Senator BOREN's staff. All of us have worked hard with the various agencies that I have mentioned in the opening part of my statement. We think that this is going to be a very splendid agreement; that it will not in any way endanger the wetlands of our country; and that it will also provide a very clear understanding to our American farmers as to what they can do and what they cannot do with the lands that they are today farming.

Mr. President, I know that my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from my State, is going to want to make a statement at this point. Hopefully, we will have Senator CHAFEE, Senator BAUCUS, and others to engage in a colloquy on this.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I want to first of all thank my distinguished colleague for his leadership on one of the most critical issues to face agriculture, not just in my State but in the country. What has happened is that several Senators such as my distinguished colleague, Senator PRYOR and Senator JOHNSTON and I, all of whom like to think of ourselves as strong environmentalists who have been protective of wetlands in this country, have become greatly concerned about the expansion of wetlands regulation, creating an obvious unintended result, a chaotic result, as a matter of fact.

I not only want to thank my colleagues, Senator JOHNSTON and Senator PRYOR, for their role in helping get these negotiations started, I want to thank the EPA and the Corps of Engineers for the candor and honesty with which they have negotiated throughout this day on this issue. It has obviously come down to the point where everybody agrees that to have allowed the situation to continue as it now exists would have been a potential disaster for American agriculture and therefore for the entire country.

Mr. President, just so we are all talking about the same thing, I would like, if I may, to catalog how we got into this situation. In 1977, we passed the Clean Water Act. It was that bill that contained what has become the famous—what some people consider infamous—section 404 permitting process.

Incidentally, I see my good friend and colleague from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], is on the floor and I thank him for his help and I invite his attention to these comments, and to comment later on the accuracy of what I am saying and how we are going to deal with it.

It was in the 1977 Clean Water Act that we gave the Corps of Engineers the authority to issue 404 permits. These 404 permits, contrary to popular opinion, do not deal with cutting and dredging. They deal with how you dispose of the fill dirt. In order to dispose of fill dirt, whether you are a drainage district or a farmer, you have to get a 404 permit.

I voted for that, and we all applauded it and said, "We are on our way to reducing water pollution and also to saving the wetlands of America." But in that same bill, there was a provision called 404(f), and one of the reasons I voted for that bill was because it said, "Normal farming practices are exempt."

In my conversations with my good friend from Rhode Island the other day, Senator CHAFEE, we discussed this. He said, "I do not understand why you and Senator PRYOR are upset because normal farming practices are exempt." I will come back to that in just a moment.

But here is what is said under 404(f) so far as agriculture is concerned. We said that normal farming practices are exempt from the requirements of 404, as are emergency flood control measures, maintenance, construction of ponds and ditches, temporary sedimentation basins, farm roads, forest roads, and mining roads. All of those things were exempt.

And everything went along swimmingly for 13 years. Then all of a sudden the Corps of Engineers, EPA, the Soil Conservation Service, and the Fish and Wildlife Service issued a new manual which they had worked on for 2 years. Everybody had sort of been breathlessly awaiting this manual.

In January of 1989, the manual came out. The manual said—and bear in mind, normal farming practices had been exempt, that land comes under section 404 if it has three criteria—if the soil that you are farming is hydric, if it has wetlands hydrology—and, No. 3, if it contains or is capable of containing hydrophytic vegetation.

I am not a hydrologist, so I do not understand a lot of these terms, but those are the three criteria. They said if it meets those criteria, it is wetlands and you must get a 404 permit, subject to the normal farming practices exemption.

There is some controversy on this. Some of my farmers have told me that the corps has come out and said their soil was hydric, and therefore they fell under the 404 process because the corps assumed the land met the other two standards. This is wrong and the corps and the EPA have assured me that it will be corrected. The above criteria have left to an explosion of land falling under section 404.

In the region of what we call the delta, on both sides of the Mississippi River—and I see the Senator from Illinois over there; he is very familiar with the delta, but I am talking in particular about the delta in Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi—84 percent of this land was placed under section 404. This includes the richest acreage in my State and 19 million acres on both sides of the river, in Louisiana, Arkansas, and Mississippi. It made 19 million acres subject to section 404.

Think about that. We just appropriated $2 million 2 years ago to set up the Delta Commission to report back to us how can we alleviate poverty in the delta. Why, Tunica County, MS, the poorest county in America, in the heart of the delta, where they have nothing but cotton and rice and soybeans, has nearly 50 percent poverty rate. It is the poorest county in America. But the perverse effect of the expansion of wetlands regulation would have been to say: You cannot farm in Tunica County anymore unless we give you a permit or unless you fall under an exemption. Unfortunately, neither the corps nor the EPA has done a very good job in communicating, what the exemptions are, and these farmers are planting in fear.

I have a chart, Mr. President, which I will offer for the RECORD later, and every Senator in the U.S. Senate ought to look at that chart and see how much soil in his State is classified as hydric; to see where we are headed with this.

So, Mr. President, again I want to say that hundreds of farmers have come to me. One farmer, who along with his grandfather and father, farmed lands for 70 years, was suddenly told that his soil is hydric, and if he wants to keep farming it he is going to have to get the corps permission.

Of course, I know that was a perverse and unintended result because EPA and the Corps of Engineers today—and they deserve a lot of credit; they have negotiated in good faith—are saying to America's farmers, "We did not intend this result." They have agreed to ensure farmers that if they are farming as they always have, then a 404 permit is not necessary.

They are right now in the process of drafting a statement concerning normal farming practices, including rice and fish farming, crop rotations, and land leveling, that I hope we can all agree on and submit for the RECORD tomorrow. I think it will solve 90 to 100 percent of our problem.

I want to again thank my colleagues for the work they have done in making that possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, indeed there was a problem, and clearly the Senator from Arkansas and others from the delta area, the Senators from Louisiana, felt their farmers had not properly received the word that there had been apparent changes.

Through consultation with the distinguished Senators from Arkansas and the Senators from Louisiana and others, plus representatives from the EPA and from the Corps of Engineers, we were able to work out an understanding on this situation. Tomorrow there will be a letter from the Corps of Engineers, and I believe also EPA, setting this forth in a little more detail.

The problem has been resolved, and I am very grateful to the Senators involved for not pressing forward with their amendment because I felt it presented great problems from the point from which I was approaching this matter.

I will not get into a discussion of the 404 Program. Since it has been resolved, I think enough has been said.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, first of all I congratulate the Senators from Arkansas for bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate. Suggestions have been made that certain practices which are normal, customary practices in the agriculture sector had been brought into question. Regulation from the administration was going to cause an enormous burden of red tape, new procedures, and of getting permission from everybody you can think of to continue to engage in these normal agricultural practices.

It reminded me of the debate when I was a member of the Public Works Committee in the other body when this act first was being proposed. We were reviewing it. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX] who now serves in this body was a member of that committee at the time.

We worked very hard with the Administration and with other members of that committe to try to clearly establish that normal agricultural and silvicultural practices were respected under this new 404 Permit Program that was being established under this legislation.

I know the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] may have been involved in that legislation as a Member of the Senate. I do not remember that, but I deeply appreciate his courtesies in working out this agreement.

But I do remember that we very carefully crafted the language to ensure that a farmer would not have to go to the Corps of Engineers, get clearance from the Fish and Wildlife Service or other Federal agency before he could plan his crop every year. Of particular concern was rice farming and the practices connected with erecting dikes, putting in a rice crop every year. These were very real concerns. The fact that it comes up again indicates that somebody had not received the word that the language in the law clearly purports to exempt those normal agricultural practices.

Just last month, because of the rumors that were flying around that all the new, oppressive standards and regulations were being imposed, I wrote a letter to bring to the attention of the administration these concerns. I was very pleased, Mr. President, and satisfied that we had been able to explain the situation when I received, on April 19, a letter from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the Department of the Army, Office of Assistant Secretary, which deals with the administration's position on this very issue.

I ask unanimous consent to have the letter printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY, OFFICE OF WATER,
Washington, DC.
DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, DC.
April 19, 1990.

HON. THAD COCHRAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Cochran: Thank you for your letters of March 27, 1990, to Administrator Reilly and Lieutenant General Hatch concerning implementation of the Section 404 permit program in relation to certain farming activities. As the national program managers for the Clean Water Act Session 404 program, we appreciate the opportunity to respond to your concerns. We share your deep interest in this issue and recognize the need to work expeditiously to provide appropriate clarification.

We strongly agree that it is incumbent upon our agencies to communicate effectively to landowners and farmers how the Section 404 program may apply to their activities. This communication is critical in assuring that the regulated public understands regulatory requirements that may apply, and to minimize any misconceptions and confusion that may exist concerning our program. As your letters recognize, it appears that some misunderstanding has arisen regarding the relationship of the Section 404 program to certain farming operations involving, in particular, rice levees and construction of catfish ponds. We understand these concerns, and have recently initiated several actions that will allow farmers to understand better the regulatory program and provide more efficient and equitable mechanisms for implementing provisions of the Section 404 program. These actions include:

Progress toward developing a general permit authorizing discharges of dredged or fill material associated with the construction of levees and ditches for the construction of catfish ponds.

Initiating a review of the Federal Manual for Identifying and Delineating Jurisdictional Wetlands (Interagency Manual) with the Soil Conservation Service and the Fish and Wildlife Service to determine what, if any, modifications are necessary. As part of the review, we will be holding public meetings to solicit technical comments on the Interagency Manual. The first meeting is scheduled for May 5, 1990 in Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

Initiating EPA is developing of clear and easily understood information for the agricultural community regarding Section 404 regulatory requirements, focusing on wetlands jurisdictional determinations in agricultural areas and the applicability of the Section 404(f) exemptions to agricultural activities.

In addition to these actions, we are committed to continuing to work with representatives of the agricultural community to explore other opportunities to improve the effectiveness of our wetlands protection efforts, remaining ever-mindful of the special needs and concerns of the Nation's farmers. We will work diligently to ensure that the Section 404 requirements are better understood by all participants in the permit process, and are convinced that improved communication is essential to the program's ability to successfully provide far and equitable protection for the Nation's critical aquatic resources. In that regard, we intend to contact the Department of Agriculture to develop an effective means of distributing information to farmers concerning the relationship between the Section 404 program and agricultural activities.

Your letters also raise a concern regarding the changing environment in the Federal treatment of wetlands under Section 404. There are two issues related to this concern to which we would like to respond. First, it is our position that discharges of dredged material associated with the construction of rice levees in wetlands which are in established agricultural crop production are "normal farming activities" within the meaning of Section 404(f)(1)(A) and are therefore exempt from Section 404 regulation under the following conditions:

The purpose of these levees is limited to the maintenance and manipulation of shallow water levels for the production of rice crops; and

Consistent with current agricultural practices associated with rice cultivation:

The height of the rice levees should generally not exceed 24 inches above their base; and

The material to be discharged should generally be derived exclusively from the distribution of soil immediately adjacent to the constructed levee.

Second, we understood that concern has been expressed that our agencies may be using only one parameter (i.e., soils) to delineate wetlands in areas currently in agriculture. In fact, all three parameters of the wetlands technical criteria (i.e., hydrophytic vegetation, hydric soils, and wetlands hydrology) must be considered when making a wetlands determination. The definition of wetlands in our regulations (33 CFR 328.3(b); 40 CFR 230.3(t) and 232.2(r)) provides for a three parameter approach in identifying an area as wetlands. Moreover, the Interagency Manual, cooperatively developed by the Corps of Engineers, Environmental Protection Agency, Fish and Wildlife Service, and Soil Conservation Service, describes field indicators for all three paramenters (i.e., hydrology, soils, and vegetation) and articulates methods for delineating wetland boundaries. In general, field indicators of all three parameters must be demonstrated in making a wetlands delineation. However, in describing these indicators for determining the presence of the three parameters, the Interagency Manual identifies certain assumptions which may apply. For example, there will be circumstances where the wetlands hydrology indicators (i.e., the hydrological indicators listed in the Interagency Manual, including, for example, visual observations of inundation or soil saturation) are not readily observed in the field (e.g., the site visit is during the dry season). Section 3.37.11 of the Interagency Manual states that "[i]f an area meets the field indicators for hydric soils and there is no indication of significant hydrologic modification, then it can be assumed that the area meets the wetland hydrology criterion" (emphasis added).

In routing situations, positive indicators of soils, vegetation, and hydrology are sought. However, there are circumstances where such indicators are not available, for example where wetlands vegetation is not present due to clearing activities or as a result of winter die-off of annual vegetation. When this occurs, under the Interagency Manual the type of soils present and the hydrology will indicate the type of vegetation that would be present under normal circumstances. Similarly, the presence of hydric soil indicators and the absence of modifications to the hydrology can indicate the presence of wetlands hydrology.

As provided in the Interagency Manual, while a site is effectively and legally drained to the extent that it no longer meets the regulatory wetlands hydrology criteria (as interpreted by the Interagency Manual), it is not a wetland subject to jurisdiction under Section 404 of the Clean Water Act. In addition, in making determination, agency staff are required to ensure that hydrology is not determined based solely on soil characteristics in areas currently in agriculture. Areas in agriculture are considered disturbed areas and indicators of all three parameters are evaluated utilizing the "disturbed area" section of the Interagency Manual (Sections 4.20 through 4.23). In making determinations, indicators of all three parameters are evaluated and the hydrology parameter is not assumed to exist based solely on soil characteristics in areas currently in agriculture.

We hope this letter addresses your concerns. If you have any additional questions, please contact us or David G. Davis, EPA Office of Wetlands Protection, (202) 475-7791, or David Barrows, Office of the Assistant Secrtary of the Army (Civil Works), (202) 695-1376.

Sincerely yours,

LAJUANA S. WILCHER,
Assistant Administrator for Water, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.
ROBERT W. PAGE,
Assistant Secretary of the Army (Civil Works).

Mr. COCHRAN. I am just going to read a couple of things that relate to catfish ponds in the Mississippi Delta and another that relates to levees in connection with rice farming. The administration understands these concerns and sets forth their understanding of the relationship between the section 404 permit program and agriculture activities.

Although I do not have a copy of the agreement that has now been reached among the agencies involved, I am told that this agreement today builds on this commitment and maybe further clarifies the situation so far as any new regulations are concerned. For that reason, because it is a matter that ought to be put to rest, farmers ought not to be overreached by any Federal agency in carrying out the intent of this law. I again congratulate my friends from Arkansas and others who have worked on this issue to put it at rest.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Arkansas, Senator PRYOR, who has worked so hard as the leader of our team. This is a vitally important subject in my State because we went from some 500,000 acres to 4.2 million acres under the 1989 change, and the regulations have not yet come out. So we do not exactly know with what we are going to be saddled. I hope this language which the Senator from Arkansas has worked out is going to give us some clarity so that my farmers in Louisiana, who farm that 4.2 million acres, will be able to continue their normal practices.

I wish to ask my friend from Arkansas one question that is of special concern in Louisiana. That is where we take land from farming to agriculture and back again, particularly from rice to crawfish, sometimes back again. That is a normal practice in Louisiana. We have some 130,000 acres of crawfish, I believe it is, at this time. And that has expanded as fast as people find out about the delicacies and the flavor of crawfish. We hope that expands a whole lot more. Under the language the Senator has perfected and has been agreed upon, that practice is envisioned as a continuation of farming practice, is it not?

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, if I may respond to my friend from Louisiana, who has been very helpful in working out this ultimate solution to this problem, I think the Senator from Louisiana has reference to crop rotation. This, by the way, is another very sound environmental practice used by farmers in our part of the country; for example, for a few years to grow rice and then switch to soybeans, and back and forth. This keeps the land healthy. It keeps it in a state where it would, I think, be very beneficial to the environment.

Normal crop rotation under this proposed agreement will be exempt. The proposed agreement, if I might also answer the Senator from Louisiana and respond just a moment to the Senator from Mississippi—and I appreciate very much the compliments of both Senators—has not been formalized. This agreement will be finalized this evening, hopefully, if not in the morning, and will be spread upon the RECORD tomorrow, signed off by the White House, OMB, EPA, and all of the respective agencies that have been involved. But crop rotation will now be exempt, and it should be exempt.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I thank again my friend from Arkansas. This is a vitally important subject in Louisiana. I would also like to alert my colleagues, those who are concerned about wetlands—and I guess that includes everyone; I know Senator CHAFEE has been one of the leaders in wetlands—to say that our concern about farming in wetlands is not that we want to destroy the wetlands. To the contrary, we want to keep the wetlands. As a matter of fact, later on this year, as the year unfolds, we are going to be asking for a lot of help in Louisiana on our wetlands problem, because we are losing 40 to 60 square miles a year of wetlands.

Our problem really is not development. It is not taking the bottomland hardwoods and developing them into soybeans, which is a practice we do not want to do, which has been done in the past. Our problem is really the subsidance of our wetlands, the compaction of the ground that is starved for silt and freshwater that it used to receive from the Mississippi River. In order to stem that practice, we are going to need some serious money to try to minimize the action of the Mississippi River by getting freshwater and silt back in there. So that will unfold later this year.

But I want to thank the Senator from Rhode Island for working with us, and especially the Senator from Arkansas for being our leader.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I commend the efforts of my colleagues from Arkansas and Louisiana to ensure that section 404 of the Clean Water Act is not carried out in a way that would jeopardize the normal farming, silvicultural and ranching activities of this Nation.

It is incumbent upon the EPA and corps to implement the section 404 program in a manner that is both consistent with the exemptions provided by law and equitable to our landowners and farmers.

Earlier today these agencies agreed in principle to take steps to ensure that farmers and ranchers understand both the exemptions and any regulatory requirements that may apply; to minimize any misconceptions and confusion that may exist concerning the section 404 program; to work more closely with the Department of Agriculture's Cooperative Extension Service and land grant universities to determine what constitutes normal farming activities and to assure that that information is conveyed to farmers; and to immediately direct their field staffs to carry out these actions and provide notice to the public through the media.

The EPA and the corps have agreed further to transmit the text of this agreement to the Senate tomorrow.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would not only like to thank the Senators that I mentioned previously, plus the distinghished Senators from Mississippi, but also to thank their staffs. This has been an elaborate matter that we have been working on starting last Thursday, extending into Friday. I know that the staffs were here yesterday, Sunday, trying to iron out this understanding and agreement with the absolutely forthright cooperation of the Corps of Engineers' representatives and the EPA. There were very helpful. I think it is worthwhile mentioning not only that those in the administration were so forthright and of such great assistance but also the staffs of the Senators from Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island once again, not only for his cooperation but his very generous comments. I would like at this point to bring to the attention of my colleagues, an article from page 1 of the New York Times last week, entitled "For Farmers, Wetlands Mean a Legal Quagmire."

Mr. President, seeing the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] on the floor of this time, this particular New York Times article made reference to one of Senator DANFORTH's constituents, a young 35-year-old farmer by the name of Mr. Rick McGowen. He lived, I think, in the central part of Missouri. He has a 208-acre farm. It talks about the nightmares that Mr. McGowen has suffered during the last 3 to 4 years because of various interpretations by the respective agencies that deal with the regulation of wetlands. This is what this agreement, Mr. President, attempts to solve.

For example, he said that he is troubled again on this particular farm in 1987——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators in the back of the Chamber are asked to take their seats.

Mr. PRYOR. I might just say, Mr. President, to the Senator from Missouri, that I am talking about one of his fine constituents, Mr. Rick McGowan, who has had a great deal of trouble with the agencies that regulate his 208-acre farm. Mr. McGowan, from the New York Times, said his trouble began in 1987 when we set out to repair a break in a levee caused by a flood from a small stream, and it raised the rest of the levee which had subsided over the year to its original height.

Well, one thing led to another, operating under a 1986 Corps of Engineers definition, he finds that in 1989 the corps, and Fish and Wildlife, and other agencies of the Government sort of changed the definition of wetlands. There was no hearing, there was no right to respond, and as a result what happened, one of the representatives of one of these agencies came to Mr. McGowan's farm. He found what Mr. McGowan called some grain sorghum.

It was interpreted by this official from the agency as a cattail. Therefore, it had been wetlands; therefore, Mr. McGowan could no longer plant there.

Now he has $40,000 in legal fees, and I think truly that the agreement that so many had been a part of shaping, Mr. President, will resolve not only Mr. McGowan's dilemma, and his crisis but many thousands of farmers across the country.

Mr. President, I had indicated earlier that Senator BUMPERS and I and others would be offering an amendment on this matter. Because of this agreement, the necessity of that amendment is negated. So I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the Pryor-Bumpers amendment as it related to wetlands.

Mr. BUMPERS. Would the Senator withhold that request? I was just thinking, I do not see any harm in allowing the amendment to lay around.

Mr. PRYOR. I yield to the wisdom of my senior colleague, and I vitiate that request.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator that the amendment has not yet been offered.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, has the Senator from Louisiana spoken on this subject yet?

Mr. JOHNSTON. If the Senator will yield, I made maybe a forgettable speech, but I did speak.

Mr. BUMPERS. I heard people out in the corridor talking about hearing one of the most unforgettable speeches, but I did not know it was that of the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I tell the senior Senator from Arkansas, I did speak on this matter. One of our concerns is, as I discussed with the junior Senator from Arkansas, because we go from rice frequently to crawfish and sometimes to catfish. Now we are even going into other species, sometimes redfish, striped bass, which is becoming very big in Louisiana. Not only does it not harm the environment, it is really good for the environment, as the Senator knows with the bird life that loves all of those kind of ponds. As I understand from the junior Senator, that is considerd tantamount to crop rotation, which would be allowed.

I hope my colleagues will specifically reference aquaculture in this amendment because it is an important thing in my State.

Mr. BUMPERS. Crop rotation will be addressed and I will see that your concern gets to the proper people immediately.

I might also make two observations: First, if the Japanese, the Koreans, and the Taiwanese continue to empty the oceans, seine the oceans, we are going to be pleading with people in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas to grow more catfish because there is not going to be any sealife left if these drift nets continue to be used in our oceans, which is literally seining the oceans dry.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Senator is exactly correct. As a matter of fact, I am informed that the capacity of the oceans to produce fish is about at an optimal level, that there are really no other frontier areas to fish. Consequently, the fight is not over opening new areas, but fights over existing areas between us and the Japanese in the Sea of Alaska, the Caribbean, and elsewhere.

So the frontier is in aquaculture, which is the fastest growing form of agriculture.

Mr. BUMPERS. Those three nations I mentioned have up to 30,000 miles of drift nets in the oceans at any given hour of the day. I intend—I do not mind saying this on the floor now because we have been working on it for the last 10 days—sometime this week or next to offer a resolution of the U.S. Senate calling on the President to convene an international conference of all nations, and certainly all literal nations, who have shorelines on the oceans, to try to start negotiating agreements very much like the Frank Church amendment on the national forests, multiple-use sustained yield, and get all the nations of the Earth to agree that we will not take out more than the ocean is capable of producing.

The Senator has made a very cogent point that caused me to get into drafting this resolution because right now we are a borderline. We are probably taking out more right now than the oceans are capable of reproducing.

Ever since I was a first grader, I was taught that if push came to shove in this world the oceans ultimately would feed us. Of course, that was when we had 2 billion people. We now have 5.2 billion, headed for 10 billion.

I see the Senator from Illinois wishes to speak on this also. I want to make one other point.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR], just placed in the RECORD an article from the New York Times, a very cogent article about how regulations have gone awry, and can create so much havoc.

But the main point I want to emphasize to the Senator offering that article, if you read the article, I do not want anybody here to believe that this is an Arkansas-Louisiana-Mississippi problem just in the delta. The people discussed in that article are Missouri and Iowa.

If I had that chart here—and I am going to see that every Member of the Senate gets a copy of the chart—Florida has 17 million acres of hydric soils. California, Texas, Georgia—Georgia has almost 16 million acres of hydric soils. You are not talking about a highly localized issue here. You are talking about something that, if carried to its extreme, would render this country not only incapable of exporting, but incapable of feeding itself. That is how drastic it is.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Was the Senator talking about this chart?

Mr. BUMPERS. I have seen that one. That is not the one. There is a numerical chart showing each State, how many acres in the State and how many of those acres are hydric.

For example, in Arkansas, we have 13.5 million acres of low cropland; 13½ million acres and over 8 million of it is hydric. You could see what that would have done to us. I know the Senator from Illinois wants to get back to drift nets and the ocean. So I yield the floor.

Mr. SIMON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. First of all, I want to commend the two Senators from Arkansas, the Senators from Louisiana, Mississippi, and anyone else who had something to do with working out this agreement.

If I could get the attention of the senior Senator from Arkansas for just a moment, with this conference idea, let me tell you one other factor that we ought to be looking at in the oceans. The Senator mentioned the population figures. As our population goes up, not surprisingly, the water table of the nations of the world are going down. So not too long ago you had the Foreign Minister of Egypt saying if there is another war in the Middle East in the next 20 years, it is likely to be over water rather than land.

One of the things that we have to do is to spend some money, do some research on finding an inexpensive way of converting saltwater to freshwater. It will dramatically change the world.

Very interesting—way back when John Kennedy was President of the United States, he was asked at a press conference what kind of scientific breakthrough he would like to see in his administration. John Kennedy said, you have heard me talk about getting a man to the Moon, but let me tell you more important than that if we could accomplish it, would be to find an inexpensive way of converting saltwater to freshwater. He asked for an appropriation of $100 million and temporarily we got it. We are down to about $3 million on something that could dramatically improve the lives of people.

Ironically, it is tied in because Antarctica, because of the warming of the Earth, is gradually going to have the ocean level rise. If we could find an inexpensive way, we would help the Southwest United States, North Africa. I was in Mauritania on the coast of North Africa one time. They were growing 9 percent of their own food.

I just ask the Senator from Arkansas if he could broaden that international conference just a little so that we could look at this whole question also of using the resources of the ocean to see if we cannot cooperatively take a look at research to convert, in an inexpensive way, saltwater to freshwater?

Mr. BUMPERS. The Senator's point is extremely well made, and I will be delighted to include that. One has to only look as far as southern California at this very moment to find out how critical water supplies can get. They are in their third or fourth year of drought there. If they do not get relief soon, people are literally going to be leaving southern California in droves.

Having said that to the Senator, I want to make two other points. First, the table which the distinguished Senator from Louisiana just handed me is not the same table I saw, but the figures are the same as the table I have and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[In acres]

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, we will send this to every Senator so they will know exactly what was involved in their State, so that if this issue comes up again, they will know exactly what the issue is in their State.

Let me return to another point. That is, I have been intending to come over here and deliver a barn-burning speech on a matter of great interest to me and has been for some time, and that is population. When I was in the first grade, there were 2 billion people on this planet. Today there are 5.2 billion people on this planet. A lot of demographers say that by the year 2025 there will be 10 billion people on this planet. Robert Wright, probably the most noted futurist in America, says that this Nation can only sustain 1.2 billion people in perpetuity.

You talk about drugs, you talk about the nuclear holocaust, you pick out what has been said on this floor a thousand times as the No. 1, most pressing issue in the world, and I challenge you, because I promise you, no other problem can be solved until that problem is solved.

Mr. SIMON. If my colleague will yield just for a moment, what he is saying is absolutely vital, but this is also why using the resources of the ocean to make land that is now desert land productive is vital. When you are in Egypt, you can just see where the vegetation from the Nile ends. It is dramatic. All these countries of North Africa that are desert lands today could be productive lands. So that what you are saying is absolutely vital.

From the beginning of time to the year 1830, we accumulated 1 billion people. It took another century to get to 2 billion. And now, as the Senator says, we are up to 5.2 billion. But I commend my colleague from Arkansas, who, more than most of us, has had a vision of how we can build a better world, and it is another illustration of it right here.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator for his very generous comments. I do not want to delay the voting. I assume that as soon as I take my seat we will start voting. I know how popular you are when you keep talking. But on the subject of population, we hear about the greenhouse effect and how trees and particularly the tropical rain forests are essential to dealing with global warming because trees absorb carbon dioxide.

So what happens? We are clearing 100 acres of tropical rain forests every minute. Think about that. One hundred acres a minute of just tropical rain forests. Why? Population. How does that work? Well, the President of Brazil, for example, was moving settlers from the slums of Sao Paulo and Rio into the Amazon Basin, giving them 5 acres; they slash and cut. Why? They use the wood for energy to cook their food, and they use the land to grow food.

Why do they have to have more land? Because we are adding 100 million people a year to the population of the planet. You are not going to deal with ozone depletion. You might deal with that one. That is one that has a lot of hope to it, but you are not going to deal with greenhouse effect and global warming by adding 100 million people a year, about 40 percent of whom will come from the Third World nations, where they are already starving, where the water is already polluted, where the life expectancy is often below 40 years. You are not going to deal with any of those problems.

So how do we address it? I certainly do not want to make this supplemental any more complicated than it already is, but last year we spent $305 billion on defense in the United States. Last year all the nations of the Earth spent $1 trillion on weapons. Last year the whole world spent $3 billion on family planning, three-tenths of 1 percent as much as we spend on weapons.

You tell me, if this population explosion continues, as most people say it is going to, what happens in the year 2025 when a nation with no water, 4 or 5 years of drought, 150, 200 million people starving to death, but they have nuclear weapons and the capacity to delivery them. Their neighbor is affluent and has food in storage, not suffering from so much drought, but refuses to help their starving neighbors. What incentive do you have to restrain the starving nation with nuclear weapons, when nobody will come to their rescue? Maybe nobody can.

I have seen agricultural exports go down in this country, and food consumption is obviously rising. One of the reasons we do not even contribute to the United Nations fund for family planning is because of that, I belive it is called, the federated planned parenthood program. One of the reasons we do not contribute is because they also disseminate family planning information in China. They do not recommend abortions. They do not force abortions. They try to teach people not to have big families that they cannot sustain and afford. But we will not even contribute to that little minuscule effort by the United Nations, because they actually go into China and disseminate planned parenthood, family planning information.

Mr. President, sometimes I think we are living in a loony bin around here. You can get people to talk about anything under the shining Sun, billions for drugs, hundreds of billions for weapons. But you start trying to hone in on those long-range problems that spell catastrophe for all of us but especialy our children and grandchildren, you cannot get two lines in the newspaper, you could not get a red line on a camera and, above all, you cannot get the attention of Members of Congress.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BUMPERS. What is the present order on when we will commence voting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is presently no order with respect to when we will commence voting.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry, for purposes of clarification, I had understood we would start voting not earlier than 7 but does that mean we will not start voting until someone asks for a rollcall vote on a particular amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator. I did not discommode anybody after all. I am pleased to know that.

Mr. BYRD. What is the pending amendment before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the Danforth amendment.

The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WIRTH. We had had an agreement earlier that six or seven or eight amendments would be considered prior to the vote. Is that not correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. WIRTH. The final amendment is this very small UNEP amendment of Senator WIRTH, Senator PELL, and Senator GORE; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WIRTH. It would be appropriate to offer that very briefly now and then go on to voting on the whole list; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can lay aside the pending amendment by unanimous consent and offer his amendment.

Mr. WIRTH. After this amendment is offered, would the Senate then go on to vote on the series of amendments starting with the Danforth amendment, is that correct, if the vote were requested to be considered at that time?

Would there by any other business under the previous unanimous-consent request that was entered into on Friday night?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There would not be any further aspects of the consent request made for each vote.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, maybe I could add clarification.

Mr. WIRTH. I would be happy to yield and receive clarification.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the unanimous-consent agreement is that there will be no votes before 7 o'clock. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. DANFORTH. And I am now waiting to try to convene Senator BIDEN, Senator SIMON, and Senator THURMOND for the purpose of a colloquy relating to my amendment. It is possible that we will have a rollcall vote on my amendment.

Senator THURMOND has indicated that he would like to ask for the yeas and nays. On the other hand, it is possible that we can agree not to have a rollcall vote on the amendment or even to withdraw the amendment, depending on what comes out of that colloquy.

Senator BIDEN has been delayed on a flight here from somehwere else. It is my understanding that he should arrive in the Senate fairly shortly.

Senator SIMON has another commitment that he is required to engage in between now and about 7:30.

So it would be my hope that around 7:30 we could conduct that colloquy, and after that colloquy, we would be in a position to determine whether or not a rollcall vote would be required on the Danforth amendment.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KASTEN. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. KASTEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WIRTH. I yield the floor.

Mr. KASTEN. I ask the Senator from Colorado if his amendment is the amendment for UNEP that still has the offset in the programs.

Mr. WIRTH. That is correct.

Mr. KASTEN. I say to the Senate that amendment is not acceptable at this time to the chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, Mr. LEAHY, and it is not acceptable to me with this offset. If the intention was to somehow bring the amendment up and have it before us and discuss it at a different time—I see the Senator from Vermont is not here—that is fine but the idea was to have it accepted.

We are not willing to accept the amendment at this time. I did not know what the purpose of the Senator bringing the amendment up at this time could be.

Mr. WIRTH. We had hoped we were going to be able to work this out and have the amendment accepted. Let me ask the Senator from Wisconsin if it would appear to be productive to work to try to find this $2½ million for the UNEP program.

Mr. KASTEN. I am pleased if it were $2½ million and not $5 million. That is progress right there.

Mr. WIRTH. For the remainder of this year.

Mr. KASTEN. Let me say at least from my point of view—the Senator from Vermont is not on the floor—I think it might be more efficient to try to work it out without the Senator putting the amendment forward at this time. But it is up to him.

If he were going to make a modification to the amendment, for example, he would then be in the position of withdrawing the amendment and sending up a new amendment. The only problem we have, as the Senator knows, is determining what the emergency nature for UNEP is, but, more importantly, the offset from the International Military Training Program which we believe is an important program and does not have extra money in it for the offset. I would be happy to proceed in any way the Senator wishes.

Mr. WIRTH. I thought that we had at least on our side been able to work this out. I think it is not appropriate. I will not offer the UNEP amendment then at this time. If it is appropriate under the unanimous-consent request that we agreed to last Friday, then the first step is to ask for a vote and then what order do votes occur on the amendments, the six or seven amendments? Will that be answered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator posing an inquiry?

Mr. WIRTH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE REPROGRAMMING OF APPROPRIATED FUNDS FOR THE PURCHASE OF BLACKWELL ISLAND NEAR COEUR D'ALENE, ID

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, last year I requested that $500,000 be provided to allow the Bureau of Land Management to purchase a 25-acre parcel of land near the town of Coeur d'Alene, ID. The land was to be jointly purchased by the BLM and the city of Coeur d'Alene to be developed and used as a boat ramp, docking facility, and boat trailer parking area for boaters using Lake Coeur d'Alene, incidentally one of the most scenic lakes in the country.

The need for the facility arose because the only public boat-launching facility in the area was downtown Coeur d'Alene and was too small to serve the ever-increasing needs of this resort town. The city of Coeur d'Alene had raised over $500,000 for the purchase and development and had requested BLM assistance in obtaining the property. The owners of the property were willing to sell and an appropriate appraisal had been made.

Recently, due to unforeseen difficulties facing the landowners, the property has been taken off the market. The BLM has indentified three other parcels of land in the Coeur d'Alene BLM District which, if this money were reprogrammed, would provide boating access and recreational opportunities for the public. Although these parcels are not on Lake Coeur d'Alene, they will assist the area in meeting the recreational demand and assist the development of tourism in northern Idaho. Thus the county commissioners of Kootenai County are in full support of the BLM's proposal.

The three parcels are along the Clearwater River in Lewis and Clearwater Counties. The Spaulding site owner has proposed a land exchange for other BLM lands in scattered parcels, as has the owner of the Pardee land above the city of Orofino. The costs of preparing these lands for exchange is estimated at $15,000 per parcel or $30,000 total. The Medley property in Orofino would be purchased in fee title for approximately $250,000 and would cost approximately $30,000 to process.

I am requesting that of the $500,000 appropriated for the purchase of Blackwell Island, $480,000 be used by the BLM for the purchase of lands or the exchange of lands and processing costs of these properties by BLM.

Mr. President, the remaining $20,000 in the Blackwell Island account will give the BLM flexibility in case the Blackwell Island property returns to the market in this fiscal year. The Coeur d'Alene BLM office feels that if it is returned to the market, they may be able to obtain an option to purchase this land at a later date. I fully support their efforts and request that the entire Senate agree to this reprogramming request.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, neither I nor my colleagues disagree with this request. I am happy to honor the request of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCLURE. I thank the senior Senator from West Virginia.

AMENDMENT NO. 1153

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes Senator BUMPERS.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, for reasons I do not understand, this is one of the busiest days I have had personally since I have been in the Senate. For that reason, I have not been able to be here to speak on behalf of the Danforth resolution. As I understand it, this is a sense-of-the-Senate resolution. Or is it a sense-of-the-Congress resolution?

Mr. DANFORTH. The resolution that is now pending is the sense-of-the-Senate resolution which incorporates into the resolution the exact language of the proposed constitutional amendment.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator very much, and I applaud his efforts.

Mr. President, let me say, first of all, I seldom find myself on the side of Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Scalia, O'Connor, or Kennedy. I think I may have voted for one constitutional amendment when I first came to the Senate, but I find myself now in a position of strongly disagreeing with the case of Missouri versus Jenkins.

I take a lot of interest in the Constitution. The thing that sets this Nation apart and the things that I hammer on educationally all the time are that our children do not know enough about our constitution; how it was drafted, what the Federalist Papers said, what role Madison and Hamilton and all of our Founding Fathers played in the drafting of what to me is the most perfect organic law ever put together.

Arthur Schlesinger, Sr., said one time that those people who gathered in Philadelphia in 1787 represented the greatest assemblage of minds ever under one roof in the history of the world. And the more I study the Constitution, the more I read Supreme Court decisions, the more I read the Federalist Papers, the more I believe that Arthur Schlesinger, Sr., was exactly right.

Mr. President, the Constitution is a sacred document to this Senator, and I do not want it tampered with capriciously or whimsically. The American people in their infinite wisdom have only seen fit to amend that document 16 times. There are 26 amendments. And, as you know, the first 10 were adopted as the Bill of Rights shortly after the Constitution was. And those 16 amendments, if you take out the fact that in the 1920's we decided we would not drink and in the 1930's we decided we would, you take those out and there are only 14.

The founders were very wise because they made the amending process difficult; two-thirds of the Senate, three-fourths of the States. And the reason they made it difficult is because they wanted to make sure there was a full-blown debate before we tampered with that organic law.

And yet, Mr. President, I think there have been something like 10,000 resolutions offered in the Congress to change the Constitution, to amend the Constitution, in the past 10 years—10,000. I bet there are a dozen to two dozen pending in the Senate right now. The President has five he wants. I am not going to vote for any of them.

But all I am saying is you are dealing with the document that has made us the freest Nation on Earth. Sometimes I think we are too free.

Getting back to my concern about children not understanding the Constitution, I think so many of our youngsters believe that this society is all take and no give. The Constitution not only provides for rights; it provides for duties.

I was in East Germany 3 days before they voted. Those people were rhapsodic about the right to vote to determine their own destiny. Incidentally, they are as excited about the possibility of getting their air cleaned up as they are about democracy and reunification. But 3 days after I left East Germany, there was an election held in which 90 percent of the people voted; many of them, almost all of them voting in a free election for the first time in 60 years. And I came home and the first newspaper article I see is the hottest Governors race in the history of Texas drawing a whopping 30 percent of the eligible voters.

I had a case one time, I was representing a client in a divorce case. I did not like him. I did not like him because all he could talk about was getting out of paying for the support of his children. I tried about 500 divorce cases when I was a country lawyer. It is a terrible indictment, but too few parents ever walked in and said: "I want my children taken care of, whatever it costs." Almost invariably the first question was what is the least do you think you can get me off for. I do not relate to that. My children are my whole life.

But I had a client one time, as I was pointing out, that I really did not like. And when the judge got through with that case, he asked the other attorney to make a presentation and he asked me to make a presentation, and I did. And when I sat down, my client said: "Dale, do you think the judge would let me address the bench?" I said, "Well, I will see." I said, "Your Honor, my client says he would like to make a statement to the court." He said, "Well, let him stand up and make it."

And he stood up and he proceeded to give that judge a really good down-home lecture about his rights. And the judge, to his everlasting credit, said, "Now, you have given me this fine lecture on your rights and I am going to tell you about your duties. Your duties are that you are going to support your spouse and these two children." I could have hugged that judge around the neck even though he was sticking it to my client.

So many people in this country think it is all freedom. And how do they think we keep the freedom? You keep the freedom by being an enlightened voter and voting responsibly. When Thomas Jefferson talked about the duty of the electorate, he was not talking about going to the polls and voting for the guy who looks cutest with the best blow dried hair that day. He was talking about knowng what the issues were in voting.

Now, this brings me to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

I am going to cosponsor his sense-of-Senate resolution. But I want to issue this caveat. I have not carefully studied the language that he is proposing as a constitutional amendment. I intend to. And the Judiciary Committee at some point is going to hold hearings and there will unquestionably be some changes made.

But I do not understand the logic of the court in saying that a life-tenured judge, confirmed by the U.S. Senate, can arbitrarily order officials to raise taxes on people who have no say-so. That violates everything I know about democracy and represenative government, Mr. President. Alexander Hamilton said specifically in Federalist Paper No. 78, "The court shall have no power over the purse."

I understand, intellectually, what the courts say. They are saying you cannot deprive somebody of a constitutional right because of money. In the Kansas City case, here was a school plan that was going to cost $600 million, double the school tax in Kansas City, to accommodate what I consider to be a rather grandiose plan—computers in every classroom, swimming pools, the whole 9 yards, the kind of things all of us would like our children to enjoy when they are in school. But double the tax on the people to achieve that plan? Why could the judge not have said, "Look, as long as you have a good integration order, and nobody, white or black, is being discriminated against, let's implement a reasonable plan and make sure that money is used in a nondiscriminatory way." It seems to me that the court could have avoided the thicket into which they have walked.

Now, I get my taxes raised. I live in Montgomery County, MD. They raise my taxes every year. They do not ever say, "Come see me sometime, and we'll discuss it." Nothing. I just get a notice in the mail. I appealed one time and they just sent me a second notice saying "Your taxes are still the same."

In Montgomery County, the county board can raise my taxes. But in Little Rock, AR, they cannot do that. The only way you can raise somebody's taxes in Arkansas is by a vote of the people. Now here you had a district judge in Kansas City who said, "I hereby raise your taxes by 100 percent."

The Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit and the Supreme Court both said: "You cannot do that. You can order the board or you can order the city or the county or the State officials to raise taxes, but you cannot do it."

So they reversed the decision to that extent, but then they said you can accomplish the same thing by ordering somebody else. You can order these officials to raise taxes.

What are they going to do in the State of Arkansas where you cannot raise taxes without a vote of the people? You can order them, I suppose, to submit a tax increase to the people. But if the people say no, that means no. What is a democracy, except our right to decide for ourselves?

So, I do not know what the court would do in that case. They said in the Jenkins case that if there is a Missouri law that puts a cap on how much tax you can raise, and that law keeps somebody from a constitutional right, that law can be waived.

That is stretching it pretty far. If these Supreme Court judges were elected, it might make a little more sense. Mr. President, as I say, I am not signing onto the precise words of the resolution of the Senator from Missouri, but he has brought to this body one of the most compelling constitutional issues I have seen since I have been in the Senate. I do not take these constitutional proposals lightly.

I know what most of them are, the 10,000 that have been introduced around here in the last 10 years. A Senator throws it in the hopper, makes a barn-burning speech, rushes back to his press secretary, and says: "Tell the folks my heart is with them." And happily, that is the last we hear of that constitutional amendment.

But this is different. And I am going to treat it differently. I have gone home and I have made speech after speech about my reverence and awe of the Constitution, and how I do not think it ought to be tinkered with. But I draw the line here.

I have the utmost respect for the majority who wrote this decision and who agreed to it. But unless I change my mind, Mr. President, I intend to support a well-crafted constitutional amendment.

I will tell my colleagues the other thing the Court has done, in my opinion. They have guaranteed that this is going to be the 27th amendment to the Constitution. We will have no problem, in my opinion, in the Congress on getting a two-thirds vote. And we will have no problem getting a three-fourths vote of the States.

I say intellectually I understand it, but it flies right in the face of what Madison and Hamilton said. I disagreed with Robert Bork on that original intent theory. How can you have original intent on things that you could not possibly have foreseen 200 years ago?

But the one thing they did foresee was at some time, someday, the court might try to levy taxes. And they said specifically, "The court shall not have that right."

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, while there is a lull, I thought I would just bring the Senate up to date on what has happened today with respect to this particular sense-of-the-Senate resolution.

Two weeks ago this coming Wednesday, the Supreme Court decided the case of Missouri versus Jenkins. The issue raised by that case is whether or not Federal judges have the power to order tax increases.

A couple of days after that decision by the Supreme Court, I—with, it is now up to about 25 cosponsors—introduced a constitutional amendment resolution which provides that neither the Supreme Court not any inferior court of the United States shall have the power to instruct or order a State or political subdivision thereof, or an official of such State or political subdivision, to lay or increase taxes.

I then this morning offered a sense-of-the-Senate resolution incorporating precisely those same words. The theory of the sense-of-the-Senate resolution was, first of all, to try to at least flash some caution light for future courts, so, hopefully, they are not going to go wild after the Jenkins decision. And second, to give Members of the Senate an opportunity to focus on the issue of the constitutional amendment.

I suppose late last week, before I offered the sense-of-the-Senate amendment to both Chairman BIDEN of the Judiciary Committee, and Chairman SIMON of the Constitutional Amendment Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, we agreed at the time if we could have a clear committee on the part of the committee that there would be some progress, particularly hearings in the committee and a good-faith effort to do something, then it would probably be better not to have even a sense-of-the-Senate vote at this point in language which is a draft of a constitutional amendment resolution.

Subsequently, this afternoon, Senator THURMOND was on the floor, and Senator THURMOND asked for the yeas and nays. I asked Senator THURMOND whether he would withhold the yeas and nays. He said that he wanted to be assured not only that there would be hearings in the Judiciary Committee, but also that the Judiciary Committee would do something, that it would report out something, either with or without approval, or without any statement at all on whether the Judiciary Committee approves or disapproves either the constitutional amendment or the statute.

Senator THURMOND prefers a statutory solution to this problem. My preferences is for a constitutional amendment. I think on a matter relating to the basic powers of Government, it really is a constitutional issue and I am hesitant in getting into what others have called court stripping with respect to a statutory solution.

That is how we stand. I am told Senator THURMOND is on his way to the floor. My hope is that we could get some kind of colloquy going among the involved Senators—Senator THURMOND, Senator BIDEN, and Senator SIMON—and then get a decision whether or not we want a rollcall vote at this time. If Senator THURMOND wants a rollcall vote, that is fine with me.

On the other hand, if we can get a commitment hopefully to get something reported out of the Judiciary Commttee and not have it just bottled up forever, my own view would be that would be the best possible result.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, it is my hope we will not proceed to a rollcall vote on this sense-of-the-Senate resolution because of the tremendous complexities involved in this issue.

I can think of no more far-reaching decision the Court has handed down, when it has, in effect, authorized the imposition of taxes or has entered an order that a district court has the power to set aside State constitutional limitations.

This may even be a more far-reaching decision than Brown versus Board of Education. In fact, it may be that we have to go back to Marbury versus Madison, in 1803, where the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the Court itself had the power to decide constitutional issues, to find a decision which is as far-reaching as is this decision.

I was absent earlier today when Senator DANFORTH and Senator BYRD engaged in a colloquy on this subject, but I have since read the transcript.

Senator DANFORTH has presented a powerful position on the Federalist Papers and the origin of the power to tax being the power to destroy, and the foundation of the Boston Tea Party and the Constitution on the issue of no taxation without representation, and his description that the Court is not a representative body but that the Congress is the representative body, and that it is anomalous and really inconsistent with some of the very basic constitutional provisions for the Court to assert the ultimate authority to tax.

The distinguished Senator from Missouri then analyzed a variety of alternatives that the Court might have pursued of lesser import than the imposition of the tax. But it may be that at some point there is no way to see to it that a constitutional remedy is enforced without the imposition of a tax. Were that to be the situation, there would be a head-on conflict between two of the most fundamental provisions of our constitutional government. It may be a conflict between the two most fundamental provisions of our Constitution because the central power of the Congress, perhaps other than the authority to declare war, or perhaps even including the power to declare war, because it happens so infrequently, and perhaps is outmoded today with wars being fought without being declared, is the power to tax. But, similarly, the central power of the Supreme Court is the responsibility to carry out the mandate of the Constitution. It is very hard to separate a remedy from the assertion or declaration of a constitutional right. I was very surprised, Mr. President, in 1982, when this body, by a vote of 58 to 38, decided that the Court ought not to have the remedy of busing to enforce a constitutional right.

It is my view that we have issues here which are of such tremendous importance that we ought not to make a decision at this time and that we ought not to vote on this matter at this juncture. This is an issue which has been running through the Federal decisions for many, many years.

If we are to proceed with a statute, for example, Mr. President, I think we are running directly into court-stripping, and that this issue ought not be decided by Congress on a statutory base. It may well be that as a matter of public policy the Supreme Court of the United States has gone too far in taking on the power to order taxation. But the one principle that I think is fundamental over all others is that the Supreme Court of the United States is the final arbiter of the Constitution.

I applaud what the distinguished Senator from Missouri has had to say about not being in favor of a statute but being in favor of a constitutional amendment, so that this issue, if we are to observe the authority of the Supreme Court to be the final decisionmaker, ought to proceed in the mode of a constitutional amendment.

This business of court-stripping has been considered very extensively in some of our hearings. During the hearing on Chief Justice Rehnquist, for example, questions were propounded about the authority of the Congress to take away jurisdiction of the Court in first amendment issues. At least as to first amendment issues, Chief Justice Rehnquist stated in his confirmation proceedings that the Congress lacked that kind of authority.

As I read the decision in Missouri versus Jenkins, there are a great many open questions. For example, at page 15 of the slip opinion, starting at page 14, the majority opinion says:

> We turn to the tax increase imposed by the district court. The State urges us to hold the tax increase violated article III, the 10th amendment and the principles of Federal-State comity. We find it unnecessary to reach the difficult constitutional issues, for we agree with the State that the tax increase contravened the principles of comity that must govern the exercise of the district courts equitable discretion in this area.

So there may be another bar by the 10th amendment which is not comprehended within the Supreme Court's opinion.

But in sum, Mr. President, these are very weighty issues, and I, for one, would not like to be called upon to make a judgment on this state of the record at this time on these very, very important principles.

I am ranking member, with Senator SIMON, on the Constitutional Law Subcommittee, and speaking for myself, I would be prepared to proceed to hearings at the earliest possible opportunity. For myself, I would be prepared to start immediately. We ought to have constitutional scholars; we ought to have people who are recognized in the field come before the Senate. But most importantly, we ought to have a chance to reflect on this very important issue and not be called upon to rush to judgment with a vote on a sense-of-the-Senate resolution this evening.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I concur with my colleague from Pennsylvania. I think we ought to proceed with some caution. We have not had a chance to examine this issue. Rather than adopt a sense-of-the-Senate resolution tonight of which we do not know its significance, I think we are much better off having hearings and having them expeditiously. As for the subcommittee, I say to this body that we will report something out favorably or unfavorably. I am not trying to bottle anything up. But I think we ought to be very careful as we proceed.

Let me just say to my colleague from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND]—if I may have his attention for a moment—I assured him we would not have this dialog until we notified him, until he was on the floor. It started before I was on the floor. I did not try to evade my commitment to Senator THURMOND. But I can give the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from South Carolina assurances that I personally would like to proceed to hold hearings and consider this matter. I think it would be a great mistake for us to adopt a sense-of-the-Senate resolution. If we decide to go ahead, then I am going to speak on this tonight. But I think we ought to proceed with some caution in this area that, frankly, has all kinds of ramifications beyond the obvious.

I know Senator THURMOND has requested the yeas and nays. I would prefer, if we could get agreement from the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from South Carolina, that we move expeditiously to hearings. I will give a commitment on the only area I can give a commitment, and that is the subcommittee, that we would report something out favorably or unfavorably. I hope we can proceed from there.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, is the Senator finished?

Mr. SIMON. I am finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS].

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I spoke a moment ago about my concern with this decision. I am very pleased to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Illinois on not going to a vote on this.

I may disagree slightly with the Senator from Illinois about proceeding expeditiously, if that means in a hurry. When you are talking about an amendment to the Constitution, I belong to the wait-just-a-minute club. While I want to redress the problem that we have talked about here, I do not want to do it hurriedly. I want the Judiciary Committee—and I know they will; I know my distinguished friend from Illinois will be part of those deliberations—to consider this very cautiously, with a great deal of deliberation and make sure that every word in the amendment, if such a constitutional amendment comes out of the Judiciary Committee, has been well conceived and thought out. If there is a legislative remedy, which I doubt, then I would prefer that, as long as it is not court-stripping. I have a real problem with court-stripping. I stood on this floor back in the 1970's and early 1980's time and time again when we tried to deprive the Courts' jurisdiction over cases involving busing, abortion, the separation of church and state—every kind of issue that somebody disagrees with. And some always wanted to take away the right of the courts to make decisions.

Once you take the Courts' right to render a decision on what is and what is not constitutional, then you are really started down a terrible road.

So I would like to urge, and earnestly solicit my friend from South Carolina to allow the yeas and nays to be withdrawn—with the assurance that this amendment is going to the Judiciary Committee, that hearings are going to be held, and that the amendment is going to be considered.

This is one of these cases where I doubt that the Senator from South Carolina feels any stronger about this issue than I do. But still, I want us to proceed in a very cautious and intelligent way. And in a way that when it comes back to this floor again for deliberation, we will know the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Illinois, and all the other members of the Judiciary Committee, including the Senator from Pennsylvania, have given this their very best shot.

Mr. THURMOND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am an original cosponsor of a proposed statute to alter the Jenkins decision. In fact we introduced one on the first legislative day last year when it looked like the Supreme Court was going to consider this question. I did not know which way the Court was going. But it turned out the Court went the way that we feared they might. We introduced S. 34 before this decision was handed down.

I have consulted with various constitutional scholars, and they said that a statute will remedy the situation. It is not necessary to have a constitutional amendment. I am willing to support both. I have joined Senator DANFORTH in support of his constitutional amendment. This is similar to the flag burning issue. In that situation, I felt that a constitutional amendment was necessary but supported a statute in the hopes that it would suffice. Our constitutional advisers thought a constitutional amendment was necessary with that issue but feel here that a statute will suffice.

On the flag issue, a statute was passed. I voted for that too. Senator BIDEN did also. Here I will go for both. This is such an important issue. This goes back to the very foundations of our Government. The legislative body makes the law. The legislative body imposes the taxes. The executive branch merely enforces the law. The Supreme Court as part of the judicial branch, does nothing but interpret the law.

I was shocked when this decision was handed down. I want to commend the able Senator from Missouri for his interest in trying to get something done. Either one suits me, either one. I will go for both. I do not think the constitutional amendment is necessary. I think the statute will do it as these advisers have said.

All this amendment today, introduced by the Senator from Missouri, says is that it is the sense of the Senate that the Supreme Court nor any inferior court of the United States shall have the power to instruct or order a State or political subdivision thereof, or an official of such State or political subdivision to lay or increase taxes. It merely says that the courts do not have the power to order officials to lay taxes.

Of course they do not have that power. They never had that power. This is a new quotation that has just arisen in the history of this Nation. We cannot permit this decision to stand. It was a 5 to 4 decision. We have to do something about it.

I felt that we ought to pass the sense-of-the-Senate resolution to let the American people know how we feel. We can later discuss whether we need a constitutional amendment or a statute. The Judiciary Committee is going to go into the details and hear that. But it does not hurt to promptly let the people of this country know that we are not going to stand for the courts of this land levying taxes or ordering officials to levy taxes. That is my position.

If you want to have an amendment tonight, if you want to vote on this, it suits me. If the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is willing to hold hearings on this constitutional amendment and the statute, and agree to report it out by a certain date and back to the Senate, I will not push for a vote on this amendment tonight.

Mr. SIMON. If my colleague will yield.

Mr. THURMOND. I am glad to yield to the able Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. The chairman of the committee is not on the floor. I cannot speak for the chairman. I cannot speak for the subcommittee. I can assure you I will hold hearings and we will report it out favorably or unfavorably. Whether it is statute or constitutional amendment I cannot tell you.

Mr. THURMOND. If the committee will act on this matter—I just want to get action—one way or the other and report it out favorably or unfavorably and let it to come to the Senate. The entire Senate ought to act on this matter. This is a matter of great import to the whole Nation. It is a matter that affects the Constitution of this country. We ought to act on it.

We ought to have the courage to act on it and not be afraid of these judges. These judges have not been elected by anybody. We have been elected by the people. The Congress is the body under the Constitution to levy taxes and not the judiciary. If the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is willing to tell us that they will hold hearings and report it back to the Senate, that satisfies me. I just want to see a vote.

Mr. LEAHY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I understand the concerns of my distinguished colleague from South Carolina. But I think he has to understand the concerns of many of us as well.

There is no argument about the fact that this is a major momentous decision. It is the decision that I am not certain at this moment whether I support or whether I disagree with. It is a decision that came about in a civil rights case where the community was not accepting its responsibility in order to meet the burdens of the desegregation order. As a consequence, it went to the Supreme Court. And, it is a very conservative Supreme Court. There is no wild-eyed liberal Supreme Court. This is a Supreme Court that has four or five members appointed by President Reagan and President Bush. They came to a conclusion on this subject. I have not had a chance to read the decision. I have only read the newspaper reports.

Now we have the Chairman of the Constitutional Subcommittee indicating his willingness to conduct hearings, and indicating a willingness to report it out of the Constitutional Subcommittee. But I think the Senator from South Carolina is attempting to establish a very dangerous precedent, one that he has used previously; but I say, I do not think we ought to do it on a regular basis; that is, to say to a committee we will send a measure to you but you have to bring it back to the floor of the Senate by a date certain.

I wish I could say to my friend on the Commerce Committee, Senator HOLLINGS, I have some measures over there I would like to be able to be certain that committee acted on and move them forward. I think there are some issues that are in the Armed Services Committee that I would like to see acted upon and brought back to the floor of the Senate. I think there are some issues that have to do with the Appropriations Committee I would like to get some action on and have a vote up or down on the floor of the U.S. Senate. I think there are issues in every committee in this body.

But I do not know of any committee of this body where we have established the practice of saying we will send something to you from the floor, then you have to report it back by a date certain, and it has to come back to the floor of the Senate.

I respect my colleague from South Carolina. I know of his strong feelings on this subject. I stand here, and I am not prepared to say he is wrong. He may be right. I really do not know enough about this decision. I have not had a chance to read it. I have not had a chance to study it. I have not had a chance to think about its implications.

You have the Chairman of the Constitutional Subcommittee saying he will pick it up and bring it back to the Judiciary Committee. You are the ranking member of that Judiciary Committee. That Judiciary Committee, of which I am also a member, has the right to report it out, to recommend it for passage. It has the right to report it out and recommend it and indicate it is opposed to it or it has the right to take no action whatsoever.

But I would urge upon my colleague the fact that telling a committee of which you are the ranking member——

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have regular order, in that Senators should address other Senators through the Chair, not in the second person?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

I think it is important that we not get to a point where we start to send matters to a committee and advise the committee or direct the committee that they have to act within a certain period of time or else. I do not think that is good legislating. I do not think that is the procedure we use around this body, that we have used in the number of years I have been here. I have seen it happen in a few cases in the instance of the Senator from South Carolina. But I think it does not work. And it is not the right legislative procedure to be followed.

I hope my friend and colleague from South Carolina will not push that matter.

He is on the committee. If the votes are there, send the bill out to the floor, and so be it. If they are not, there ought not be any arbitrary obligation on the part of the committee to send it to the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I just remind the Senate that, while we can debate and discuss constitutional amendments here tonight, constitutional amendments are not going to pass tonight or this week. The Senator from Ohio is absolutely right. We can debate the issue of the death penalty. The question of the death penalty is not going to be settled tonight or this week. We can debate abortion. The ultimate question of abortion is not going to be settled tonight or later this week.

The fact is, Mr. President, we are here on a dire emergency supplemental appropriation bill, for disaster assistance, unemployment compensation, refugees, and a major foreign aid package, in part to be provided for the new Government of Nicaragua upon the inauguration last week of President Chamorro. Another part is involving the country of Panama, in anticipation of a visit by the President of Panama, who is here in this country today.

It is wonderful to have these debates. It gives everybody a chance to speak at great length. I am sure it looks good to the folks back home, but the fact is we are not going to settle the Nation's questions of abortion, the death penalty, constitutional amendments or anything else today. We are here on a dire emergency supplemental appropriation. Let us act like it is a dire emergency supplemental appropriation, and either pass the darn thing or vote it down, one way or the other.

I yield the floor.

Mr. THURMOND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DASCHLE). The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. I just want to say that we are not discussing subject matter jurisdiction. We are addressing the remedial jurisdiction of the federal courts. Can the judges order officials to put on taxes? In my opinion, the Constitution does not permit it. I think that is a terrible decision. I have received a reaction from my constituents, and I have received reactions from other States, as the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee and former chairman, and they want to know what are we going to do about it.

I think we ought to act reasonably. The able chairman of the Judiciary Committee is here, and I would be glad to hear what he has to say. As I understood the distinguished Senator from Illinois, he said that he would report it out of the subcommittee promptly, and I wonder if the chairman would act with reasonableness so as to get it to the Senate within a reasonable time.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, there is a changing set of agreements that has been going on in the last couple days. Let me say what I am prepared to agree to. That is, that I am prepared to agree to have the Senate Judiciary Committee thoroughly look at this question and hold legitimate, genuine hearings, calling in the leading constitutional experts for and against this proposition. I am also prepared to commit that the Senate Judiciary Committee, subcommittee and full committee will work its will.

I am not prepared, and will not again ever agree on the floor of the U.S. Senate, to report out anything by a date certain. If the Senate wishes to have the will of the committee be heard, whatever that will is, assuming the will is that we do not want to do anything, then fine, send it back to us; send it to us for your consideration. But if the Senate really only wants a guarantee that they are going to get to vote on something that may not be worthy of a vote, then bypass us, vote on it now.

I am prepared to vote on this resolution now. Let us do it. We are wasting too much time. Or take our word for it that we will take it to the committee, we will hold hearings. I cannot speak for the chairman of the subcommittee. We have autonomous subcommittees in our Judiciary Committee, and I have not learned to be authoritative enough, but I can tell you one thing. I will not agree that this will go above or before anything from the constitutional amendment on a balanced budget. I will not agree it will climb above the docket of 25 other important things this committee has a responsibility to report out.

If my colleagues conclude on the committee that they are willing to bypass the debate on the constitutional amendment on a balanced budget, bypass the constitutional amendment debate on the line-item veto, bypass the legislation we have before us, which is incredibly controversial, about the question of aliens and the changes in the immigration law, bypass the legislation relating to the crime bill, bypass the legislation relating to everything from the death penalty to habeas corpus, then, so be it.

But I am, quite frankly, tired of the U.S. Senate politely, but firmly, directing me as chairman to set the agenda of my committee. If you want to set the agenda, vote, but I will not agree to anything other than an honest, straightforward consideration of this proposal, a full-blown hearing, or set of hearings, and no attempt to delay one way or another. But it will have to get in line with the other constitutional amendments.

I respect my colleague from South Carolina more than I can say, and all who knows us know that to be true, but we have so many constitutional amendments that we might as well save them up and declare ourselves a second Founding Fathers and have a new bill of rights. We have so many of them rattling around in my committee. So if you all want a resolution to go on record that courts should not tax—and I subscribe to that position, they should not tax—then let us vote on a sense of the Senate.

But I doubt if we said to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, we want a guarantee from him that the first appropriations bill he will report out will be A, B, or C, and within that bill the first matter to be considered will be the dam located in Oshkosh, he would be on the floor, and this place would come to a screeching halt within 10 seconds. I am learning from the masters around here, like the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the chairman of the Finance Committee and the chairman of the Agriculture Committee. I am not signing on any more.

So if we want to vote, let us vote. If we want to guarantee that this Senator, as chairman of the committee, will guarantee that there are full-blown legitimate hearings and that this matter will get in line in its place within the committee, I will guarantee that. Short of that, obviously, I do not dictate what happens in the Senate, but I will no longer participate in the dictation of my demise as chairman of the committee. Thank you very much.

Mr. DANFORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I think that, as I understand it, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee has made a reasonable suggestion. The chairman has stated that there will be full-blown hearings. The chairman, as I understand it, has stated that he will not attempt to bottle this up, but that the committee will be allowed to work its will. The chairman has further said if the members of the committee want to move this ahead in the line, they will be allowed to do that.

I believe that they will want to do that, because I think the present state of affairs with the Supreme Court decision operates as an engraved invitation to every Federal judge throughout the country that raising taxes is the order of the day. I, therefore, do believe time is very much a matter of importance with respect to this amendment.

So I would hope that the members of the committee would decide that. I agree with those who say that the Senate should not be voting on what amounts to the wording of a constitutional amendment tonight.

I thought when I first thought up this amendment it was a great idea. I really believe, on reflection, that this is a matter of sufficient importance that even in the form of a sense-of-the-Senate amendment we should not be voting on specific wording tonight.

Therefore, my suggestions would be—and it is my amendment we are talking about—that the Senate not press this to a vote. In fact, the yeas and nays have not even been ordered. So that would be my thought, that we would take the chairman's offer and then dispose of it.

Mr. SIMON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANFORTH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has not yet yielded the floor.

Mr. DANFORTH. I yield.

Mr. SIMON. If I follow the Senator from Missouri, he is in a situation where he is considering withdrawing the amendment, is that correct?

Mr. DANFORTH. That is correct.

Mr. President, I do withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right. The amendment is withdrawn.

The amendment (No. 1553) was withdrawn.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader sought recognition.

Mr. THURMOND. Could I say a word?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly. I yield to the distinguished Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. In view of the statement by the able chairman of the Judiciary Committee that there will be no delay or efforts to block consideration of the proposed constitutional amendment or the statute in the committee and that they could be reported out in a reasonable time and also reserving the right to offer a statutory remedy here to any other bill up in the Senate and since Senator DANFORTH has withdrawn his amendment, I think that settles the matter for tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I have been down this street once before. I want to make sure I did not mislead anyone. The way the Senator from Missouri characterized what I said is precisely correct. The way the Senator from South Carolina characterized it is slightly different. I did not agree to report anything out. I agreed to let the committee work its will. It may be that the committee works its will and concludes it never wishes to report anything out, that it never wishes to bring it up even. That is what I am committed to do. I think that the Senator from South Carolina meant to say that. I do not want to mislead anybody in this body about what is going to happen. I hope we will resolve it and resolve it expeditiously.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the Danforth amendment represents a commendable statement of the Senate's commitment to the core constitutional principles which were repudiated by the Supreme Court's recent decision in Missouri v. Jenkins. The four dissenters from that decision did not exaggerate when they described Jenkins as an "expansion of judicial power beyond all precedent" and a grave blow to our system of representative democracy.

Judicial taxation is taxation without representation. And whether taxes are dictated by a king in ermine robes or a judge in black robes, taxation without representation is tyranny.

The Jenkins decision starts us down the road to the tyranny of judicial taxation. It is imperative for the U.S. Congress to do all it can to prevent one further step down that road.

For that reason, I support the Danforth amendment as an initial step in that effort. It is important for the Senate to promptly put itself on record against judicial taxation. And I commend Senator DANFORTH for his initiative.

But this amendment will hardly resolve the serious threat to our system of Government posed by the specter of judicial taxation. In the coming months, we must do more.

Under article III of the Constitution, Congress has unquestioned power to regulate the jurisdiction of the lower Federal courts—the courts which Congress alone created and which have no jurisdiction directly emanating from the Constitution. Lower Federal court jurisdiction is constitutionally defined by the legislative mandate of Congress.

We can and must exercise that power to prevent the tyranny of judicial taxation. S. 34, the Judicial Taxation Prohibition Act, represents an effective and reasonable response to the threat posed by the Jenkins decision. Since I introduced that bill over a year ago, 21 additional Senators have cosponsored it. The JTPA would merely restore the lower Federal courts to the status they have held throughout their history that is, vested with extensive powers to enforce their judgments, but lacking the power to dictate tax policy. That power must be reversed exclusively to the elected legislatures.

I urge all my colleagues to give careful consideration to S. 34, and to lend it their support. In the meantime, I strongly endorse the amendment offered by Senator DANFORTH as an important expression of the Senate's commitment to the preservation of representative democracy and its rejection of judicial taxation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

AMENDMENT NO. 1563 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1554

(Purpose: To make an additional $25,000,000 available to Department of Justice for financial fraud investigations)

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] proposes an amendment numbered 1563 to amendment No. 1554.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following: ": Provided, That of the funds appropriated for Research, Development, Testing, and Evaluation, Air Force, 1990-91, in P.L. 101-165, $30,000,000 available for 'Space Boosters' is rescinded: Provided, That an additional amount of $7,600,000 is appropriated for 'Salaries and expenses. United States attorneys' and an additional amount of $11,500,000 is appropriated for 'Federal Bureau of Investigations. Salaries and Expenses', both amounts to be available for the investigation of fraud and other criminal activity in financial institutions.".

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado has brought to the attention of the Senate a very important and necessary opportunity, and that opportunity is for us to provide the necessary funds for the Justice Department and the FBI to pursue the thieves who have looted the savings and loan associations that we know have been taken advantage of.

At the same time, as the Senator from Colorado has provided, I think, a very important service to the Senate, this body, in doing so, I am concerned that his amendment, which is financed by reducing the appropriations for Panama—which itself has already been reduced—would send the wrong message to the new government in Panama and would further undercut the support we are trying to give that country as it recovers from not only the economic problems visited upon it, the mismanagement that it has suffered from; also, let us face it, it is trying to recover from a brief but quite devastating war that we were in the forefront of bringing about, a brief war, a fairly bloodless war but a war nonetheless, fortunately a war in the cause of freedom and democracy.

The source of this money that I propose in my amendment is a different source. My amendment is a perfecting amendment to that of the Senator from Colorado, and basically it simply says that we will take the money in the form of a rescission from an account that would fund what is known as the space boosters program. As to the space boosters program, according to the members of the Appropriations Committee, they have indicated to my staff that this is not money that the Appropriations Committee feels is necessary to be spent. It is not money that the Air Force seeks to spend. They do not want to spend it. And the rescission in the amendment for the space boosters program will exactly offset the funds that the Senator from Colorado seeks to appropriate for——

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania still retains the floor.

Mr. DIXON. I wonder if he will yield for a question.

Mr. HEINZ. I am pleased to.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, may I inquire of my friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania, do I understand that he is offering a second-degree amendment to the Wirth amendment, that instead of taking the money from the Panama tourist funds it would take it out of the Air Force bomber program?

Mr. HEINZ. No. The Senator is almost correct.

Mr. DIXON. That is the closest I have been in a long time. Where is the Senator taking it from?

Mr. HEINZ. It comes from the space booster program.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator would rather cut space boosters and increase the Panama tourist fund?

Mr. HEINZ. First, I would like to take a gentle but firm objection to the fact that we are necessarily cutting tourism for Panama. I am not quite sure what is left of the appropriation for Panama. I am not sure I can vouch for the Senator's characterization of it. But I would say this: I think to further cut the Panama appropriation sends the wrong message to the people in Panama. I do think that it would be a preferable strategy to take the money from an account that nobody wants to spend. The Air Force does not want to spend the money we have appropriated for the space boosters program. I am told that the members of the Appropriations Committee do not want to spend it, and apparently the administration does want to spend money for Panama.

So unless the Senator has some kind of moral objection, I would hope he would support the amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEINZ. I am pleased to yield to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BYRD. Would he be agreeable to making that $25 million instead of $30 million, for this reason? The Air Force and the Defense Department have identified about $25 million in fiscal 1990 funds. The space booster program is available for higher priority purposes. They cannot be sure it will be above that.

Mr. HEINZ. Would the chairman advise me whether or not that would be a sufficient offset?

Mr. BYRD. It would not fully offset the $30 million. But I am just expressing the hope there could be a reduction agreed to on the part of the authors of the amendment as well so perhaps we could accept this and get on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania still retains the floor.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, let me just say what the chairman of the Appropriations Committee has proposed is fine with me, but I feel I need to advise the Senate that it may not result—I do not know what the spend-out rates are—in a budget neutral amendment. The best way to solve that would be if the Senator from Colorado could agree to reduce his amendment just a small amount, maybe by $3 or $4 million. If he would be willing to do that, I think we could all agree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania wish to retain the floor?

Mr. HEINZ. No. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado initially had a very simple amendment. We debated this 7 hours ago and that was a simple amendment that said what we want to do is to provide the money requested by the FBI and the U.S. attorneys' offices for the purpose of pursuing fraud and related activities surrounding the S&L industry, a very simple proposition.

Then where was the offset? We debated the other day at great length the Panama account, and in the Panama account was some $30 million to promote tourism in Panama. The Senator from Illinois and I had quite an extensive discussion about that this afternoon saying that it did not seem to us in a dire emergency supplemental we ought to be providing funding for promotion of tourism in Panama, twice as much money as would be provided for the promotion of tourism by the Federal Government in the U.S. overall. It seemed to be a very simple trade: the S&L crisis and a dire emergency in the United States. And we ought to fund it.

Now, 7 hours later, after this has been noticed—we talked about this on Friday—we sent a Dear Colleague letter around and it was sent to everybody. The program comes back in with a request for a second-degree amendment to cut a research program for the future generation of space boosters.

I thought we had in this country—and I have just heard from the administration—a significant set of commitments to space in the United States, that space was a priority of the administration. We talked about it and talked about it, and I think it is a priority. This is not a military program. This research program for the future generation of space boosters essentially is going right ahead with giving us the opportunity for space boosters in a whole variety of new opportunities.

So I think this is a very ill-conceived amendment and I would oppose the amendment. I hope we could go back and vote on the initial very simply tradeoff of pursuing the S&L crisis versus tourism.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DIXON. I want to fully support my friend from Colorado, who has been very forthright in his statement about this amendment.

If my friend from Pennsylvania wants to offer a second-degree amendment, well, that is fine with me. But I want to say that I think that the issue before us, the Wirth amendment, is a very clear one. Do you want to spend $30 million for advertising tourism in Panama or do you want to spend $30 million to send the crooks in this country that defrauded the savings and loan to jail? Now that is a good issue. I want to have a vote on it.

If you want to take a choice about whether you take it out of tourism funds from Panama or sending folks into space, that is OK with me. I vote to take it out of tourism for Panama.

I would hope that we would reject the amendment by the Senator from Pennsylvania and support the amendment by the Senator from Colorado, which is a very forthright, straightforward amendment and one that I think is entirely appropriate and one that the American people support.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I just want to say it is easy to pick on Panama. They do not have much going for them, apparently, in this body. That happens to be their principal industry. We are trying to get them back on their feet. I do not know if we can use any more money or not. I am advised all the money they can use for prosecutors—we want prosecutors. We want all the things they need as far as the S&L corruption is concerned.

Keep in mind Panama may be an easy target and we have tried that before. The reason they are requesting this money is because they are trying to get back on their feet. That is their single biggest industry. It is not true in America but it is in Panama. That is why the request was made. So I would hope if we cannot agree to the substitute by the Senator from Pennsylvania that maybe we would just defeat both amendments.

Mr. DIXON. Will the minority leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

Mr. DIXON. I yield to the majority leader, always.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, whatever we do, I think we should vote. I think the subject has been thoroughly explored. There will be at least three and possibly four votes now if the second-degree amendment is offered and a vote is held on that first if it cannot be worked out.

When I said the vote would occur not earlier than 7, I had in mind shortly after 7. I know that many Senators were here present and ready to vote. It is my hope that we can either agree that the amendment will be accepted—if it is not accepted I think we all agree we have to vote. Sometime you reach a point where Senators have to vote and express their will.

Mr. WIRTH. We can vote on it, Mr. President, immediately.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I asked a question and yielded to the majority leader.

Will the minority leader yield.

Mr. DOLE. I do not have the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. Does the minority leader know that the appropriation in the supplemental appropriation bill for tourism money for Panama is twice what we spend for the 50 States in the United States of America?

Mr. DOLE. I hear that.

Mr. LEAHY. Will the Senator yield on that?

Mr. DOLE. Let me respond to the question, because I was asked the question.

As I indicated, we have a little more going for us in the United States than they have in Panama. We have devastated their economy. We imposed sanctions. A lot of Panamanians were killed. They have been devastated.

If you do not have any interest in Panama, get up and make those arguments if you want.

It just seems to me that we have a special responsibility in this case. And if we do not have a special responsibility, I do not know what one is. It is easy to get up and make fun of Panama. They do not have any lobbyists around here. I have not seen anybody around knocking on our door. We need to do what is right for Panama.

Yes, just take it out of tourism. It is not a joke in Panama. That is about all they have to sustain them and get them back on their feet.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, so Senators will understand on Panama, the needs of Panama are serious. As I have said before, I had a different package in mind. But just so everybody will understand, the distinguished Senator from Illinois, the distinguished minority leader and others, there are no earmarks in here for tourism or anything else in Panama. And we have very specifically—I am chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee that handles this bill.

And I hope that the distinguished Republican leader might hear this, if I might have the attention of the distinguished Senator from Kansas and the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

As chairman of the subcommittee that handles the foreign aid package, along with the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN] we specifically did not earmark any money on Panama. We had, between the two of us, differing ideas on what the total amount should be. But I felt very strongly that the President of the United States and the Secretary of State and the Panamanians and the President of Panama and the Panamanian Government should have as much leeway as possible in determining how that money should be spent.

Let me read what it says in the bill. It says for Panama:

> For an additional amount for the "Economic Support Fund", $420,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1991, which shall be made available only for assistance for Panama: Provided, That of this amount up to $15,000,000 may be used for a debt-for-nature swap and for immediate environmental needs.

Which was the amendment that I had.

But we have tried to give much flexibility to the Government of Panama and to the Government of the United States in handling the foreign aid request. I would hate very much to see us now start earmarking within that because I do not think any one of us can state today precisely what each specific need of Panama might be between now and the time the major bill comes through. So I urge Senators not to start earmarking the Panama legislation.

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEAHY. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. As I understand it, I do not know who is doing the earmarking, but somebody said there is $30 million for tourism. The Senator from Colorado said it and the Senator from Illinois said it. I do not know where they found $30 million in the bill for tourism.

The subcommittee chairman points out that there are not any earmarks, it is $420 million, so I do not know how they get $30 million for tourism.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I believe I still have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader retains the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. If I could just respond to that very briefly.

The $30 million for tourism was part of the administration's justification for the $420 million. But the Senate Appropriations Committee made no earmarks except for the provision that up to $15 million could be used for specific environmental needs, and even that is not earmarked. It is up to that amount could be used.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have not followed this debate as carefully as some, but when I heard that the pending amendment would take funds away from the Army's Space Booster Program, I decided to address this issue.

We have just had a successful launch of the shuttle. We just put into orbit the Hubble telescope. While it is not related to the Army, it is still relevant to the Space Research Program.

For quite some time now, many of us have been urging a summit at the White House on space. It seems to me that to take funds away from this program at this time would send the wrong message and would be counterproductive to our efforts. I do not think that the temporary situation regarding Panama should outweigh our long-range Space Research Program.

So, Mr. President, I urge that we defeat both amendments. Then, let us figure out a way to find money in an appropriate account to finance the investigation of fraud in the S&L crisis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader retains the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

AMENDMENT NO. 1563, AS MODIFIED

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I modify my amendment and send the modification to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment. The amendment is so modified.

The amendment (No. 1563), as modified, is as follows:

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following: ": Provided, That of the funds appropriated for the Defense Stock Fund in P.L. 101-165, $21,000,000 is rescinded: Provided, That an additional amount of $7,600,000 is appropriated for 'Salaries and expenses, United States attorneys' and an additional amount of $11,500,000 is appropriated for 'Federal Bureau of Investigations, Salaries and Expenses', both amounts to be available for the investigation of fraud and other criminal activity in financial institutions.".

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, let me take a moment to explain this modification. I have listened to the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Colorado about their reservations about the space boosters program. This modification would provide an offset, an equivalent offset of $21 million, that is unneeded and unspent in what is known as the defense stock fund account.

I do not believe there is any objection to that, but let us find out. If there is, let us vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader retains the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. President, I yield the floor so the Senate may continue.

Mr. WIRTH. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania explain to us where the offset account is coming from?

Mr. HEINZ. From the defense stock fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado retains the floor.

Mr. WIRTH. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania explain to us what the defense stock fund is?

Mr. HEINZ. This is money that is unobligated. It is in the form of a rescission from a larger pot of money. I am sure the Senator, being on the Armed Services Committee, is very familiar with the defense stock fund, and I do not need to explain it further to him.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I object to modification of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The author has the right to modify his amendment without asking unanimous consent to modify. The amendment has been modified.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I want to confer with staff people on the Armed Services Committee, where I serve as chairman of one of the subcommittees, and where I have served for a number of years, about the amendment my friend from Pennsylvania has just offered.

But for my friend from Pennsylvania to suggest to my colleagues in the U.S. Senate that the defense stock fund is a matter of no consequence is a remarkable statement. It is a fund that has been maintained for a good many years by the Government in connection with our concerns about potential emergencies and the need to be prepared in the event of surge requirements.

I want to confer with people on staff before I would be willing to suggest that this is a sensible amendment.

I understand my colleagues who are concerned about the Wirth amendment are now trying to find some softer alternative for a selection process for Senators, rather than voting to try to solve the fraud and criminality in the thrift industry at the expense of tourism in Panama.

But if my friends in the Senate think that the defense stock fund is a better alternative than tourism in Panama, I can assure them that should this amendment be adopted, I will have a great deal to say about it later.

Mr. President, I know everybody is otherwise involved in discussions around here, but I want to remind my colleagues, as a member of the Armed Services Committee, that we are cutting defense to the bone this year. The Secretary of Defense has been before our committee this week. I see the Senator from Nebraska, in charge of our strategic responsibilities; he was there. The Senator from Georgia, chairman of the committee, was there, and other members of the committee, when the Secretary of Defense, on his own initiative, came in to advocate massive cuts in the B-2 program, massive cuts in the C-17 program for our airlift, massive cuts in our advanced tactical fighter program and other things.

We all know the other things that are being advocated in the House. My friend, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, has advocated, to meet our budgetary requirements, even different cuts.

Now other people come in here almost as an afterthought and say let us cut another $25 or $30 million out of defense.

I remind my colleagues that this entire supplemental is mostly taking money out of defense. If everything we are going to do is to take money out of defense, and when we get in an argument with the Senator from Colorado about what I consider to be a good amendment to take some money out of tourism for Panama and we want to take more money out of defense, I want to remind my distinguished colleagues there is a limit to this.

There is a limit about how much defense can stand in cuts. And I hope that my colleagues will think seriously about cutting something they do not even know about.

Here is my distinguished colleague, a learned Member who came from the House, and has for many years here been a great public servant, who is asking: What is the fund all about? If he does not know, on the Armed Services Committee, and my knowledge of it is limited, the average Member does not know at all. And to make this kind of a cut at this time of night is an outrage, Mr. President. If we are going to do that just to avoid taking some money out of money for Panama, I think it is a sad day in the U.S. Senate.

Why do we not leave this the way the Senator from Colorado offered it in the first place? That was a very straightforward selection process for Members of the Senate and I hope that, in time, my friend from Colorado will move to table the amendment by the Senator from Pennsylvania and let us find out whether, at sometime in the evening like this, we are ready to make these kinds of uninformed decisions at the expense of our American defense capabilities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest, to expedite the business of the Senate and to prevent further delay, or to minimize further delay, that this amendment be set aside; that we proceed to vote on the two other amendments that are to be disposed of this evening; that while those votes are occurring, the discussion that is now occurring be continued privately with an effort to resolve the matter between the principals who have expressed an interest in it; that if they are able to do so, then we would know that and be able to dispose of it at the conclusion of the other two votes. If they are unable to do so, then we would vote on this matter at that time.

This discussion has been going on now for quite a long time. New suggestions are being made on the floor during debate. I think prudence—and also accommodating more Senators—would be served if Senators would agree to that.

I inquire of the distinguished Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Pennsylvania if they would be agreeable to that and will let me proceed to get consent to vote on the Conrad amendment and the Dixon amendment, and while those votes are occurring, to let the principals continue this discussion.

Mr. WIRTH. It is perfectly agreeable to me. Mr. President.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, that would be most agreeable.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, accordingly I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside and that the Senate proceed without any intervening action or debate to vote on or in relation to the following amendments in the order as listed: the Conrad amendment, No. 1555, and the Dixon amendment, No. 1549; and that the pending amendment recur following disposition of the Dixon amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I seek recognition for the purpose of adding original cosponsors. I assume I would not be precluded from doing that by an unanimous-consent request.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suggest as soon as we get this agreement, I ask consent the Senator be recognized for the purpose of adding the cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object, may I respectfully suggest, Mr. President, to our majority leader, that any and all votes we have this evening possibly could be a 10-minute votes, not to run beyond 10 minutes? We are all here, and it would save a tremendous amount of time.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am reluctant to do that on the first vote because I do not know where each Senator is, and we have tried to accommodate every Senator. I will suggest that we will do that on the second vote, but if the Senator will permit me a little flexibility on that to judge where Senators are when they get here?

Mr. EXON. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I appreciate what the leader is trying to do. Following up on the suggestion just made, about the quality of life once again, would it be possible, Mr. President, to speed things up, if we could get agreement on the unanimous-consent request that the Senator has just made with the understanding that the first vote would be a 15-minute vote, that the following vote would be a 10-minute vote—that is on the Conrad amendment as I understand it—and following that, if agreement is not reached between the two parties on the matter that the Senator is setting aside, we would limit 10 minutes of debate before the following vote which would be for 10 minutes? Is it possible to work out something like it to try to bring this to a head?

Mr. MITCHELL. I believe it is possible, and what I suggest we do is that, during these votes, I will attempt to get agreement of the parties for such an agreement and will propound it at that time.

Mr. EXON. The Senator does not think this is the time to propound that? I yield to the superior——

Mr. MITCHELL. No. I have attempted to accommodate all Senators. I do not know physically where each Senator is now, neither side. If we could get the vote started, I think we could move it along that way, and then I could attempt during those votes to get that accommodation.

Mr. EXON. I do not object.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Has there been a request made——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Republican leader reserve the right to object?

Mr. DOLE. The Senator indicated he did not know where everyone was physically. I cannot find one Senator who might want to have a motion to table the Conrad amendment.

I understand that will be done for him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, is it in order to request the yeas and nays on the Conrad amendment, No. 1555?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A request would be in order at this time.

Mr. HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader retains the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I understand now that the distinguished Senator from Oregon is going to move to table that amendment. I would like to ask unanimous consent that the Senator from North Dakota be recognized for the purpose previously stated, prior to that tabling motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators BAUCUS, DASCHLE, PRESSLER, BOSCHWITZ, BURNS, and GORTON be added as original cosponsors to the Conrad amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] I have been asked to make a motion to table the Conrad amendment. I so move and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] and the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] and Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 43, as follows:

NOT VOTING—4

Jeffords	Moynihan
Mikulski	Wallop

So the motion to table the amendment (No. 1555) was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the Dixon amendment be a 10-minute vote; that thereafter, there be 10 minutes equally divided on the Heinz amendment, No. 563; that immediately following the expiration or yielding back of that time, the Senate, without any intervening action or debate, vote on or in relation to the Heinz amendment; that immediately upon dispositon of the Heinz amendment, the Senate, without any intervening action or debate, vote on or in relation to the Wirth amendment, as amended, if amended.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, it is my intention to make a motion to table the Dixon amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I modify my request that the vote be on or in relation to the Dixon amendment so that the Senator could make the tabling motion.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I say to the majority leader I did not hear the beginning of the unanimous-consent request. I wish to ask of the majority leader if anything in his unamimous-consent request would have make it impossible for me to raise a point of order with regard to the underlying Wirth amendment before the disposition of the Heinz amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask that the request be modified to make clear that with respect to the Wirth amendment and the Heinz amendment, that a point of order may be raised.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is their objection to the majority leader's request? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, Senators should be aware that there will be a 10-minute vote on the Dixon amendment, 10 minutes equally divided on the Heinz amendment, a vote on that or in relation to it, a point of order or a motion to table, and a vote on the Wirth amendment. So there will be three more votes spread over the next 40 minutes.

I thank my colleagues for their cooperation.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, is it in order now to move to table the Dixon amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to table the Dixon amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be a sufficient second. The yeas and nays are ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mrs. MIKULSKI] and the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

NOT VOTING—3

Mikulski	Moynihan	Wallop

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 1549 was rejected.

VOTE ON AMENDMENT NO. 1549

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I think the yeas and nays were ordered on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLURE. I ask unanimous consent to vitiate the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1549) was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. NUNN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1563, AS MODIFIED

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, there will now be a 10-minute debate on the Heinz amendment which is an amendment in the second degree. The time is controlled by Senator HEINZ, the proponent, and the manager in opposition.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON] control the time in opposition to the Heinz amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time? There are 5 minutes allocated to each side controlled by Senator HEINZ and by Senator DIXON.

Who yields time?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has been yielded 2 minutes.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I have been advised by those on this side that the Senator from New Hampshire has asked for 1 minute, so he wants 1 minute of the 5 minutes.

This is an ill-conceived amendment and I hope that we can understand what it is. The Senator from Colorado offered an amendment to take $30 million of the emergency supplemental appropriations and transfer that $30 million to drug enforcement. The Senator from Pennsylvania has amended that to leave the $30 million in the so-called urgent supplemental but take it away from national defense for this fiscal year.

Mr. President, I think all members that I know of on the Armed Services Committee are opposed. Chairman NUNN is opposed to this amendment. I advise all that within the next day or so the Budget Committee is going to pass out of that committee a very high number to cut defense, to declare a peace dividend.

Meanwhile, back at the ranch right now we are struggling with an $800 million supplemental appropriation for national defense requested by the President. The reason for this is that the President did not protect military personnel from the sequester cuts under Gramm-Rudman last year. We are struggling as best we can in the Armed Services Committee. I hope we can vote the Heinz amendment down and send a clear signal to the United States that the Armed Services Committee is struggling at this time to meet its commitments.

If the Heinz amendment is adopted, I believe that I can predict that it will have to come out of that $800 million supplemental. That means that we are going to have some people laid off in the armed services. I think that is not what the Senate wants right now. I hope that we will turn down the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute against the amendment.

May I have the attention of Senators? What does this defense stock fund do? It is a revolving fund that buys fuel. Now listen to this. Right now we are losing $4 a barrel on fuel. We are paying $27.50 and we are giving it to the services for $23.50. Medical supplies, clothing for our troops, the kinds of nitty-gritty stuff we really need.

We have already in this supplemental taken out $39 million. The Senator from Pennsylvania wants to take out an additional $21 million when we are slashing defense to the bone everywhere. I hope my colleagues in the Senate will not do this to the services without any kind of a hearing. I think it is a very egregious and dangerous amendment and I hope we do not adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has asked for some time.

Mr. DIXON. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, what I have to say applies not only to the pending amendment but to the amendment sponsored by the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Illinois. I hope we would vote against both of them. We will not have intervening debate.

I would not expect logic to prevail at this hour but let me point out that the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from New Hampshire try to administer the Commerce, Justice, State and Judiciary Appropriations Subcommittee with some amount of judgment. We consult with the Attorney General of the United States on a regular basis and all of the division heads last year on the financial institution fraud initiative. We funded it with $107,800,000 of new money, of which $81 million was for the FBI and $20 million was for U.S. attorneys. This year, we will again appropriate even more.

I would only say that this is an emergency supplemental and what we ought to really do is to let the appropriating committee—unless there has been evidence of some great negligence—appropriate and not do this kind of ad hoc switching around on the floor. We have funded this initiative and funded it well. I think we ought to vote down both of these amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I yield myself a minute and a half.

Mr. President, the issue before us is very simple. Do we want to take money away from Panama after all the difficulties that that country has had, where the Panama Canal is, and do we want to take money from helping that country recover and use it to fund a domestic program that many of us support, namely going after the crooks that looted our S&L's, or do we want to take the money, as this amendment proposes, from a fund that puts up money for office supplies, equipment, fuel, maintenance of miscellaneous kinds, which the Appropriations Committee has already reduced by some $39 million?

What this Senator proposes in the way of a $21 million reduction amounts to less than one-ten-thousandth of the entire defense budget. And yet I hear people in opposition saying we are going to lay off thousands of people.

Mr. President, we have heard about the Washington Monument syndrome. When you are going to do damage to a budget, you say the world is going to come to an end and we are going to close the Washington Monument. I say we can get along with $21 million less in the defense stock fund. I urge my colleagues to do Panama a favor and support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I yield a minute and a half to my friend and colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I support the second-degree amendment. I believe that we ought not to touch the allocation to Panama because it is urgently needed and long overdue.

When the distinguished Senator from Colorado proposes that funds be taken from the Panama allocation and put into the savings and loan, that is a tempting offer. I think my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] has found a good resolution. We essentially have three priorities here. First, is the Panama money; second, an allocation for savings and loan; or, third, the defense stock fund. The amendment offered by my colleague, Senator HEINZ, I think reaches an appropriate accommodation. Therefore, I support his second-degree amendment so that we do not have to take that money from Panama but can have an additional allocation for enforcement of the savings and loan program.

I thank the Chair, I thank my colleague, and I yield the floor.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EXON. I move to table the second-degree amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to table is not in order at this time. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the second-degree amendment.

Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I do not believe that the Chair ruled the yeas and nays have been ordered. Had they been ordered previously?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I am informed that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. EXON. I can still move to table, can I not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to table is not in order until the time allocated pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement has expired, and the Senator from Pennsylvania still has 1 minute 44 seconds on that.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair. I will move at the appropriate time.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. 1 minute and 44 seconds.

Mr. HEINZ. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How much time does the Senator yield?

Mr. HEINZ. I do not yield any time at this point.

Mr. President, I see the Senator from Colorado on his feet.

Mr. DIXON. I yield the remainder of our time to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the distinguished Senators from Colorado and Illinois.

Mr. President, this was not something thought up in the middle of the night. The American people have been watching an S&L crisis emerge and explode, and ask that we have the FBI and a number of U.S. attorneys that can go after the fraud, waste, abuse, and outright embezzlement. A thousand major inactive cases; 20,000 referrals unanswered by the FBI. The major cases have doubled from 1983 to 1989. That is on the record, not done in the middle of the night.

What we are trying to do is provide the FBI and U.S. attorneys with the money that they requested. So where do we find the money? It is not done in the middle of the night. We noticed this last week, looked around at the various accounts, and which one jumped out—$30 million for the promotion of tourism in Panama, something that was debated at great length here in the afternoon. That is twice the amount of money than we use to promote in all the United States. This is not an anti-Panama vote, it is a rational budgeting vote. We have a choice between the S&L's and the funding for tourism in Panama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I yield myself 45 seconds.

The position of the Senator from Pennsylvania is simply this, that we need to unleash all the available weapons against those crooks who treated our federally insured savings and loans like personal piggy banks.

In that respect, the Senator from Colorado and I seek to achieve the same objective. The only difference is I seek to achieve it without cutting the President's proposal to aid Panama and have found moneys that are unspent, unused, and unnecessary in the Defense Department accounts.

Mr. President, I yield what remaining time I have to the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 25 seconds.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, the issue here has become muddled. We are trying to solve a problem for the Senator from Colorado by taking an offset somewhere other than in Panama. It now seems as if it has gotten so confused some people do not want to take it from the defense account, some people do not want to take it from other accounts.

I think the cleanest way to deal with this issue is to deal with it directly, and that is to say that the Wirth amendment, the underlying Wirth amendment is in violation of the Budget Act because it adds money to the State, Justice, and Commerce appropriations account.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KASTEN. Therefore, Mr. President, the adoption of the Wirth amendment would cause the State, Justice, and Commerce Subcommittee to exceed the allocations of outlays under 302(b) of the Budget Act. Pursuant to section 302(f) of the Congressional Budget Act, I raise the point of order against the underlying Wirth amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I move to waive the Budget Act with reference to 302(f) of the Budget Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is in order.

The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the budget waiver.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KASTEN. I do not think there is any reason to pursue this any further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. There is no debate on the motion. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive the Budget Act. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chambers who desire to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 48, nays 50, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Mikulski

So the motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must rule on the point of order raised by Senator KASTEN to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado that transferring budget authority among several subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee would cause allocation of budget authority and the outlays allocated to the Subcommittee on Commerce, State and Justice to be exceeded in violation of section 302(f) of the Budget Act.

The point of order is sustained.

The amendments fall.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I am pleased to support H.R. 4404, the fiscal year 1990 supplemental appropriations bill. This bill provides supplemental funding for several items that are of great interest to Illinois. I want to thank Senator HARKIN, in particular, for his interest in and support of providing additional funding to address a shortfall in the unemployment insurance program.

The committee has included $99.6 million in supplemental funding for the unemployment insurance system. This money is needed to help make up for a significant shortfall in funding that resulted primarily from the administration's overly optimistic projections of the number of unemployment claims. Current projections indicate that the fiscal year 1990 shortfall may be as high as $113 million. Unemployment insurance resources were depleted even further by a $24 million Gramm-Rudman-Hollings reduction.

Our State unemployment insurance programs have faced reduced funding for a number of years. These reductions have made it increasingly difficult for States to provide unemployed persons with necessary services. Further cuts at this time will seriously compound the problem. I regret that the administration has opposed supplemental funding even though the vast majority of the shortfall this year resulted from the administration's own unrealistic projections. I appreciate, however, the Appropriations Committee's willingness to work with me and other Members who expressed interest in this issue—20 of my colleagues joined me in a letter to the committee requesting the restoration of funding for the unemployment insurance system. The committee has gone a long way toward restoring that funding. I am grateful for the committee's cooperation. Mr. President, I ask that a copy of my letter to the committee be printed in the RECORD at the end of my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. SIMON. In addition, I want to thank the committee for its interest in and support of the Chicago Public Schools. The report accompanying the fiscal year 1990 supplemental appropriations bill encourages the Department of Education to give favorable and prompt consideration to an application for assistance from the Chicago Public Schools. Mr. President, national attention has been focused on the Chicago schools and the remarkable school reform initiative that is underway there.

In 1989, the Chicago Public Schools began implementation of an unprecedented and ambitious restructuring effort aimed at decentralizing the management of Chicago's elementary and secondary schools, enhancing parental involvement in educational activities, and increasing the achievement of Chicago's public school children. Implementation of the first phase of the reform initiative—the election of some 5,400 new school council members—has generated a new wave of enthusiasm, spirit, and hope throughout the city.

The local school council concept is the centerpiece of Chicago's school reform efforts and should be supported in every possible way. One problem that has surfaced is the dire need for training for these new council members, the majority of whom are parents. Many of them have never conducted a meeting, hired or evaluated personnel, developed a budget, or constructed a school improvement plan—responsibilities they must now carry out. Effective training for the school council members has been identified by the school system and community leaders as critical to the smooth implementation of school reform in Chicago.

I am pleased that the committee has identified $500,000 that can be made available for this purpose. Efforts to achieve national educational goals must include direct assistance to the Nation's largest school districts, such as the Chicago Public Schools, in order to help them achieve the systematic, structural reforms that can be very costly to implement.

I also applaud the committee for its work on funding for the Head Start Program. The additional $166 million recommended in H.R. 4404 is an important investment in our Nation's children, and particularly those who are most at-risk of educational failure. These funds are vitally needed to preserve the high quality of Head Start services and bring new disadvantaged children into the program. The Chicago Public Schools, a major Head Start grantee in Chicago, is facing a critical shortfall in funding for Head Start services in the 1990 program. The supplemental funds in H.R. 4404 should help to significantly alleviate that funding shortfall.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC., April 2, 1990.

Hon. TOM HARKIN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN HARKIN: We are writing to urge the Appropriations Committee to appropriate supplemental funding to the unemployment insurance system. As you know, the unemployment insurance program provides support to individuals who are out of work while they search for a job. It is a vital life-line program, and supplemental funds are needed to prevent a shortfall of at least $100 million for unemployment insurance operations.

The shortfall is primarily the result of the Administration's overly optimistic assumptions on the projected number of unemployment claims. Current economic assumptions indicate that the Administration's projections will shortchange state unemployment offices by nearly $100 million. In addition, unemployment insurance resources were further cut by $24 million in Gramm-Rudman-Hollings reductions.

Our state unemployment insurance programs have faced reduced funding for eight years. These reductions have left the states hardpressed to provide services necessary to unemployed persons. Many states have been forced to close or consolidate offices. Further cuts at this time could seriously jeopardize the ability of our unemployment insurance programs to handle claims in a timely matter.

Past administrations have always requested supplemental appropriations when unrealistic economic projections have caused a shortfall in funding. This year, the Administration has neglected to take this responsible step. We believe supplemental funding of the unemployment insurance program is of vital importance; accordingly, we urge the Committee to provide these much needed funds.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Cordially,

Lloyd Bentsen, Carl Levin, Alan Cranston, Christopher J. Dodd, John Heinz, Bob Kerrey, Harry Reid, Joe Lieberman, Paul Simon, Don Riegle, Dan Coats, Richard H. Bryan, Wendell Ford, Richard Shelby, Brock Adams, Edward M. Kennedy, Slade Gorton, Wyche Fowler, Jr., Alfonse D'Amato, John F. Kerry, and Dave Durenberger.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I would like to note for the RECORD that I was necessarily absent from the proceedings of the Senate on Friday, April 27, due to a long standing commitment to travel to an Indian reservation near Sault Ste. Marie in Michigan's Upper Peninsula. I had agreed several months ago to be the principal speaker at the dedication of Bay Mills Community College's new wing and the opening of their native American art exhibit.

Bay Mills, one of only two tribally controlled community colleges east of the Mississippi River, has grown from 11 students in 1981 to some 253 students today and serves all seven federally recognized tribes in Michigan. This college has demonstrated an exceptional commitment to education in the native American community, despite very difficult obstacles, and I felt it was necessary to be there to give active support to their excellent and important work.

Had I been present, I would have voted as follows:

Rollcall No. 66: In favor of a Byrd amendment No. 1540 to require a study and report on how U.S. foreign assistance programs may promote the U.S. economic competitiveness;

Rollcall No. 67: In favor of a committee amendment relating to the preservation of tropical forests and other environmental activities in Nicaragua;

Rollcall No. 68: Against sustaining the ruling of the Chair that the threshold relationship between the committee amendment relating to the use of Federal funds to perform abortions in the District of Columbia;

Rollcall No. 69: In favor of germaneness as it pertains to the committee amendment to restrict the use of Federal funds to perform abortions in the District of Columbia;

Rollcall No. 70: In favor of an Adams amendment to provide for a study in the District of Columbia for a system of early childhood developmental programs;

Rollcall No. 71: Against tabling an amendment to institute the death penalty for drug-related murders in the District of Columbia.

ISRAEL HOUSING GUARANTEES

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I want to mention one other program in the supplemental—the provision of $400 million in loan guarantees to Israel for a housing program to absorb tens of thousands of Soviet Jewish refugees.

This is a credit guaranty, and no appropriation of new funds is necessary. Under this language the United States will guarantee, through its Housing Investment Guaranty Program, loans Israel will contract in the commercial financial markets. The only risk to the United States is if Israel defaults on payments, and Israel has never defaulted on its loan payments before.

There is one issue related to the Israel Housing Guaranty Program that is of concern to me—whether any of this loan guaranty assistance could be used to support or expand Israeli settlements in the West Bank or Gaza. As I noted in my remarks when Senator KASTEN and I introduced legislation in February of this year on the Israeli Housing Guarantee Program, I strongly support longstanding American policy, followed by administrations since the 1960's, that Israeli settlements in the occupied territories are an obstacle to peace.

My understanding of the administration's position is that it supports enactment of the Israel Housing Guaranty Program, but that it does not intend to implement the program until satisfactory assurances regarding its use have been negotiated directly between the two governments involved. For that reason, my understanding is that the administration believes that specific legislation to require that the use of these resources to limited to the pre-1967 territory of Israel is not required.

All United States assistance agreements with Israel contain a prohibition on the use of United States aid beyond the June 1967 borders. It is certainly the clear intention of this Senator that none of this loan guaranty will in any way be used to support or otherwise aid Israel in any settlement activity outside the pre-June 1967 borders. The only purpose of this assistance is to help Israel construct housing for immigrants from the Soviet Union inside the pre-1967 borders of Israel.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, there will be no further rollcall votes this evening. Progress will continue on the bill. We expect further action on the bill tonight and then the Senate will return to the bill at 9:30 in the morning with rollcall votes expected in the morning.

It remains my hope, which I expressed at the end of last week and early today, that we could complete action on this bill tomorrow. We are willing to proceed in the hope and expectation that we will be able to achieve that result.

I thank the distinguished Republican leader for the cooperation that he has shown today as well as the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and ranking member. We have spent the entire day trying to work this matter out. I believe we have made some substantial progress. I thank all of my colleagues who participated in that.

We are going to proceed on the bill tonight although there will be no further rollcall votes. Then we will be back on the bill at 9:30 tomorrow.

I repeat my very strong hope that we can complete action on this important measure tomorrow.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I have, if this is an appropriate time, a series of amendments which have been cleared. It will take about a minute and a half.

Mr. WIRTH. Will the Senator suspend for 10 seconds?

Mr. LEAHY. I yield without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. WIRTH. I ask unanimous consent that Senators LEVIN, ROCKEFELLER, BRYAN, and KERREY be added as cosponsors to the Wirth amendment. I thank the distinguished Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. KASTEN. Will the Senator yield? I would like to enter a motion to reconsider the last vote.

I do so. I move to reconsider the last vote by which the point of order was sustained.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KASTEN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, just so I can explain what I am going to do, I am going to make a unanimous-consent request to be able to offer an amendment by Mr. CRANSTON and Mr. KERREY of Nebraska. I believe it has been accepted by both sides.

It provides that $5 million will be available to development assistance. Funds may be used between the national relief agencies to help children in Cambodia so long as no funds go either directly or indirectly to the Khmer Rouge and no new budget authority is involved. No outlays are required.

I believe it has been accepted on both sides. Mr. President, I did that in the way of description of it. I now ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside and it be in order to send an amendment to the desk that I just described for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to temporarily setting aside the pending amendment? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1564

(Purpose: To provide up to $5,000,000 through international relief agencies to children within Cambodia)

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I send an amendment on behalf of Mr. CRANSTON and Mr. KERREY, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], for Mr. CRANSTON, for himself, and Mr. Kerrey, proposes an amendment numbered 1564.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, up to $5,000,000 of the total amount of funds available to carry out chapter 1 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (relating to development assistance), which funds were—

(1) appropriated by the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1990 (Public Law 101-167), or

(2) otherwise made available through the exercise of the authority contained in section 515 of that Act, may be made available to the President to provide emergency assistance through international relief agencies to children within Cambodia.

(b) None of the funds made available pursuant to subsection (a) may be made available, directly or indirectly, for the Khmer Rouge.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont seek recognition? The Senator is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I understood an amendment that I just offered had been cleared on the Republican side of the aisle. I am advised by the distinguished Senator from Oregon, my good friend, that it has not been cleared as the others were pending.

Rather than delay things and raise any confusion, because of the manner in which we work here and in the effort that is always made to make sure that there matters are cleared on both sides, I think it would probably be a lot easier if we took this up in the morning. I am sure it will be cleared. I have discussed it further with the Senator from Oregon and others.

So I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to withdraw the amendment I offered in behalf of Mr. CRANSTON and Mr. KERREY of Nebraska, and that we go back to the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may withdraw his amendment as a matter of record. The amendment is withdrawn.

The amendment (No. 1564) was withdrawn.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, as the Senator is aware, I was hopeful that we would include in this supplemental appropriations bill an additional amount for the Child Abuse Challenge Grant Program for the purpose of restoring the cuts that 23 States experienced in fiscal year 1989. For example, Michigan was notified last October that its grant had been reduced by 62 percent.

The Michigan delegation has sought an explanation for the cut from the Department of Health and Human Services. After a meeting between HHS officials and delegation staff members as well as correspondence between HHS and the State of Michigan, we are still waiting for a clear explanation of exactly why our State experienced such a draconian reduction and what must be done to avoid this same thing from happening again.

The result of this cutback in funding in my State is that Michigan has been hindered in its efforts to operate a statewide program of child-abuse and neglect prevention.

While I am disappointed that there is no opportunity to address this problem in the fiscal year 1990 supplemental appropriations bill, it is my understanding that the subcommittee chairman will work with me and my colleague, Senator RIEGLE, in trying to obtain increased funding for the Child Abuse Challenge Grant Program in fiscal year 1991.

Mr. HARKIN. I appreciate the Senator's concern and understanding. The Senator may be sure that I will be happy to work with him to see what can be done in fiscal year 1991. In order to address funding for Michigan in this bill, we would have to change the distribution formula for the Child Abuse Challenge Grant Program. This obviously is a matter for consideration by the authorizing committee. However, in so far as funding levels, it is my intention to work with my colleague from Michigan in the 1991 bill.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the manager of the bill be good enough to yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Does the manager of the bill have any intent of either taking any additional amendments tonight or entering into any unanimous-consent agreements with respect to such amendments yet this evening?

COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 57, SECTIONS 312 AND 117, AS AMENDED

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to vote on the committee amendment appearing on page 57, as amended by the Adams amendment, as amended by the Gramm amendment, with one vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senate of the United States is once again called upon to pass judgment on the reproductive rights of women of the District of Columbia. There are some who argue that this issue has no place on a bill to provide dire emergency appropriations for a wide range of topics. Others argue that to allow the District of Columbia government to utilize its own funds to assist women in the free exercise of those rights would invite a veto of this entire bill by President Bush. I would like to briefly address both of these concerns, but to do so it is essential that I first provide some of the historical background to this discussion.

It must be recalled that the current total prohibition on the use of any funds, Federal or local, for the performance of abortions in the District has been in existence for only the last 2 years. It has become a feature of the present administration's increasingly hard line on the topic of the reproductive rights of women. From 1980 until 1989, congressionally imposed restrictions on the use of Federal funds for abortions in the District of Columbia specified that Federal funds could be utilized only in cases where the life of the mother was threatened, and in cases involving rape, incest, and ectopic pregnancy.

On three separate occasions, President Reagan signed legislation containing this restriction on the use of Federal funds, leaving the District of Columbia free to utilize its own revenues as it saw fit. Last year, President Bush vetoed the District of Columbia appropriations bill because it attempted to restore Federal policy toward the District to where it had been during the Reagan administration. I stated my intention to revisit this issue, and the presence of section 312 in this dire emergency supplemental bill is consistent with that commitment.

With respect to the concern that this amendment does not belong on this bill, I am aware that the subject matter of this legislation is intended to be dire emergencies. President Bush considers the needs of Panama and Nicaragua to be dire emergencies, and we agree by providing millions of dollars for each country. In addition, a wide range of additional dire emergencies are covered in this bill, with funds included for watershed protection, an experimental laboratory for fish farming, salaries and expenses for Government employees, volcano monitoring, and even $10 million for President Bush to use "for the day when diplomatic relations can be established with Lithuania." Thus, we have provided dire emergency funds for an event that has not even yet occurred.

I have no quarrel with the numerous dire emergencies provided for in this legislation. But in reviewing the entire list, I find no emergency so dire or in need of immediate attention as the need to restore this fundamental right to the government of the District of Columbia and to the women who reside here. President Bush recently stated his belief that the majority of the District's funds come from the Federal Government. That statement was incorrect. I am hopeful that his staff has advised him that he was in error, that in fact, we actually provide less than 15 percent of the District's budget. Perhaps the President's opposition to allowing the District to utilize its own revenues as it sees fit was a product of his erroneous view of the Federal Government's contribution to the District budget.

Today's morning news carried reports that the President's senior policy advisors are unanimous in their advice that he veto this entire bill if section 312 remains. Quite frankly, I am losing interest in those threats as a factor in determining what we in the Congress should include in legislation. We have heard that threat on minimum wage reform, clean air legislation, child care, and several other topics. A White House temper tantrum, accompanied with the threat to "take my ball and go home if you don't play my way," seems to me an insufficient reason to send U.S. Senators scurrying for cover.

There may be some benefit in having Mr. Darman and Mr. Sununu get on the phone to President Chamorro and President Endara and explain to them why it was more important to deny women of the District of Columbia their reproductive rights than it was to provide dire emergency assistance to their governments.

Mr. President, I seek no quarrel with President Bush, but I firmly believe he is badly out of step with the American people on this issue. I have known George Bush for many years, and served with him in the House of Representatives. I knew him when he was prochoice. But something happened on the long road to the White House, and I am frankly perplexed at the President's attitude and posture on this subject. I sincerely hope that some day soon he will stop listening to Mr. Darman and Mr. Sununu and begin listening to his wife, his daughters, and to the women of America. When that day arrives, amendments such as this will become unnecessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is their objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? Hearing none, the request is agreed to.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if I might inquire of the distinguished chairman, if I understand the agreement, so I have it for the record, we have adopted the Gramm amendment that was not tabled the other evening and the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. BYRD. Yes. The Republican leader is correct. By this vote, by a single vote in accordance with the unanimous-consent order that preceded it, the Senate has agreed to the amendment on page 57, sections 312 and 117, as amended by the amendment of Mr. ADAMS, as amended by the amendment of Mr. GRAMM of Texas.

Mr. HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. HATFIELD. Let the RECORD show that a very definitive no vote was cast by the senior Senator from Oregon.

Mr. METZENBAUM. The same effect. The Senator from Ohio cast a negative vote.

Mr. BYRD. Let the RECORD show that I heard both the Senators cast negative votes. They were outnumbered; that was their problem.

TELEPHONE ACCESS

Mr. KASTEN. I wish to enter into a colloquy with my distinguished friend and colleague from Oregon, and member of the Labor, Health, and Human Services Subcommittee on Appropriations.

Mr. HATFIELD. I would be honored to enter into a colloquy with my good friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. There is language in the supplemental that recognizes the need for restoring telephone access between elderly and disabled Americans and their local Social Security offices. Would the Senator explain what this report language will do to help provide better telephone accessibility.

Mr. HATFIELD. The committee has received numerous complaints about their inability to reach a local Social Security office, along with compliants about busy signals, and inadequate information once they did get through on the 800 line. As a result, the report language urges the Social Security Administration to ensure that SSA telephone numbers are readily available to the public as an alternative to the 800 number service by listing local office numbers in telephone directories.

Mr. KASTEN. I wish to commend the chairman and the other members of the Labor, HHS and Education Subcommittee for recognizing the need for restoring this very important telephone access. However, it is my understanding that telephone access to local Social Security offices is not available for our silent partners—the deaf community. I am sure the subcommittee is aware that there are no local office number listings in the telephone directories for our more than 22 million hearing impaired Americans, because there are no TDD telephones in local Social Security offices.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. KASTEN, I wish to commend the Senator for noticing this unfortunate oversite by the Social Security Administration.

Mr. KASTEN. This is not the American way and I am sure not what the Social Security Administration intends. Therefore, I strongly urge and request that the committee include, in the 1991 appropriations, a requirement that Social Security provide total access to the deaf. This includes installing TDD's in local offices and listing those local numbers in telephone directories.

Mr. HATFIELD. Again, I thank Mr. KASTEN for bringing this important matter to the committee's attention. You can be assured that we will discuss this issue in committee to ensure total access is provided to all Americans—including the deaf community.

Mr. KASTEN. I thank the Senator for his interest in this important matter.

RESTORING ACCESS TO LOCAL SOCIAL SECURITY OFFICES

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I applaud the leadership of the pending measure for calling for the restoration of access between the public and their local Social Security office. It is only too clear that the agency's flawed 800 number will never be an acceptable substitute for services from experienced staff in local social security offices.

As chairman of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, I have been fighting to keep the Social Security Administration from becoming yet another faceless bureaucracy, where elderly and disabled individuals are left with anonymous and poorly trained 800 number operators when trying to get help from the agency.

To keep the Social Security Administration from losing the human touch, I recently introduced S. 2158, the proposed Social Security Office Access Restoration Act. The bill will enable Social Security beneficiaries to contact their local Social Security representative, which was wrongly severed with the installation of the agency's 800 number.

I am very pleased that the distinguished chairman of the Labor, Health and Human Services Appropriations Subcommittee, Mr. HARKIN, and the committee's very able ranking minority member, Mr. HATFIELD, are cosponsors of this bill. I extend a very special thanks to them, as well as to the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Subcommittee, Mr. SPECTER, for including report language for the fiscal year 1990 supplemental appropriations bill urging the Social Security Administration to restore telephone access to agency field offices.

The very serious problems with the Social Security Administration's 800 number were first revealed at an Aging Committee hearing last year. At that time, we learned that busy signal rates were as high as 60 to 70 percent in a number of metropolitan areas and that as many as one in four answers to questions about the Supplemental Security Income Program were wrong or incomplete.

Despite assurances at that time that the 800 number's poor access and accuracy flaws were being eliminated, a year later they persist. The fundamental problem, I believe, is that 800 number systems were designed for telemarketing, not for programs as complex and critical as those administered by the Social Security Administration. Nor were they intended where a personal, caring response is essential to the definition of service.

Why is personal, caring service from the agency so crucial? Unlike other Federal agencies, the Social Security Administration is charged with serving those who may be in a period of great upheaval or grief due to the loss of a loved one, the end of a career, or the occurrence of a crippling injury. Individuals look to the agency to obtain the benefits which they earned during their working years—not for the runaround.

Is it any surprise that many Social Security beneficiaries are wary about placing their financial security in the hands of an 800 number operator? Hardly, when it means someone, who knows where, with relatively little training and dozens of calls backed up, and who there is virtually no chance of ever reaching again, making decisions that determine their ability to keep food on the table and to pay medical bills. Hardly, when only yesterday they could reach an experienced Government representative in their community.

Although the new Commissioner of the Social Security Administration has taken a number of steps to make the agency more responsive, these steps still fall short of ensuring telephone access to local Social Security offices on a permanent basis. Unless this objective is fully achieved, I will keep working for enactment of S. 2158. Again, I commend the managers of the pending bill for their important contribution in this regard.

I know my good friend, the distinguished chairman of the Labor, Health and Human Services Appropriations Subcommittee shares my concerns about the impact of the agency's 800 number on the quality of service to the public. I hope to continue working with you to ensure that access between elderly and disabled individuals and their local Social Security office is fully restored.

I welcome this continued opportunity.

Mr. PRYOR. I thank the Senator from Iowa. I would also like to urge your support for a related effort, of which the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN] just a moment ago spoke to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD].

Mr. HARKIN. You are, of course, referring to the need to ensure access to individuals with hearing impairments as well. Clearly, high-quality service to these individuals also must be provided by the Social Security Administration. In the upcoming deliberations over the fiscal year 1991 appropriations bill, as well as in my capacity as chairman of the Subcommittee on Disability Policy, you can be sure that I will keep these concerns in mind.

Mr. PRYOR. Again, I thank the distinguished Senator. I know the disabled community has no better friend than the Senator from Iowa.

Let me also express my appreciation to the Senator from Wisconsin for his leadership on this issue. I hope to continue working with him on this vital matter.

Mr. KASTEN. I appreciate the kind words of the Senator from Arkansas. I am confident that our shared efforts will help ensure that the deaf community has full access to the Social Security Administration.

DROPOUT PREVENTION

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, increasing the quality and availability of education is vital to both our national security and our domestic well-being.

Unfortunately, one of the greatest threats confronting our educational system is a burgeoning school dropout rate. That problem alone breeds failures throughout our social and economic system, including crime, unemployment, chronic dependence, an increase in tax-supported benefits and, most importantly, a waste of human resources.

Mr. President, the Department of Education estimates that 20 to 29 percent of all students who enter the ninth grade do not graduate 4 years later. Translated, that means the number of school dropouts each year exceeds three-quarters of a million children.

A recent study conducted in the Philadelphia School District, for example, found that almost one-third of the city's 19,000 students who entered the ninth grade in 1984, dropped out of school before the end of their senior year. Of those dropouts, the study found that 37 percent were Hispanic, 33.8 percent were black, and 26.3 percent were white.

From these and other studies we have learned that dropouts represent a tremendous drain on society. But high dropout rates trigger a string of other problems as well—ignorance, illiteracy, crime, and an unskilled work force to name a few. The loss in potential revenue and productivity adds up to $200 million annually, and as much as $200 billion over the lifetime of the dropout population.

Mr. President, when the Congress took up the fiscal 1990 Labor, HHS, and Education bill last year, the authorization for the Department of Education's dropout prevention demonstration program had not yet been renewed. It was only last month, in fact, that the Dropout Prevention Demonstration Act was signed into law.

The amendment now before the Senate provides $19.9 million to continue existing demonstration projects. Because we are well into fiscal year 1990, the amendment provides the Department of Education the authority to extend the existing 89 projects that were funded in fiscal year 1988 and 1989, rather than starting a new competition so late in the fiscal year. These existing projects were funded in 32 States including Pennsylvania, Iowa, Oregon, Illinois, and Texas.

What do these projects accomplish? By applying the latest, most innovative educational techniques, these projects help identify potential dropouts and work to keep them in class. They also encourage those who have already dropped out to reenter the classroom.

Mr. President, this amendment would provide the funds to continue these critically important demonstration projects through the remainder of fiscal 1990 and into fiscal 1991. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this amendment.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for morning business not to exceed 5 minutes, and that Senators may speak therein for not to exceed 2 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE PASSING OF STEVE REYNOLDS

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise to share with my colleagues a few words over the great loss I feel as a result of the passing last week of Steve Reynolds.

For 35 years, Steve Reynolds served the people of New Mexico as our State engineer. In that position, under a total of 10 Governors, he became an institution throughout the West, a true legend in his own time.

For my colleagues who do not come from the West, the office of State engineer in New Mexico holds a significance as important as any in all of State government. The State engineer holds responsibility for the appropriation of water, and for settling water disputes in a land where that resource is scarce and sacred.

In the stories and editorials about Steve Reynolds last week, there was talk of his zealous defense of our water, as well as his enormous success in bringing important water development projects to New Mexico. That was certainly true.

But Steve's importance to the people of New Mexico reached far beyond those successes. His greatness really came from his absolute and total integrity and dedication—first, last, and always—to the people of New Mexico.

During half a lifetime in service to New Mexico, Steve Reynolds brought to public service the very highest standards, as well as enormous knowledge and understanding of the issues. He was admired not only by New Mexicans, but by natural resources experts throughout our Nation, experts who counted on Steve Reynolds for his even-greater knowledge and expertise.

At meeting after meeting, the questions always came down to this: "What does Steve think about the issue? What does he recommend?"

No State in the West failed to benefit from Steve's vast knowledge, his determination, his total sense of fairness.

Over the years, I was greatly honored to know Steve as a friend. I will miss him greatly. While many in New Mexico were not so fortunate as I was to know Steve personally, they, too, will miss him for his absolute dedication to the welfare and the future of New Mexico.

To Steve's daughter, Nancy Treat, to her husband, and to their two sons, I extend my heartfelt sympathies.

Mr. President, in order to give my colleagues a better sense of the greatness of Steve Reynolds, I ask unanimous consent that several editorials and articles regarding this outstanding American be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STEVE REYNOLDS

State Engineer Steve Reynolds is dead, and New Mexico has lost one of its most devoted public servants ever. The elder statesman of Western water administrators, Reynolds died early Wednesday of complications from surgery March 23 for a blocked femoral artery. He was 73 years of age.

In a state often wracked with political dissension, Reynolds remained as state engineer for 35 years and through 10 chief executives.

In a state where political favoritism and fear of political retribution is an everyday fact of life in dealing with the state and its institutions, Reynolds remained a rock of nonpartisan independence.

In charge of an office which controlled the natural resource that represents life itself in the arid Southwest, Reynolds throughout his career remained the most unassuming of men in his personal demeanor.

Born in 1916 in Decauter, Ill., Reynolds earned a degree in mechanical engineering at the University of New Mexico in 1939. He later taught at UNM, then at New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology, where he was when college friend Gov. John F. Simms tapped him for the position of state engineer in 1955.

Reynolds took a loosely organized, haphazardly enforced old West system of water law, the doctrine of prior appropriation, and shepherded it intact into the 20th century. The doctrine provides that he who had used the water the longest was entitled to have first crack at it, regardless of the importance some latter-day user might attach to his project. Reynolds spent much of his career in office extending the protection of state law over the water rights of New Mexicans from all walks of life. He wisely resisted efforts to change the system or to replace it with something more malleable in the hands of social architects—or politicians.

He was a faithful steward who leaves for his successor a system of water law administration free of the taints of political influence and ineptitude. This state will not soon know another public servant of the stature of Steve Reynolds, for almost half of his life New Mexico's keeper of the water.

[From the Las Cruces Sun-News, Apr. 28, 1990]

WE LOST A FIGHTER

New Mexico has lost a valiant fighter for its interests with the death of Steve Reynolds, the state engineer.

Reynolds, who died Wednesday at 73, won the gratitude of all New Mexicans with his gritty, resourceful and tenacious fight to prevent other states from depleting our water supplies. The value of his services is demonstrated by the fact that he was first named state engineer in 1955 and had served under 10 state governors.

He was a central figure in the long court fight over El Paso's plans to tap the underground water supply in Dona Ana County. His knowledge and dedication to the interests of New Mexico will be sorely missed.

STEVE REYNOLDS—ONE-OF-A-KIND MAN TOOK STAND FOR RIO GRANDE; WE THANK HIM

"Two roads diverged in a wood and I
—I took the one less traveled by,
And that has made all the difference."

The words of American poet Robert Frost never have been more appropriate than in an epitaph for Steve Reynolds.

Reynolds was one of a kind.

The state engineer for New Mexico died Wednesday at the age of 73. His official title was limited to state engineer. His power was limitless. Governors for the past three decades have allowed him to make all decisions regarding the state's water and water rights.

Never did he let them down.

But Reynolds' knowledge was not always so respected.

In 1956, after he had been state engineer about a year, he made the unpopular decision to declare the existence of the Rio Grande Basin. That move prevented anyone from drawing water from the Rio Grande without taking steps to protect the river's flow.

Consider the environmental attitudes that have changed in the mere 20 years since the recent celebration of the Earth Day anniversary and you'll have some small idea of how radical Reynolds' thinking was to his day.

Experts now agree that Reynolds' decision saved the Rio Grande from drying up.

Experts now use phrases like "the moral equivalent of John Wayne," and "tower of integrity" to describe Reynolds.

But it wasn't always that way.

Reynolds took the road less traveled by. And that has made all the difference for New Mexico.

We thank him. And we'll miss him.

[From the New Mexican, Apr. 27, 1990]

STEVE REYNOLDS

Steve Reynolds, who died early Wednesday in Sante Fe after 35 years of stellar leadership and stewardship in protecting New Mexico's water resources as state engineer, was highly respected as a public servant and as a man.

That is obvious from the adjectives used by those many public officials and others who were asked to comment about Reynolds after his death. Some of the adjectives and phrases of praise used about the man whose service extended through 10 governors were: Without peer in his field. One of the state's and the nation's greatest public servants. A great man. A tower of integrity. Toughness. Devotion. Intelligence. Diplomacy. Courage. Credibility.

His family announced that a memorial service would be held for Reynolds, but a date has yet to be selected. Many people who knew Reynolds well, and many others who knew about him because of his years as the state's water boss, are memorializing him with words now, but surely must be thinking of a more permanent way to help future generations to know of and to understand the scope of Reynolds' contributions to the history of New Mexico in the preservation of the state's limited and precious water supply.

It would be most appropriate for a state facility, especially one of the public works dealing with water, to be named after Reynolds.

Since 1955, he had headed the State Engineer's Office, which determines water rights and uses in New Mexico. In this role, he fought at public hearings and in the courts to protect New Mexico's water rights in agreements with other states.

Great foresight was another characteristic for which Reynolds was known. Thanks to good planning by his office, water is being stored in New Mexico for future use. In the last 30 years, more than $1.5 billion in water projects have been completed or begun in New Mexico.

In a state in which political considerations so often override good judgment and common sense, Reynolds exemplified a rare degree of integrity and independence and concern for the common man.

He deserves a memorial to remind future New Mexicans of his years of striving to protect a valuable resource that far too many people take for granted. Steve Reynolds watched it for us.

May the next person to stand that watch try to follow Reynolds' example of proper and valiant stewardship of the state's water supply.

REYNOLDS SPENT HIS LIFE PROTECTING STATE'S WATER

(By Charles T. DuMars)

Everyone dies, this is no secret. But no one really believed Steve Reynolds would die, because he had been state engineer as long as we could remember. He had survived diabetes and gout and a car wreck and never missed work. All of us hoped that this made him immortal, but it didn't. His impact on New Mexico, however, continues beyond his death. He has left a legacy of water policy that I hope will never change, but I must admit I am afraid.

Steve and I often talked about why he felt the way he did about water. Steve hated the thought of allowing water to become a political resource allocated by government. He would say, "If you liked the way liquor licenses have been allocated by the state, you would love water allocation in New Mexico if politics got involved in water. If the water code could be changed on a whim in every session, the water law of New Mexico would be replaced by politics."

Unless you knew Steve well you could never understand the complexity of the man. He loved New Mexico, he wanted her to retain all of her God given resources for her citizens, and he wanted her water resources to be managed in a way that made the maximum contribution for all New Mexicans.

Steve was stubborn. He would adopt a well reasoned position and stick to it. He would fight and out-prepare the opposition. He knew politics and politicians, used them, respected them if they had ability but abhorred the thought of them ever obtaining the power to allocate the water resource.

He once told me that when he was young his aunt told him, "Steve, I am tired of arguing with you. Even if you're wrong, you always get the last word." And, as he often told me, "Chuck, the court may have agreed with you and said I was wrong, but at least I was wrong for the right reasons."

He once told me how he got to be the way he was. He often said, (no doubt out of humility), that his brothers were smarter than him, but he learned the value of study and hard work and that was the source of what little ability he had.

He learned these values at a carnival that came to town when he was 11 years old. He used the one dime he had to have a ride, tried for the brass ring and failed. Everyone else used up their dimes and left. But he sat and studied the merry-go-round as it turned. After a while he realized that the up and down movement had worn the rotating arm at the center and after a certain number of turns, one horse would get close enough to get the ring. He borrowed a dime from a friend, got on the right horse and rode free the rest of the afternoon.

Steve found the horse of honesty and fairness in allocation of water in New Mexico and likewise rode it unerringly until his death.

He got angry at stupidity and greed and dishonesty and crushed it where he could. But he didn't hate anyone for their position. He was perfectly willing to take on any person on any issue and did. Yet, he never showed disrespect for an opponent, and he always respected ability and said so. Most importantly, he loved New Mexicans, he wanted a fair system of water law so they could get a fair chance at using the resource. He devoted his entire life to his dream of equality of access to water resources for all New Mexicans. I have never found such unselfishness in any other person I have met, but I have read of such people.

I am worried that now, after his death, politics may creep in and that the principle of fairness so treasured by him may be lost. Only time will tell us how enduring this principle will be without him at the helm. I can only say that Steve Reynolds was a giant in the area of resource allocation, who devoted his life to keep politics out of water. I pray that those of us still living do not forget the lessons he taught us.

[From the El Paso Times, Apr. 27, 1990]

WATER CHAMPION GONE

Steve Reynolds was a big man, a tall, angularly built fellow. Among experts on the terribly complex issues of water, he was a giant.

Reynolds, as state engineer, protected New Mexico's water as if it were his own for 35 years. Equally important, he fashioned much of the water law in effect today in the Western states.

He understood about water as few people have or do. And he was a fighter for his beliefs, a formidable enemy if on the opposite side. His honesty and integrity are unquestioned in every quarter. Reynolds was not loved by everyone, but he was respected by all in the circle he chose for his long and fruitful career in New Mexico state government.

Over the last several years, his health deteriorated, primarily because of diabetes. He died Wednesday in Santa Fe at 73 years of age. New Mexico and the West will have difficulty in finding another such champion for the cause of water for us all.

N.M. LEADERS MOURN DEATH OF WATER CZAR

(By Peter Eichstaedt)

Steve Reynolds, who as a state engineer for 35 years managed the allocation of New Mexico's precious water resources, died early Wednesday at St. Vincent Hospital. He was 73.

Reynolds was hospitalized March 22 for a diabetes-related circulatory problem that he had been battling for nearly 10 years. Two days later doctors amputated his right leg below the knee and he remained in intensive care until his death. The exact cause of death was not released.

Reynolds developed a reputation during his tenure as an articulate and knowledgeable expert on water law in the Southwest. He was asked frequently to provide advice on national water law and water use.

Reynolds served in his appointed position under 10 governors, and both Republican and Democratic mourned his death.

"One of the state's and one of this nation's greatest public servants has passed away," Gov. Garrey Carruthers said. "Steve Reynolds defined for all of us professionalism, integrity, diplomacy, courage and credibility."

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., called the death of Reynolds "a great loss to New Mexico."

"He was a tower of integrity, bringing to public service the very highest standards," Domenici said. "His goal was always clear: fairness and just treatment for everyone in our state."Former Gov. Bruce King called Reynolds "truly one of the dedicated public servants. He never had any other interests except the people of New Mexico."

There also was a private side of Reynolds.

His daughter, Nancy Treat of Farmington, said she and Reynolds "were always real good buddies."

"He had a good sense of humor and he was very fond of his two grandsons," she said.

Phil Mutz, who assisted Reynolds in the operation of the State Engineer's Office, has been appointed acting state engineer.

Eddit Binder, a spokesman for Carruthers, said he didn't know when the governor would appoint a replacement for Reynolds.

Treat said the family will announce a memorial service for Reynolds at a later date. A spokesman for McGee Memorial Chapel said the body will be cremated.

Reynolds was first appointed state engineer in 1955 by Gov. John F. Simms. The two had attended the University of New Mexico together.

During an interview 31 years later, Reynolds said he had expected the job to last 18 months at the most. And he said he worried at first about knowing little about state water law.

He said he was not particularly smart but added the smart man is not always the one who finishes first. "It's the guy who does his homework who comes out ahead," Reynolds said:

In the last 30 years, more than $1.5 billion in water projects have been completed or begun in New Mexico.

The projects include Navajo Dam and reservoir on the San Juan River, the San Juan/Chama water diversion project, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' flood- and sediment-control dams in the Rio Grande and Pecos River basins, the Ute Dam and reservoir on the Canadian River, and the Brantley Dam and reservoir on the Pecos River near Carlsbad.

Reynolds received many honors and awards during his career.

In 1973 he was one of the first recipients of the state Distinguished Public Service Award. He also received an honorary doctor of laws degree from New Mexico State University in 1977 and an honorary doctor of laws degree from UNM in 1988.

In 1989 the National Governors' Association recognized Reynolds for distinguished service to state government.

Reynolds was born Dec. 11, 1916, in Decatur, Ill.

He received a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering from UNM in 1939.

Reynolds was student body president at UNM his senior year and football captain during the 1938 season.

Following his graduation, Reynolds worked as an engineer for Phillips Petroleum Co. in Hobbs. In May 1942, he joined the faculty at UNM as an assistant professor of mechanical engineering.

He was on military leave as a naval officer from April 1943 to February 1946.

Reynolds left UNM in June 1946 to join the New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology in Socorro, where he was involved in a weather-modification research program. He was at Tech when Simms appointed him state engineer.

Reynolds is survived by Treat. He was preceeded in death four years ago by his wife, Jan Elizabeth.

ENHANCED STATE MEDICAID MATCHING FUNDS EXTENSION FOR TRAINING OF NURSES AIDES PURSUANT TO OBRA 1987

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am concerned about a number of issues surrounding the quality of care of nursing homes and the implementation of the sweeping reforms included in OBRA 1987. Among those issues is the required training of nurse aides.

Under OBRA 1987, States are to train and certify as competent to provide care all nurse aides working in nursing homes certified by Medicare or Medicaid. Nurse aides—or nursing assistants—provide some 80 percent of all hands-on care provided to nursing home residents. And, our reliance upon them for the care of our most disabled and vulnerable older citizens is only increasing as our nursing shortage worsens, especially in nursing homes. Because the training of nurse aides has been inadequate in many States, we provided for this training requirement in OBRA 1987.

An issue of particular importance to States concerns how they are to pay for the costs of training nurse aides. Beginning July 1, 1990, States will receive only the 50-percent administrative matching rate for the costs of their nurse aide training programs. This is in contrast to the Federal medical assistance percentage [FMAP], which can range from 50 percent to nearly 80 percent, which States receive for the costs of delivering health care under their Medicaid programs. States have made the persuasive argument that the costs of nurse aide training should be considered a part of their service delivery system and should therefore be reimbursed at the FMAP rate.

In recognition of the costs associated with high quality training programs and the financial burdens facing so many of our States, OBRA 1987 provided for a temporary higher Federal Medicaid matching rate for startup costs incurred by States and nursing homes to implement training and testing of nurse aides. This so-called enhanced matching rate expires on June 30, 1990, just 2 months from now. Unfortunately, for reasons that I will describe shortly, few States have been able to avail themselves of this short-term financial assistance.

It is the duration of the existing enhanced match I would like to address today. I want to take just a few moments to discuss an amendment that I, together with my good friend and fellow Arkansan, Senator BUMPERS, as well as Senators RIEGLE and ROCKEFELLER, have considered offering to H.R. 4404, the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill. This amendment, which was requested by the Southern Governors' Association, the National Governors' Association, Governor Clinton of Arkansas, and the nursing home industry, would help to save State Medicaid programs considerable dollars, as they continue their efforts to carry out congressional intent concerning the quality of care in our Nation's nursing homes.

Our amendment would simply extend the period during which States can receive an enhanced match for the balance of the current fiscal year—until October 1, 1990. This 3-month period would provide us with additional time to evaluate the extent to which States have been able to avail themselves of the enhanced matching funds.

I have had the opportunity to take this particular concern up with the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator BENTSEN. Following his counsel, we will not offer this amendment at this time. Instead, we will take it up in another forum, hopefully in the near future.

Mr. BENTSEN. I would like to commend the Senator from Arkansas for his leadership in raising this important matter. I recognize that this issue is time-sensitive, and that Texas, Arkansas, and other States, will be affected if the matching rate period is not extended for a time that is consistent with the intent of OBRA 1987.

The Finance Committee, as a part of its 1989 reconciliation bill, approved an extension of the enhanced matching rate until October 1, 1990. Regrettably, the extension provision developed by the committee was removed from the Senate bill when the Senate voted to strip all provisions that would increase Federal spending. Subsequently, the conferees agreed to extend the matching rate, but only until July 1, 1990. They also agreed to a provision that required the Secretary of Health and Human Services to issue proposed regulations clarifying the nurse aide training requirements for the States within 90 days of enactment. I know that it is important that we address this matter as soon as possible. Nonetheless, I believe that it is most appropriate for us to address this issue in the Finance Committee.

Mr. PRYOR. I appreciate the esteemed chairman's comments. Consistent with his suggestion, we will not offer our Medicaid amendment at this time.

Mr. President, I would like to however, take just a few more moments to describe why our States face this predicament. Because of delays in the issuance of Federal regulations, many States have not yet implemented the nurse aide testing and training requirements. Thus, these States will not have incurred by June 30 those expenses which would be eligible for the temporary enhanced Federal funding for which Congress provided. I must point out here that HCFA only just issued in March proposed regulations for this program.

Nearly 1 year ago—in May 1989—I convened a hearing of the Special Committee on Aging, to address HCFA's failure to provide guidance to the States as required by Congress under OBRA 1987. One year later, after Congress extended the OBRA deadlines to October 1, 1990, because of the HCFA's inaction, there is finally some movement by HCFA. Now, however, States are about to lose their opportunity for help with the costs of their nurse aide training programs. OBRA 1987 would have given States this enhanced matching rate for 15 months after the date the Secretary was to have established the requirements for nurse aid training; unless the current situation is changed, this enhanced rate almost certainly will expire before the final regulations are issued.

Mr. BENTSEN. I want to assure my colleagues that I concur with the views expressed by my esteemed colleague from Arkansas that the Federal Government should be as supportive as possible of States and providers with regard to effective implementation of the comprehensive nursing home reforms enacted in 1987. I would like to say at this time that if it becomes necessary to extend the June 30 deadline retroactively, I will make every effort to ensure that States are recompensed for the costs incurred.

Mr. PRYOR. I thank Senator BENSTEN for his encouraging remarks and look forward to working with him to resolve this important issue as soon as possible.

THE FALL OF SAIGON—15 YEARS LATER

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, 15 years ago today a North Vietnamese soldier crashed his Soviet tank through the gates of the Presidential Palace in Saigon and the Vietnam war was over. Many liberals in the West chose to celebrate this development. "Indochina Without Americans: For Most, a Better Life" ran the New York Times headline of an April 13, 1975, story from Cambodia.

But it is now 15 years later. Have most of the people of Indochina seen a better life?

Not the Cambodians. Perhaps as many as 2 million of them died at the hands of the Cambodian Communists known as the Khmer Rouge.

Not the Laotians. Many of them became the victims of poison gas called yellow rain.

Not the Vietnamese, North or South. In this morning's Washington Times, a former U.S. arms negotiator Ken Adelman specified the body count after the fall of Saigon: 65,000 murdered outright, 500,000 who died trying to escape, hundreds of thousands in re-education camps.

Mr. President, Indochina today is a Communist-built catastrophe of human suffering. In Cambodia two groups of Khmer Rouge, one backed by the Vietnamese and one backed by the Communist Chinese, compete for power without regard to the destruction they are causing to the country and its people.

Vietnam itself is an economic disaster area. It is among the poorest countries in the world with an estimated per capita income of $150 per year. In 1988 Marxist economics produced starvation in large parts of the country.

The Vietnamese Communist Party and Government remain firmly in the hands of the North Vietnamese. Last month a critic of the slow pace of reform was kicked off the Politburo. This month Directive 135 was issued warning that the Army would be used to crush dissent.

Mr. President, the Vietnamese Army remains a threat to its neighbors. Over a million men are under arms, double that of anyone else in Southeast Asia. The North Vietnamese have never renounced their claim to large parts of Thailand. According to an unclassified estimate by CIA, 40 to 50 percent of the Vietnamese national budget goes to the military.

Last year 40,000 Vietnamese safely reached refuge in Hong Kong. Rather than be sent back to Vietnam, one refugee committed suicide last winter. Many are still being lost at sea, particularly since some of the countries of the region have directed their officers to push off Vietnamese boats trying to land.

The United States policy toward Vietnam is the same as our policy toward Libya—no relations and no trade. Until the Vietnamese Communists account for our POW/MIA's and cease to be a threat to their neighbors in the region, the policy should remain.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article, "Exploding 15 Years of Myths" by the Honorable Kenneth Adelman in the April 30, 1990, issue of the Washington Times be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times, Apr. 30, 1990]

EXPLODING 15 YEARS OF MYTHS

(By Ken Adelman)

Vietnam still burns as an issue, 15 years after that war ended so ignobly on April 30, 1975.

Movies, novels, articles and plays pour forth with ferocity. University courses on the Vietnam War are jammed with kids wondering what happened so far away which burns so hotly in our collective consciousness.

Given Vietnam's emotional punch and intellectual jumble, it's time to rectify myths which persist despite undisputed evidence to the contrary.

Like how the United States had to pull out to "Stop the Killing" in Vietnam. Tragically, it was after we pulled that so much killing began.

At least 65,000 Vietnamese died—Southerners murdered by conquering Northerners—after our helicopters left the embassy roof. Hence, more Vietnamese died in the few months after the war ended than Americans perished during our long involvement there.

Add on some half a million Vietnamese who subsequently died trying to flee the communist regime, and thousands more who languished in its grisly "re-education camps."

Happily, around 1.5 million Vietnamese did escape, "including a significant number of former revolutionaries and people who sympathized with the revolution, now sickened by the society they have helped bring about."

Among them was Doan Van Toai, who poignantly wrote these words in a marvelous new book "The Vietnam Debate—A Fresh Look at the Arguments," edited by professor John Norton Moore, chairman of the U.S. Institute of Peace.

Today's commentators may dismiss the hordes of "boat people" as fleeing because Vietnam is poor. But Vietnam has always been poor. Yet its citizens never fled in any numbers before Vietnam turned communist and repressive.

Then there's the myth of the "domino theory," which palpably came true once Laos and Cambodia came under Hanoi's harsh hold.

Some Americans snickered at the notion that a "bloodbath" would follow a communist expansion into South Vietnam and elsewhere in Southeast Asia. Others merely sincerely doubted it.

Weeks before the fall, Sen. Mike Mansfield told his colleagues how Cambodia's Prince Sihanouk had personally assured him that, after we withdrew our support, maybe four or five Cambodians would be killed by the Khmer Rouge after they seized power.

No one snickers now. For everyone knows of the bloodbath's ghastly proportions. Pol Pot launched the second-largest genocide in modern history, with deaths between 1 and 3 million of his people.

The killing fields in Cambodia, coupled with the massacres in Vietnam itself, led Richard Nixon to conclude: "Certainly the record is clear for all to see: A communist peace kills more than an anti-communist war."

The myth that the Vietnam War was essentially a civil war in the south too has been disproved. Documents from Hanoi show how the war was always controlled from there.

The much-vaunted National Liberation Front, or Viet Cong, in the South was a tool at best, or enemy to Hanoi at worst. The 1968 Tet Offensive, which so demoralized us Americans, broke the Viet Cong infrastructure.

The war was won, not by guerrilla fighting, but by conventional warfare. It was North Vietnamese regulars who invaded the South, when Hanoi sent 22 of its 23 divisions south, retaining only forces enough to prevent a coup.

This happened, lest we forget, after the Paris Peace Accords were signed and their signatories won the Nobel Peace Prize. Following the North's victory, in blatant violations of the accords, not one single South Vietnamese was given power.

The myth that Ho Chi Minh was above all an ardent nationalist is refuted by an eminent scholar of that movement, Robert F. Turner, who writes how Ho had previously betrayed non-communist Vietnamese to the French. Ho, who did not set foot in Vietnam between 1911 and 1941, was a fervent communist rather than a romantic nationalist.

And the prevailing myth that our military involvement revealed an aggressive America—or Amerika, as it was then written—is outrageously false. Our involvement there was truly noble. It sprang from the best of intentions.

Lacking among successive U.S. administrations was any motive for resources, conquest or expanded global power. We simply sought to retain our credibility as a reliable ally, so damaged afterward. In particular, we sought to prevent the very genocide and regimes of terror and misery that arrived after we left.

As Mr. Moore writes so accurately, "So many of the popularly accepted arguments were pure myth."

But the last word, on this 15th anniversary, belongs to Doan Van Toai, who holds many people responsible. "It is a blame many Americans share with many Vietnamese, myself included, with all those who believed that it was morally preferable to accept a communist revolution than to fight against it."

APRIL 1990 SIGHTINGS OF FOREIGN DRIFT NET VESSELS IN THE NORTH PACIFIC

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I once again stand before you to speak on the subject of high seas drift netting. Short of poison and explosives, high seas drift nets are the most environmentally dangerous fishing gear known to man.

In the North Pacific alone, a daily total of up to 30,000 miles of netting is stretched in spring, summer, and fall, and although the target is squid, a multitude of other marine life forms are also caught, causing the incidental deaths of hundreds of thousands of sea birds, marine mammals, and both salmon and steelhead trout. Worse, Mr. President, they provide an almost perfect cover for vessels illegally targeting on immature salmon and steelhead trout, and ignoring the lower-value squid altogether.

As my distinguished colleagues will recall, it was because of these problems that Congress 2 years ago passed an act introduced by Senator STEVENS and myself which required our Government to negotiate better controls over these fisheries.

Today there is evidence that we still have not done enough. Despite the agreements we so carefully cultivated with Japan, Taiwan, and South Korea—the three known drift netting nations—we are still detecting drift net vessels fishing where they will inevitably intercept salmon.

Last week, for 3 consecutive days, our Coast Guard surveillance aircraft found and took photos of several drift net vessels. These ships, Mr. President, were found operating in an area 600 to 700 miles north of where the legitimate squid fishery occurs. The obvious conclusion is that they were not fishing for squid, but for salmon.

Most disturbing, Mr. President, is that according to markings shown in these photos, at least some of these vessels may be from North Korea—a country with which we have no agreement to limit, lessen or even monitor fisheries impacts. Other vessels appeared to be Japanese, Korean, or Taiwanese. I say appeared, because it has become a common practice for these fish pirates to cover or paint over their vessels' names and identifying numbers.

I do not know if the ships in these photos really are North Korean vessels, or are the disguised vessels of some other country. What I do know, Mr. President—what I most emphatically do know—is that our efforts to gain drift netting agreements with Japan, Korea, and Taiwan are not doing the job and the countries in question must be made aware that the United States and Alaska will not standby and see our salmon resources decimated.

Any effort aimed solely at high seas enforcement is doomed to failure, because we cannot take action against violators unless we have an agreement in place, and we cannot afford to have our negotiators follow outlaw fishermen around from country to country seeking new agreements every time a fish pirate decides to reflag his vessel to a nation without a fishery agreement.

We must instead attack the problem from more than one direction. Specifically, we must address the markets for illegally taken fish, as well as the illegal taking itself.

Several weeks ago, my good friend Senator HATFIELD of Oregon joined me in introducing S. 2285, a measure that for the first time would attack the problem at the cause, rather than the effect.

First, it calls for agreements calling on the countries that purchase salmon to require that the imported salmon from countries that do not produce salmon be accompanied by a certificate of legal origin—a document that could only be issued by a government with legal salmon fisheries. Second, it requires the Secretary of Commerce to establish a system for issuing U.S. certificates of legal origin, so that exports of U.S. fish are not interrupted to purchasing countries. It also requires the Secretary—after consulting with the Secretary of the Treasury—to advise Congress as to whether any additional restrictions or changes are needed. Finally, the bill provides the administration with access to the economic sanction process found in the Fishermen's Protective Act of 1967, to be used in case any country continues to deal in illegally taken salmon. This is virtually the only fisheries oriented sanction available, yet does not currently cover trade in illegally taken species.

Mr. President, S. 2285 embodies a simple, straightforward concept. Instead of chasing fish pirates around the high seas, we must cut off the market that keeps them in business. I call on all Members of this body concerned about our fisheries, our international trade and our marine environment. We must get on with the job of protecting our resources before they are lost.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a description of the North Pacific squid and large mesh drift net arrangements be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

REPORT ON NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO PANAMA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM-114

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

1. I hereby report to the Congress on developments since the last Presidential report of October 19, 1989, concerning the national emergency with respect to Panama that was declared in Executive Order No. 12635 of April 8, 1988. This report is submitted pursuant to section 401(c) of the National Emergencies Act, 50 U.S.C. 1641(c), and section 204(c) of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, 50 U.S.C. 1703(c).

2. On December 20, 1989, I ordered U.S. military forces to Panama to protect the lives of American citizens in Panama, to exercise the right and obligation under the Panama Canal Treaty to protect and defend the Canal, to assist the democratically elected government in Panama to return to power, and to bring General Noriega to justice in the United States. Since that date, civil order and civilian rule have been restored to Panama, and General Noriega awaits trial in the United States. On December 20, 1989, I directed the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State to lift the economic sanctions with respect to the democratically elected Government of Panama, headed by President Endara, and, in cooperation with that government, to effect an orderly unblocking of Panamanian government assets in the United States. The Panamanian Transaction Regulations, 31 C.F.R. Part 565 (the "Regulations"), administered by the Office of Foreign Assets Control ("FAC") of the Department of the Treasury, were amended accordingly to clarify that all obligations owed the Government of Panama first falling due on or after December 20, 1989, may be paid, and that property in the United States in which the Government of Panama obtains an interest on or after that date is not blocked, with the exception of payments made into certain blocked accounts for pre-December 20, 1989, obligations. The Regulations were also amended to authorize any person holding a blocked reserve account pursuant to section 565.509 ("509 Account") (1) to transfer the unadjusted gross balance of such account, with applicable interest, to the Government of Panama, or (2) to apply for a specific license to transfer an amount other than the gross balance upon concurrence of the Government of Panama.

I am enclosing a copy of the amendment to the Regulations, 55 Fed. Reg. 3560 (Feb. 1, 1990). This was the only amendment to the Regulations since my last report of October 19, 1989.

3. Over the past 6 months the licensing section of FAC issued fifteen (15) specific licenses authorizing U.S. companies to establish 509 accounts on their books. Since the imposition of the sanctions, a total of fifty-three (53) U.S. companies have been authorized to establish 509 accounts.

FAC is currently engaged in effecting the orderly transfer of funds to the new Government of Panama. The Panamanian Embassy and consular space in the United States have been reopened, and bank accounts have been unblocked on a case-by-case basis as requested by the new government. Upon issuance of the regulatory amendment of February 1, 1990, a mechanism was also provided to unblock amounts held in 509 accounts by general or specific license, depending on the circumstances.

Each licensed transfer of blocked funds has stringent reporting requirements, and the reports are being tracked and closely monitored. FAC has initiated a review process to examine outstanding 509 Account licenses, scrutinize open enforcement files, and identify companies that may have failed to comply with the requirements of the Regulations to either pay into Account No. 2 or establish a 509 Account.

Additional Panama compliance activities included frequent FAC staff phone contact with affected U.S. parties, numerous speeches to trade groups, such as the Council of the Americas, and publication of a Panama fact sheet entitled "What You Need to Know About U.S. Economic Sanctions."

As of March 12, 1990, FAC had released $256 million of the total $426 million blocked to the control of the Government of Panama in the manner described above. This $256 million was comprised of $82 million from escrow accounts at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, $31 million from blocked accounts at commercial banks, and $142.8 million from 509 accounts. I am attaching a fact sheet to the end of this report outlining these transfers of blocked funds.

The $82 million released from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York consisted of the entire balance ($10.2 million) of Account No. 2, which contained payments by U.S. companies to the Government of Panama, and a portion ($72 million) of Account No. 3, which contained escrowed United States Government payments to the Government of Panama. (Account No. 1 originally contained $10.5 million of Government of Panama funds that were located in the United States prior to the sanctions. These funds were used to fund operations of the Embassy in Washington of then-President Delvalle and were completely expended before September 1, 1989.)

The $169.7 million remaining blocked consists of $122.6 million in the Federal Reserve Bank of New York that has been set aside by the Government of Panama to fund payment of Panama's arrears to international financial institutions, $1.5 million in commercial banks for which the Government of Panama has not requested unblocking, and $45.4 million in 509 accounts. The remaining 509 Account balances are subject to bilateral negotiations between the Government of Panama and U.S. firms that have both debts to and obligations owed from the Government of Panama.

4. During the most recent reporting period, FAC continued to take actions to promote compliance with the Regulations and to tighten measures to deny the illegal Noriega regime funds belonging to the Panamanian people. Despite the economic hardships sometimes involved for U.S. persons in Panama, FAC stressed the importance of complete compliance with the Regulations by all persons in the United States and all U.S. persons and their controlled Panamanian entities in Panama. Several significant enforcement actions have taken place since the last report.

In September 1989, following written notification by FAC to over 150 U.S. entities with interests in Panama and specific orders to a number of U.S. companies and their Panamanian subsidiaries to cease and desist from making indirect payments of employee income and educational taxes to the Noriega regime, all recipients of such instructions certified that they had brought themselves into full compliance with the Regulations. This initiative had the immediate effect of denying tax revenues to the Noriega regime as well as promoting full compliance with the Regulations.

As the result of this enforcement effort, several U.S. firms also prevented voluntary disclosures to FAC of prior actions taken in violation of the Regulations. Other indications of willful or inadvertent noncompliance with the Regulations are being systematically investigated by FAC. The circumstances of voluntary disclosures and measures taken to ensure full compliance with the Regulations may be considered mitigating factors in seeking criminal indictments or applying FAC civil penalties under the Regulations.

In compliance with instructions from FAC, a major U.S. oil company notified the Noriega regime in late September 1989 that the Government of Panama was required to pay on a cash basis for any future fuel oil deliveries. After considerable protest, regime officials agreed to this procedure, which placed further financial pressure on the Noriega regime.

Also in September 1989, FAC initiated civil penalty actions against the Panamanian Directorate of Consular and Maritime Affairs in New York and its two principal officers, in whose bank accounts the Government of Panama had an interest. Since all Government of Panama accounts in the United States were blocked effective April 8, 1988, each unlicensed transaction involving such accounts was determined to be in violation of the Regulations.

On October 31, 1989, FAC published a notice in the FEDERAL REGISTER adding the names of Panamanian dictator General Noriega, his wife, and 32 companies to the existing list of 134 firms and individuals in Panama who act for or on behalf of Cuba. The listing of Noriega and the other entities as Specially Designated Nationals of Cuba in Panama had the effect of applying the full force of the U.S. trade and financial embargo against Cuba to Noriega and the other designated persons and firms operating in Panama. The action taken was another step to halt the channeling of funds to the illegal Noriega regime and to undermine the extensive network of commercial and financial collusion between the Noriega and Castro regimes.

On November 27, 1989, following coordination with FAC, the U.S. Customs Service at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport seized a helicopter part that had been imported for repair by a U.S. company. Inspection of documents revealed that the owner of the aircraft part was the Panamanian Air Force. The merchandise was seized for violation of the Regulations as an attempted unlicensed transfer of property in which the Government of Panama had an interest.

On November 30, 1989, I directed that Panamanian flag vessel not be permitted to enter U.S. ports after January 31, 1990. This measure was intended to deny the Noriega regime revenue from vessel registrations as well as illegal income in the form of bribes and kickbacks. I wanted to make it very clear that there would be no accommodation with the illegal Panamanian regime. This directive was rescinded by my directive of December 20, 1989, upon the fall of the Noriega regime, to lift the economic sanctions with respect to the new democratically elected Government of Panama and to take steps to effect an orderly unblocking of Panamanian Government assets in the United States.

On January 24, 1990, FAC issued a blocking order freezing a wire transfer of $300,000 being made by a Specially Designated National of Cuba in Panama who was attempting to transfer funds from its account in a London bank to a Bahamian bank, through a bank in Miami. The FAC blocking order required that the Miami bank not complete the transfer and place the $300,000 in a blocked account. This action constituted the first FAC blocking of major funds tied directly to the Noriega regime and was the first case in which an international wire transfer by a Specially Designated National of Cuba was blocked in midstream.

5. On December 20, 1989, I ordered U.S. troops into Panama to safeguard American lives, protect the integrity of the Panama Canal Treaties, assist Panama to restore democracy, and bring General Noriega to justice. I undertook this action after all peaceful means to resolve the crisis had been exhausted. Our action reflected the unique circumstances in Panama that evolved from our Treaty commitments and obligations and achieved all our objectives. The new government in Panama is a de jure government, freely elected by the Panamanian people on May 7, 1989, and certified by the Noriega-appointed Electoral Tribunal on December 27, 1989. The new government moved quickly to restore normal government functions; it has named a full Cabinet, Supreme Court, and regional and municipal authorities. The Legislative Assembly held its first session, as required by the constitution, on March 1, 1990. The Government of Panama's top priorities are economic recovery and the organizing of a civilian-controlled Public Force. Internationally, the new government has been recognized by 45 states, including Japan and major European and Latin American states. The United States is committed to assisting the democratic transition in Panama.

6. The expenses incurred by the Federal Government in the 6-month period from September 20, 1989, through March 20, 1990, which are directly attributable to the exercise of powers and authorities conferred by the declaration of the Panamanian national emergency, are estimated at $737,088, most of which represents wage and salary costs for Federal personnel. Personnel costs were largely centered in the Department of the Treasury (particularly in the Office of Foreign Assets Control, the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Enforcement, the Office of the Assistant Secretary for International Affairs, the Office of the General Counsel, and the Customs Service), the Department of State, the Federal Reserve Board, the National Security Council, and the Department of Defense.

7. On April 5, 1990, I issued Executive Order No. 12710, terminating the national emergency declared on April 8, 1988, with respect to Panama. While this order terminated the sanctions, the blocking of Panamanian government assets in the United States was continued to permit completion of the orderly unblocking and transfer of funds I directed on December 20, 1989, and to foster the resolution of claims of U.S. creditors involving Panama, pursuant to 50 U.S.C. 1706(a). The termination of the national emergency will not affect the continuation of compliance audits and enforcement actions with respect to activities taking place during the sanctions period, pursuant to 50 U.S.C. 1622(a). I will continue to report periodically to the Congress on significant developments, pursuant to 50 U.S.C. 1706(d).

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 30, 1990.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. MURKOWSKI:

S. 2542. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to establish a program to provide postsecondary educational assistance to students in health professions who are eligible for educational assistance under the Reserve GI Bill Program in return for agreement for subsequent service with the Department of Veterans Affairs; to the Committee on Veterans Affairs.

S. 2543. A bill entitled the "Admiralty Island National Land Management Act of 1990"; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. LIEBERMAN (for himself and Mr. DODD):

S. 2544. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to require the Secretary of the Navy to permit and facilitate the construction in United States shipyards and related facilities of combatant vessels and components for allies of the United States; to the Committee on Armed Services.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. MURKOWSKI:

S. 2542. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to establish a program to provide postsecondary educational assistance to students in health professions who are eligible for educational assistance under the Reserve GI bill program in return for agreement for subsequent service with the Department of Veterans Affairs; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS HEALTH PROFESSIONS EDUCATIONAL AMENDMENTS

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation which will assist the Department of Veterans Affairs in recruiting health professionals. This legislation is a companion bill to H.R. 3199 which was introduced by Congressman CHRIS SMITH of New Jersey and which passed the House in October 1989. The bill would amend title 38, United States Code, to establish a program to provide additional postsecondary educational assistance to students in health professions who are eligible for educational assistance under the Reserve Montgomery GI bill program in exchange for the student reservists agreement to subsequent service with the Department of Veterans Affairs. I believe this bill to be an innovative and creative approach in providing necessary medical personnel for the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Under the current Montgomery GI bill, most reservists are eligible to receive $5,040 from the Department of Defense to assist with the financing of their undergraduate studies. This legislation would enable VA to provide an additional $400 per month to a reservist who majors in a health care profession and in return agrees to work in a VA health care facility for a period of obligated service. This bill will provide benefits only for the time when the student is taking his or her health related courses. To get the additional $400 the recipient must agree to serve 1 year in a VA health care facility for every year of assistance they receive from VA. If the reservist does not fulfill his or her obligation with VA then the reservist will be obligated to repay the benefit amount, plus interest and penalty; repayment would be directly to VA beginning on the date of the breach of contract.

This new program would permit VA to target certain health professionals for participation in the program. The program is discretionary. Therefore, enactment would permit the Secretary to determine the extent to which it will be implemented. The purpose of this legislation, of course, is to provide incentives to those individuals pursuing careers in the medical profession to choose to work in VA medical facilities.

VA health facilities are experiencing difficulty in recruitment and retention of many health professionals. The problems are most serious for physical and occupational therapists, pharmacists, and nursing staff. These shortages exist not only in VA but in the private sector and the Department of Defense as well.

Mr. President, I recognize that this legislation will not alone solve the significant recruitment problems which face our Nation—including VA. However, it will provide VA with an additional tool to help in recruitment efforts. Let me also note that during the last session of Congress the House and Senate passed major nurses' pay bills. The House and Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee staffs are currently attempting to resolve differences in those bills. I look forward to working with my House and Senate colleagues to reach a reasonable compromise.

Mr. President, I look forward to working with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Senator ALAN CRANSTON, and the other committee members on this very important bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2542

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Department of Veterans Affairs Health Professionals Educational Amendments of 1990".

SEC. 2. HEALTH PROFESSIONALS EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.

(a) "COORDINATION WITH DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE PROGRAMS.—(1) Chapter 76 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter.

"SUBCHAPTER V—RESERVE MEMBER STIPEND PROGRAM

"§ 4351. Authority for program

"As part of the Educational Assistance Program, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs may provide assistance in the form of reserve member stipends under this subchapter.

"§ 4352. Eligibility: individuals entitled to benefits under the Reserve GI Bill program

"(a) To be eligible to receive a reserve member stipend under this subchapter, an individual must—

"(1) be accepted for enrollment or be enrolled as a full-time student at a qualifying educational institution in a course of education or training that is approved by the Secretary and that leads to completion of a degree in a health profession involving direct patient care or care incident to direct patient care;

"(2) be receiving benefits under chapter 106 of title 10; and

"(3) have scored above the 50th percentile on the Armed Forces Qualification Test.

"(b) For purposes of subsection (a)(1) of this section, a qualifying educational institution is an accredited institution, as determined by the Secretary, located within a State.

"§ 4353. Amount of reserve member stipend

"The Secretary shall pay to an individual selected to receive a reserve member stipend under this subchapter the amount of $400 (adjusted in accordance with section 4331 of this title) for each month the individual is pursuing satisfactorily a program of education or training specified in the agreement entered into under section 4304 of this title. Payment of benefits under this section to an individual for any period shall be in addition to benefits paid to the individual for the same period under chapter 106 of title 10.

"§ 4354. Obligated service

"An individual receiving a reserve member stipend under this subchapter shall provide service in the full-time clinical practice of the individual's profession as a full-time employee of the Department for the period of obligated service specified in the agreement entered into under section 4304 of this title.

"§ 4355. Breach of agreement; liability

"(a)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), an individual who is receiving or has received a reserve member stipend under this subchapter and who fails to perform the service for which the individual is obligated under section 4354 of this title shall be liable to the United States in an amount determined in accordance with section 4317(c)(1) of this title.

"(2) An individual who fails to perform the service for which the individual is obligated under section 4354 of this title shall not be liable for the repayment of the amount referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection if the Secretary determines that the failure is the direct result of the individual being ordered to active duty pursuant to section 2135(a) of title 10 for failure to participate satisfactorily in required training as a member of the Selected Reserve.

"(b) Any amount owed the United States under subsection (a) of this section shall be paid to the United States during the one-year period beginning on the date of the breach of the agreement.".

"(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new items:

"SUBCHAPTER V—RESERVE MEMBER STIPEND PROGRAM

"4351. Authority for program.
"4352. Eligibility: individuals entitled to benefits under the Reserve GI Bill program.
"4353. Amount of reserve member stipend.
"4354. Obligated service.
"4355. Breach of agreement; liability.".

(b) PERIODIC ADJUSTMENTS IN AMOUNT OF RESERVE MEMBER STIPEND.—Section 4331 of such title is amended—

(1) in the first sentence of subsection (a)(1), by striking out "amount and the maximum tuition reimbursement amount" and inserting in lieu thereof "amount, the maximum tuition reimbursement amount, and the maximum reserve member stipend amount"; and

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (4); and

(B) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph (3):

"(3) The term 'maximum reserve member stipend amount' means the maximum amount of a reserve member stipend that may be paid under subchapter V of this chapter, as provided in section 4353 of this title and as previously adjusted (if at all) in accordance with this subsection.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 4301(a) of such title is amended—

(A) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (1);

(B) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following:

"(3) the reserve member stipend program provided for under subchapter V of this chapter.".

(2) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 4302 of such title are each amended by inserting "under subchapter I or II of this chapter" after "Educational Assistance Program".

(3) Paragraphs (1)(A), (2)(D), and (5) of section 4304 of such title are each amended by striking out "subchapter II or III" and inserting in lieu thereof "subchapters II, III, or V".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—No reserve member stipend may be paid under subchapter V of chapter 76 of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), for any period before October 1, 1990.

By Mr. MURKOWSKI:

S. 2543 A bill entitled the "Admiralty Island National Monument Land Management Act of 1990; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

ADMIRALTY ISLAND NATIONAL MONUMENT LAND MANAGEMENT ACT

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Admiralty Island National Monument Land Management Act of 1990. The bill addresses southeast Alaska land management issues related to the people of Angoon, AK, and the shareholders of Kootznoowoo, Inc., their ANCSA village corporation. Angoon is the only village on Admiralty Island, AK, located near Juneau.

This bill, in slightly modified form, was reported unanimously from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources in 1988, and passed by the Congress as H.R. 2596. However, the bill was not signed by the President because of concerns over the revenue-related impacts of one of the provisions in the bill.

The provision which caused the administration to veto H.R. 2596 is not in the bill I introduce today. However, the resource management provisions of the bill remain essentially the same.

In essence, the bill accomplishes a series of land management objectives, none of which are major in themselves, but cumulatively resolve a number of longstanding problems.

These issues include resolution of a litigated dispute between Kootznoowoo and the Forest Service over an administrative site in Angoon; renaming the Admiralty Island Wilderness Area by its native name "Kootznoowoo" (Fortress of the Bears); providing for the consolidation of certain native land selections of Kootznoowoo, Inc.; and authorizing a study of potential Federal land acquisitions and cooperative land management agreements by the Forest Service on Admiralty Island, most of which is a national monument and enjoys wilderness status.

Mr. President, this bill also has a provision related to the settlement of the aboriginal claims of the native residents of the southeast Alaska villages of Haines, Ketchikan, Petersburg, Tenakee Springs, and Wrangell. The native residents of these villages were unable to organize corporations pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, and, as a consequence, may not have been afforded a just and equitable settlement of their aboriginal claims under that act.

This bill directs the Secretary of the Interior, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, to prepare a study of the history of native occupation and use of Haines, Ketchikan, Petersburg, Tenakee Springs, and Wrangell and to recommend whether the native residents of those communities may have claims which were not adequately addressed by the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2543

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. TITLE AND PURPOSE.

(a) TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Admiralty Island National Monument Land Management Act of 1988".

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to improve Federal management of lands on Admiralty Island, Alaska, as provided herein.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress hereby finds that:

(a) Admiralty Island National Monument, Alaska, is an area of unparalleled natural beauty containing multiple values including but not limited to, fish, wildlife, forestry, recreational, subsistence, educational, wilderness, historical, cultural, and scenic values of enduring benefit to the Nation and the Native people residing therein; and

(b) Land management and Federal administration of Admiralty Island National Mounment may be enhanced by Federal land acquisitions, through land exchanges or otherwise, and by cooperative agreements between the Federal Government and the indigenous residents of the Island, the people of the City of Angoon and the Native Village Corporation, Kootznoowoo, Incorporated.

SEC. 3. LAND ACQUISITION AND EXCHANGE.

(a) Section 506(a) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (Public Law 94-487, as amended) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9)(A) The Secretary is authorized and directed to: Enter into such cooperative agreements and agreements for land acquisitions, through exchange or otherwise, with Kootznoowoo as are deemed necessary by the Secretary to carry out the purposes specified in section 101 and 503 of this Act and to improve the management of Federal lands on Admiralty Island.

"(B) The Secretary shall make every effort to complete agreements within eighteen months of the date of enactment of this paragraph.

"(C) The Secretary shall report to Congress before the end of such eighteenmonth period on the status and results of negotiations with Kootznoowoo. The report shall include, but not be limited to, any Kootznoowoo properties proposed to be acquired by the United States, any Federal land or other compensation to be offered in exchange, and the text of any proposed or executed agreements.

"(D) Any lands on Admiralty Island acquired by the United States pursuant to this paragraph shall be added to and incorporated within the Admiralty Island National Monument.

"(E) The inability of the Secretary and Kootznoowoo to reach agreement shall not preclude subsequent negotiations at any time for the purposes of land exchanges or other matters.

"(F) Enactment of this paragraph shall not create any right or cause of action by Kootznoowoo, Incorporated, or any other party against the United States".

SEC. 4. LAND SELECTION CONSOLIDATION.

(a) Section 506(a)(5) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (Public Law 96-487, as amended) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(C) In order to consolidate Federal land ownership and improve management of all land and timber resources in the area, the lands between such sale area and lands lying to the east of such sale area which have been or may be conveyed to Kootznoowoo pursuant to this paragraph (5) shall be made available by the Secretary for an exchange between the Federal government and Kootznoowoo, Inc. pursuant to the terms of Section 1302(h) of this Act. If such sale is voluntarily terminated, or is cancelled or forfeited in accordance with applicable law and regulations, then the lands within the sale area shall also be made available for exhange. The availability of these lands for exchange shall continue for one year following the date the sale is completed and closed, or for one year following its termination, cancellation or forfeiture, whichever is later. Nothing in this section shall affect valid land selections which the State of Alaska has filed with the Federal Government pursuant to Public Law 85-508, nor shall this section cause these lands to be removed from entry pursuant to the Mining Law of 1872."

"(D) Subject to lode mining claims, known as KAEL 1-216 inclusive, and valid existing rights, the subsurface estate in the lands conveyed to Kootznoowoo, Incorporated, pursuant to subparagraph (C) shall be granted to Sealaska Corporation."

SEC. 5. ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

(a) Section 703(a)(1) of the Act is amended by deleting the words "Admiralty Island National Monument Wilderness" and inserting in lieu thereof "Kootznoowoo Wilderness".

(b)(1) All rights, title and interests to that portion of the approximately 17.34 acres comprising the Angoon Administrative Site which, pursuant to paragraph (c)(2) of this section, the Secretary dedicates the uses related to the administration of the Tongas National Forest, are hereby confirmed in the United States, said parcel being a valid existing Federal administrative site as referenced in section 506(a)(3)(A) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (Public Law 96-487, as amended). Said administrative site is located on Admiralty Island in Township 50 South, Range 68

East, Section 31, C.R.M. and Township 50 South, Range 67 East, Section 36, C.R.M.

(2) Within one year of enactment of this paragraph, the Secretary of Agriculture shall adjust, and resurvey as necessary, the boundaries of the Angoon Administrative Site to include only that portion of the site described as follows:

(A) those lands which lie within the following described boundaries, comprising 4.68 acres more or less:

Beginning at Corner 1, also Corner 9 of U.S. Survey No. 8756;

Thence N 45 degrees 30 minutes W, 540.79 feet to Corner 2,

Thence N 45 degrees 00 minutes E, 876.60 feet to Corner 3,

Thence S 45 degrees 30 minutes E, 540.79 feet to Corner 4,

Thence S 45 Degrees 00 minutes W, 876.60 feet to Corner 1, also Corner 9 of U.S. Survey No. 8756, the point of beginning.

(B) those lands which lie within that area adjoining the northeastern boundary of the 4.68 acre tract and the mean high tide line of Kootznoowoo Inlet, subject to a perpetual public easement for the existing Angoon-Killisnoo Road; and

(C) an easement for road and utility access to the 4.68 acre tract from the western or southern boundary of the 17.84 acre site. To the maximum extent feasible, the Secretary shall locate said easement to connect to and follow the existing right of way for Relay Road, which lies between Lots 1 and 6 of the Samuel G. Johnson subdivision. Said easement shall be at a precise location and of dimensions which the Secretary determines is reasonably necessary for present and projected Federal uses of the site related to administration of the Tongass National Forest. Said easement shall be subject to any valid existing rights except those of Kootznoowoo, Inc. and, provided further, the easement shall not be located on any lands conveyed by Kootznoowoo, Inc. to a third party prior to June 1, 1988 without the express consent of such party: Provided, That the Secretary shall exclude from the lands so retained those lands which were occupied on June 1, 1988 by structures and improvements that were not constructed by or for the United States including easements related thereto, or which were constructed by or for the United States but which the Secretary determines are not reasonably necessary for present or projected Federal uses related to the administration of the Tongass National Forest: Provided further, That the Secretary shall not exclude from the 4.68 acre tract any lands occupied by existing power or utility lines or poles, and the lands so occupied shall be subject to an easement to allow for their continued use, maintenance, and repair.

(3) Title to all lands within the 17.34 acre administrative site which are not included by the Secretary in the adjusted area provided by paragraph (c)(2) shall be conveyed by the Secretary of Agriculture by quitclaim deed to Kootznoowoo, Incorporated.

(4) The provisions of paragraphs (c)(2) and (c)(3) are subject to the condition precedent that Kootznoowoo, Incorporated executes an appropriate written agreement acceptable to the United States Attorney for the District of Alaska to dismiss, with prejudice, the pending litigation entitled Kootznoowoo, Inc. v. United States Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, Civil No. A84-575, in the United States District Court for the District of Alaska, and agrees therein that Kootznoowoo, Incorporated and the United States shall each bear their own costs of said litigation, including attorneys' fees.

"SEC 6. STUDY.

"(a) Congress recognizes that the Native residents of the villages of Haines, Ketchikan, Petersburg, Tenakee Springs, and Wrangell were unable to organize Village Corporations, Urban Corporations or Group Corporations pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act [43 U.S.C §§ 1601-1629e], despite pursuit of such means as were available to them for redress of their grievances, and accordingly may not have been afforded just and equitable treatment for the settlement of their aboriginal claims consistent with the intent, purpose, and promise of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act.

"(b) The Secretary of the Interior, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby authorized and directed to prepare a written study of the history of the villages of Haines, Ketchikan, Petersburg, Tenakee Springs, and Wrangell in relation to the history of the villages described in ANCSA Sections 16 (a) and (d) and the villages of Sitka and Juneau. Such agencies and instrumentalities of the United States Government as may have information relevant to this study are hereby authorized and directed to cooperate in the research for and preparation of this study. The representatives of the Natives of the five affected villages, the State of Alaska, Sealaska Corporation, the Sealaska Heritage Foundation, the Tlingit and Haida Central Council, the Alaska Federation of Natives, and such other historical and cultural organizations as are interested are invited and encouraged to cooperate in the study.

"(c) The study shall be completed and delivered by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress on or before January 1, 1991. The Secretary of the Interior shall also submit any legislation necessary to implement the study recommendations to the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources within three months after submitting the study.

"(d) The study shall include:

(1) Determination of whether the history of Native occupation and use of Haines, Ketchikan, Petersburg, Tenakee Springs, and Wrangell indicates that such communities have an equitable claim to Native Corporation status under ANCSA.

(2) Identification of public or private land and other assets that can be made available for conveyance to Native Corporations organized by the Native residents of each of the five villages in the event they are accorded such status.

(3) Identification of the means of properly funding any such Native Corporations.

"(e) In this Section 6, 'ANCSA' means the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (Pub. Law 92-203, 85 Stat. 688), as amended."

The Forest Service is directed to negotiate, compromise and settle the original claims, or the claims filed by an insurer subrogated to the rights of a claimant, and to negotiate any other claims filed within 90 days of the date of enactment of this Act. Notwithstanding any other provision of the law, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay the amount of each settlement from the Claims, Judgments, and Relief Act Fund (Public Law 95-

26): Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make no payments for claims which are determined by the Forest Service or the Department of Justice to be invalid under current law.

EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE FOR FLIGHT TRAINING

DASCHLE AMENDMENT NO. 1562

(Ordered referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.)

Mr. DASCHLE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2537) to amend chapter 32 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize the pursuit of flight training under that chapter, as follows:

On page 3, lines 3 and 4, strike out the parenthetical matter.

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS TO THE MONTGOMERY GI BILL ACTIVE DUTY AND SELECTED RESERVE PROGRAMS TO PERMIT BENEFITS FOR SOLO FLIGHT TRAINING.

(a) ACTIVE DUTY PROGRAM.—Section 1432(f)(1) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking out "(other than tuition and fees charged for or attributable to solo flying hours)".

(b) ACTIVE DUTY PROGRAM.—Section 2136(g)(1) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking out "(other than tuition and fees charged for or attributable to solo flying hours)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall be effective with respect to flight training received under chapter 30 of title 38, United States Code, and chapter 106 of title 10, United States Code, on and after the first day of the second month following the month in which this Act is enacted.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend chapter 32 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize the pursuit of flight training under that chapter, and for other purposes.".

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, last Friday I, along with the distinguished chairman of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, Senator CRANSTON, introduced legislation to authorize the pursuit of flight training for chapter 32 veterans who are eligible for educational benefits under the Veterans Educational Assistance Program.

The purpose of S. 2537 is to ensure that veterans who entered the service between 1974 and 1984 and are currently eligible for educational benefits have the same opportunity to obtain flight training benefits as their counterparts who currently receive these benefits under the Montgomery GI bill. Without access to these benefits, many chapter 32 veterans will not have the financial means to pursue a career in aviation.

Today, I am submitting to the Senate an amendment that I intend to offer to both S. 2537 and the Montgomery GI bill Active Duty and Selected Reserve Programs that would permit education benefits for solo flight training. The purpose of this amendment is to strengthen the flight training benefits provided to eligible chapter 30 and chapter 32 veterans by ensuring that the high cost associated with obtaining a commercial rating does not prohibit veterans from pursuing an career in aviation.

Currently, veterans who pursue a career in aviation are required to obtain both their instrument and commercial ratings. To obtain an instrument rating, an individual must obtain a minimum of 120 hours of dual flight instruction. S. 2537 enables veterans to pursue their instrument rating by providing reimbursement for 60 percent of the costs associated with dual flight instruction.

Individuals who pursue the next step, their commercial rating, are required to obtain 30 hours of solo flying hours along with an additional 30 hours of dual flight instruction. Currently, veterans are reimbursed for 60 percent of the costs associated with their dual flight instruction but are not eligible to receive partial reimbursement for their solo flying hours which can range from $50 to $75 an hour. Unfortunately the high cost associated with obtaining a commerical rating, coupled with the fact that veterans are not currently allowed to receive reimbursement for solo flying hours, means that, for many veterans, the goal of pursuing a career in aviation will remain only a dream. The amendment I am offering today would provide reimbursement for 60 percent of the costs of solo flight training and enable more veterans to pursue a career in aviation.

I am confident that regulations currently in place will provide the necessary safeguards to ensure that reimbursement for solo flying hours is not abused. Current regulations require each holder of a part 141 pilot school or provisional pilot school certificate to establish and maintain a current and accurate record of the participation and accomplishment of each student enrolled in an approved course of training conducted by the school. The regulations specifically state that the student's logbook is not acceptable for this record, thereby ensuring the proper oversight of accumulated solo flying hours.

I urge my colleagues to join me in adopting this amendment to strenghten the flight training benefits provided to our Nation's veterans. I ask unanimous consent that the full text of S. 2537 appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2537

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE FOR FLIGHT TRAINING.

(a) POST-VIETNAM ERA VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—Section 1641 of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection (b):

"(b)(1) The Secretary may approve the pursuit of flight training (in addition to a course of flight training that may be approved under section 1673(b) of this title) by an individual entitled to basic educational assistance under this chapter if—

"(A) such training is generally accepted as necessary for the attainment of a recognized vocational objective in the field of aviation;

"(B) the individual possesses a valid pilot's license and meets the medical requirements necessary for a commercial pilot's license; and

"(C) the flight school courses meet Federal Aviation Administration standards for such courses and are approved by the Federal Aviation Administration and the State approving agency.

"(2) This subsection shall not apply to a course of flight training that commences on or after October 1, 1994.".

(b) BENEFIT AMOUNT AND ENTITLEMENT CHARGE.—Section 1631 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, each individual who is pursuing a program of education consisting exclusively of flight training approved as meeting the requirements of section 1641(b) of this title shall be paid a monthly benefit under this chapter in the amount equal to 60 percent of the established charges for tuition and fees (other than tuition and fees charged for or attributable to solo flying hours) which similarly circumstanced nonveterans enrolled in the same flight course are required to pay.

"(2) No monthly benefit payment may be paid under this chapter to an individual for any month during which such individual is pursuing a program of education consisting exclusively of flight training until the Secretary has received from that individual and the institution providing such training a certification of the flight training received by the individual during that month and the tuition and other fees charged for that training.

"(3) The number of months of entitlement charged in the case of any individual for a program of education described in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be equal to the number (including any fraction) determined by dividing the total amount of educational assistance paid such individual for such program by the monthly rate of educational assistance which, except for paragraph (1) of this subsection, such individual would otherwise be paid under subsection (a) of this section.".●

HEINZ AMENDMENT NO. 1563

Mr. HEINZ proposed an amendment, which was subsequently modified, to amendment No. 1554 proposed by Mr. WIRTH (and others) to the bill H.R. 4404, supra, as follows:

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following: ": Provided, That of the funds appropriated for the Defense Stock Fund in P.L. 101-165, $21,000,000 is rescinded; Provided, That an additional amount of $7,600,000 is appropriated for 'Salaries and expenses. United States attorneys' and an additional amount of $11,500,000 is appropriated for 'Federal Bureau of Investigations. Salaries and Expenses', both amounts to be available for the investigation of fraud and other criminal activity in financial institutions." .

CRANSTON (AND KERREY) AMENDMENT NO. 1564

Mr. LEAHY (for Mr. CRANSTON, for himself, and Mr. KERREY) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 4404, supra, as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, up to $5,000,000 of the total amount of funds available to carry out chapter 1 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (relating to development assistance), which funds were—

(1) appropriated by the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1990 (Public Law 101-167), or may be made available to the President to provide emergency assistance through international relief agencies to children within Cambodia.

(2) otherwise made available through the exercise of the authority contained in section 515 of that Act.

(b) None of the funds made available pursuant to subsection (a) may be made available, directly or indirectly, for the Khmer Rouge.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that a hearing has been scheduled before the full Committee on Energy and Natural Resources to receive testimony on S. 2415, the Solar and Geothermal Power Production Incentives Act of 1990.

The hearing will take place on May 15, 1990, beginning at 10 a.m. in room SD-366 of the Senate Dirksen Office Building in Washington, DC.

Because of the limited time available for the hearing, witnesses may testify by invitation only. However, anyone wishing to submit written testimony to be included in the hearing record is welcome to do so. Those wishing to submit written testimony should send two copies to the committee, SD-364, Washington, DC 20510.

For further information, please contact William B. Conway, Jr., senior counsel for the committee at (202) 224-7149.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON FEDERAL SERVICES, POST OFFICE, AND CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Subcommittee on Federal Services, Post Office, and Civil Service, of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, will hold a hearing on May 11, 1990. The focus of the hearing will be to review investigations of the production of a radar jammer system [ASPJ]. The subcommittee will hear witnesses from the Department of Defense, the Office of the Inspector General—Department of Defense, and the General Accounting Office.

The hearing is scheduled for 9:30 a.m., in room 342 of the Senate Dirksen Office Building. For further information, please contact Ed Gleiman, subcommittee staff director, on 224-2254.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs scheduled oversight hearing for April 30, beginning at 2 p.m. has been changed and the committee will be holding a markup on Tuesday, May 1, 1990, beginning at 2:30 p.m., in 485 Russell Senate Office Building on S. 143, the Indian Development Finance Act; S. 2354, the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974; S. 2075, the Indian Environmental Regulatory Enhancement Act of 1990; S. 381, Recognition of Mowa Bank of Choctaw Indians; S. 1413, Recognition of Aroostook Band of Micmacs Settlement Act; S. 1747, Ponca Restoration Act; S. 1918, recognition of Jena Choctaw Indians and other committee business to be followed by an oversight hearing on S. 1203, the Indian Economic Development Act of 1989; S. 1650, the Indian Employment Opportunity Act of 1989; and the Supreme Court's decision in cotton petroleum.

Those wishing additional information should contact the Select Committee on Indian Affairs at 224-2251.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Armed Services Committee Subcommittee on Defense Industry and Technology be authorized to meet in open session on Monday, April 30, 1990, at 2 p.m. to receive testimony of national and defense critical technology plans in review of S. 2171, the Department of Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1991.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

NATIONAL INFRASTRUCTURE COUNCIL ACT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleagues Senators BURDICK, MOYNIHAN, BAUCUS, LAUTENBERG, WARNER, MITCHELL, BENTSEN, REID, LIEBERMAN, BREAUX, SANFORD, and HATFIELD in cosponsoring S. 2046, the National Infrastructure Council Act of 1990. I commend the distinguished chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, Mr. BURDICK, for bringing the need for a national infrastructure policy to the forefront of the Senate's agenda. The development of a coordinated long-range national infrastructure strategy is vital to the future economic health and well-being of this Nation.

I believe that the establishment of a National Infrastructure Council is the logical next step in addressing our Nation's massive infrastructure problems. The deterioration of our highways, bridges, water, rail, and mass transportation systems did not happen overnight. Effective, far-reaching solutions cannot and will not occur over a short period of time. As the National Council on Public Works Improvement in its final report to the President and the Congress stated:

No single approach by itself will be adequate. More money alone will not suffice. More effective management alone will not get the job done. Technology alone will not save the day. The complexity of these systems and their attendant problems demand a broad-based strategy.

Mr. President, many estimates have been forthcoming regarding the price tag for infrastructure improvement. The final bill will indeed be massive. The greatest cost, however, has come as a result of a lack of policy coordination. Now, more than ever, it is important that we direct our limited dollars prudently and efficiently. The proposed National Infrastructure Council would not only coordinate national infrastructure policy, but provide critical recommendations for prioritizing the necessary capital investment.

In addition, the establishment of a National Infrastructure Council would provide an important clearinghouse for the dissemmination of information on a wide range of infrastructure issues. The technical assistance and technology transfer provisions of S. 2046 would provide valuable infrastructure information at every level of government, but particularly for smaller communities, such as Henning and Tracy City in Tennessee, which often lack the technical expertise to manage sophisticated infrastructure systems.

Mr. President, the coordination of an effective national infrastructure policy should be the first step toward addressing our public works shortfall. The establishment of a National Infrastructure Council is a necessary link in the development of a national infrastructure strategy. I join my colleagues in support of S. 2046, the National Infrastructure Council Act of 1990.●

M. DAVID MERRILL HONORED

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to pay a brief but warranted tribute to a sincerely outstanding individual from the State of Utah, Mr. M. David Merrill.

Mr. Merrill, a professor of instructional technology at Utah State University, was recently named person of the year in educational technology for 1989. This prestigious national distinction, which is awarded annually by Educational Technology magazine, recognizes individuals for continued contributions to educational technology research and development.

A graduate of Brigham Young University with advanced degrees from the University of Illinois, Mr. Merrill returned to Utah in 1987, where his national reputation in instructional design theory and expert systems had led to positive, cooperative relationships between Utah State University and corporations, such as IBM, which are committed to furthering educational technology applications.

Additionally, Mr. Merrill has been ranked fifth nationwide among influential scholars in the field of instructional technology, is listed among the most productive educational psychologists in the Nation, and is one of the most frequently cited authors in computer-based instruction literature.

M. David Merrill, who can best be characterized by his enthusiastic, pioneering spirit, is truly a leader in his field. I know that I join many of my fellow Utahns in offering him my warmest congratulations on his well-deserved recognition and in wishing him continued success in his efforts to better not only Utah but the entire Nation.●

BREAST CANCER DEATHS: A NEEDLESS TRAGEDY

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, nearly every family has been touched on the tragedy of breast cancer. And it need not be so. As Marilyn Quayle so eloquently said recently, "We must declare all-out war against the tragedy of breast cancer." I have written a column about the steps we must take to conquer this disease and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The column follows:

Marilyn Quayle, wife of Vice President Dan Quayle, testified before a House committee recently about her mother's breast cancer. "My mother lost her battle, but I am determined to win her war," she said.

Her mother died, and far too many women are dying of breast cancer—needlessly.

One out of ten women in the United States will develop breast cancer during her lifetime. The five-year survival rate if the cancer has not spread is 90 percent. But if it has spread, that figure drops to 66 percent.

The key is early detection.

The difficulty is that the leading method of detection is mammography, which costs an average of $100, but can run as high as $200. Often is is not covered by insurance—and we have about 31 million Americans without any health insurance, more than half of them women.

The leading national cause of cancer deaths among women is lung cancer, and the second highest is breast cancer.

But in Illinois the leading cause of cancer deaths among women is breast cancer. For reasons I do not fully understand, nationally 16 percent of all cancer is breast cancer, but in Illinois it is 29 percent.

In Illinois, and other states, many women do not take the precaution of mammography because of the cost. Not surprisingly, the death rate of women who have breast cancer is much higher among the poor.

For example, on Indian reservations, with their disheartening poverty, the death rate for women who get breast cancer is well above the national average.

Shirley Randolph of the Illinois Department of Public Health recently testified: "Over 7,000 cases of female breast cancer are diagnosed in Illinois each year—yet hundreds, maybe thousands, of additional cases are not diagnosed due to barriers associated with poverty and the inability of poor women to access screening services."

Ninety-three percent of breast cancer cases occur in women over age 40.

Somehow we have to see that this high-risk population gets regular screening.

The irony is that if we could work this out, we would not only save lives; taxpayers would save money. The costs that go with the problems of breast cancer, after it has spread, can be enormous.

WHAT CAN WE DO?

1. Medicare should cover mammography screening. At present it does not.

2. Private insurance companies should be encouraged to include yearly tests after age 40 as part of their routine coverage.

3. We must do more to educate women about the problem. If they feel lumps, they should see their physicians. Fortunately, four out of five lumps are not cancerous, but if that fifth one is caught quickly, the result can be life-savings.

4. Some method of paying for screening for those unable to afford the cost must be found.

5. We need more emphasis on research into the cause and treatment of breast cancer.

During the Vietnam War 57,000 Americans died, a tragic loss. But during the same period 330,000 American women died of breast cancer, also a tragic loss.

We must win the war against breast cancer.●

MODIFIED FINAL JUDGMENT—BELL OPERATING COMPANIES

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I want to share with my colleagues a measure passed by the Idaho State Legislature urging the Congress to remove restrictions imposed on the Bell operating companies by the modified final judgment. I think my colleagues will find House Joint Memorial 15 most interesting, and I ask that it be placed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

IDAHO STATE SENATE,
March 9, 1990.

Re Transmittal of Idaho House Joint Memorial 15: MFJ Relief.

Hon. JAMES A. MCCLURE,
U.S. Senate, Hart Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCLURE: The State of Idaho's Centennial Legislature, assembled in the Second Regular Session, has enacted House Joint Memorial 15 which encourages the United States Congress and President George Bush to remove restrictions that were imposed on Bell operating companies by the Modification of Final Judgment (MFJ).

Pursuant to Joint Rule 6 of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Idaho, House Joint Memorial 15 has been filed with the office of the Secretary of State of the State of Idaho and has been duly recorded therein. The legislation also has been sent to members of Idaho's Congressional delegation and to the President of the United States.

Through House Joint Memorial 15, both Houses of Idaho's Centennial Legislature have resolved that removal of restrictions "that prohibit Bell operating companies from engaging in the manufacture of telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment and the provision of information services are in the public interest of the Citizens of the State of Idaho and the Citizens of the United States of America." Idaho House Joint Memorial 15 encourages the United States Congress and the President of the United States to enact appropriate legislation that removes these restrictions.

We encourage you to enroll House Joint Memorial 15 in the official Congressional record.

Respectfully submitted,
SENATOR MICHAEL D. CRAPO,
Senate President Pro Tem.
REPRESENTATIVE TOM BOYD,
Speaker of the House.

HOUSE JOINT MEMORIAL NO. 15

Whereas advances in technology have brought our society to the threshold of the information age; and

Whereas the national welfare will be greatly enhanced by bringing about the universal availability of the information age to the American people through the development and deployment of innovative technologies; and

Whereas the provision of information services, and the removal of judicially imposed restrictions on the development and availability of such services, will stimulate and encourage use of information age technology by the American people; and

Whereas it is the responsibility of Congress, rather than the courts, to determine communications public policy including its effect on economic competitiveness, national security, and foreign trade which are essential elements of a sound national telecommunications policy; and

Whereas the continued economic growth and international competitiveness of American industry are dependent upon permitting all American companies to provide information services, to conduct research and to design, develop, manufacture, and market software, firmware, telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment for all American residential, business and governmental telecommunications users; and

Whereas it is imperative that American industry provide new and innovative telecommunications services and an efficient, reliable, state-of-the-art, and internationally competitive public telecommunications network to serve the growing needs of the people of the United States; and

Whereas existing new and innovative telecommunications technologies are less accessible and less affordable in rural and small communities than in larger, urban centers; and

Whereas the Federal Communications Commission is the appropriate federal agency, in conjunction with appropriate state regulatory agencies, to ensure fair competition in the telecommunications industry, while protecting the interests of the basic local exchange customers; and

Whereas the court order, referred to as the "Modification of Final Judgment" (MFJ) that broke up the former Bell System, prohibits the divested Bell operating companies from participating in certain telecommunications markets, namely, manufacturing and information services and long distance services; and

Whereas the MFJ has prevented some two-thirds of America's domestically owned telecommunications industry from competing with foreign telecommunications firms in the United States; and

Whereas, removal of MFJ restrictions on manufacturing of telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment and on provision of information services would foster American competitiveness because:

(a) Removal would facilitate competitiveness with foreign telecommunications companies who are free to compete in markets in the United States;

(b) Removal would help bring needed telecommunications technologies that are already in existence, but which the Bell operating companies are prohibited from providing by the MFJ, to hearing impaired persons, rural schools and hospitals and others who might benefit from improved and affordable telecommunications;

(c) Removal would help stimulate the invention of new and innovative telecommunications technologies and facilitate access of said innovations to rural America;

(d) Removal would encourage investment in research, development, design and manufacture of telecommunications and customer premises equipment.

Now, Therefore, be it

Resolved by the members of the Second Regular Session of the Centennial Idaho Legislature, the House of Representatives and the Senate concurring therein, That we urge the President of the United States, George Bush, and the Congress of the United States to remove restrictions that prohibit Bell operating companies from engaging in the manufacture of telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment and the provision of information services, in the public interest of the citizens of the state of Idaho and the citizens of the United States of America, through the passage of appropriate legislation: Be it further

Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and she is hereby authorized and directed to forward a copy of this Memorial to the President of the United States, George Bush, and to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and to the congressional delegation representing the State of Idaho in the Congress of the United States.●

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the latest budget scorekeeping report for fiscal year 1990, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 308(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report was prepared consistent with standard scorekeeping conventions. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Budget Act.

This report shows that current level spending is under the budget resolution by $3.5 billion in budget authority, and over the budget resolution by $4 billion in outlays. Current level is under the revenue floor by $5.2 billion.

The current estimate of the deficit for purposes of calculating the maximum deficit amount under section 311(a) of the Budget Act is $114.6 billion, $14.6 billion above the maximum deficit amount for 1990 of $100 billion.

The report follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, April 30, 1990.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached report shows the effects of Congressional action on the budget for fiscal year 1990 and is current through April 27, 1990. The estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of the 1990 Concurrent Resolution on the Budget (H.Con.Res. 106). This report is submitted under Section 308(b) and in aid of Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended, and meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of section 5 of S.Con.Res. 32, the 1986 First Concurrent Resolution on the Budget.

Since my last report, dated April 23, 1990, there has been no action that affects the current level of spending or revenues.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Chairman.

CBO WEEKLY SCOREKEEPING REPORT FOR THE U.S. SENATE, 101ST CONG., 2D SESS. AS OF APR. 27, 1990

MISSOURI YOUTH RECEIVES AWARD FROM THE PRESIDENT

● Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of 17-year-old Clarence Wilson, of St. Louis, who is being honored by President Bush for his efforts to clean up a drug and violence infested area of his city. Clarence has overcome many obstacles and succeeded in starting a neighborhood association for crime prevention. The street Clarence lives on has a sign, erected by him that reads, "Welcome to Thomas Street—no drugs, no loitering, no loud music." Clarence Wilson's efforts have been so impressive that other organizations in St. Louis have drafted him as an advisor and speaker to other youth in the area. Everywhere Clarence speaks, he sparks enthusiasm and hope to people who otherwise see no end to the drugs and violence in their neighborhoods.

Clarence Wilson is a wonderful role model for people of all ages. The success of his efforts show us that we can win the war against drugs. I join with the President in wishing Clarence continued success and I hope he will remain dedicated to drug and violence prevention.●

RALLY FOR LIFE

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I am sure that my colleagues are aware that hundreds of thousands of Americans gathered here in Washington on Saturday to attend the "Rally for Life." This rally drew people from around the country who believe that our Nation's abortion policy—a policy that permits the destruction of unborn human life throughout pregnancy—must change.

I share these convictions, and I marvel that, even as this gathering was taking place, the Senate had pending before it legislation that would authorize the District Government to pay for abortions on demand in a city where more babies are aborted each year than are born.

I wonder if we have reflected on the reality behind such statistics, the reality that abortion is a destructive act that extinguishes the lives of the most vulnerable among us. Vice President QUAYLE, who spoke at Saturday's rally, likened our abortion on demand policy to "shooting out the stars." He said:

It is as if we were shooting out the stars, one by one, preparing ourselves for an unending night of the most fearful darkness.

Mr. President, I would like to insert the text of Vice President QUAYLE's address into the RECORD, and I commend it to the attention of my colleagues.

The remarks follow:

REMARKS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT, PRO-LIFE RALLY, WASHINGTON, DC

Thank you.

Your tremendous turnout today—in the hundreds of thousands—is a powerful demonstration of your commitment and caring.

This is a day of both celebration and protest—a day of great sadness overcome by an even greater hope. This day can begin a healing of the terrible wound which, for almost two decades, has torn at our country's heart.

I want to thank you for your sacrifice, your courage, and your faith in the enduring decency of this nation. You and the millions like you all over this land have stirred a renewal of the American spirit, an awakening of conscience and compassion after too many years of complacency and self-concern.

Today we confront a national tragedy: an infant can be aborted, for almost any reason, up to the time of its birth. The great majority of Americans, in poll after poll, object to that. They may disagree about how best to turn the situation around. But almost all stand together against the terrible reality of unlimited abortion on demand. That overwhelming majority constitutes the largest coalition—I might say, the biggest tenent—in American politics.

Some endeavors are more important than partisanship, and surely more important than personal advancement. Protecting the least of our brethren is such a cause.

The pro-life movement is the humanitarian movement of our time. Some of those who defend the status quo accuse you of extremism. But their extremism cannot stand the light of honest discussion or the test of reasoned debate.

Will the American people continue to accept the notion that unborn children are disposable? Our answer is: Not in this country. Not now. Not ever.

Twenty years ago, abortion may have seemed the easy way out for a society reeling from the collapse of a moral consensus. Instead, it turned out to be a way to shift onto women and children the burdens of the sexual revolution. And along with it came a dramatic increase in other forms of mistreatment of children: abuse, abandonment, exploitation in pornography and prostitution.

Should we be surprised?

None of us, woman or man, can presume to judge those faced with a problem pregnancy. But no one can be proud that, here in our nation's capital, abortions outnumber live births. No one can be comfortable with the way minority children, especially Black and Hispanic babies, are lost in greater proportion than others. And the loss of some 25 million children in total to abortion since 1973 has been unspeakable.

It is as if we were shooting out the stars, one by one, preparing for ourselves an unending night of the most fearful darkness. You have been voices against the night: Caring for women in need and children in danger, opening your homes to the homeless and fatherless, adopting and nurturing, you redeem your country's future by living the ideals of its past.

There are no easy victories in any great cause. They are won as much by patience and persistence as by numbers and skill. But this we may confidently say: the worst years are behind us. The conscience of our country is stirring.

When the human dimension of an issue is clearly presented to the American people, they will always, always choose justice for the weak and mercy for the helpless. That is our heritage, made richer by every generation of Americans who confronted their society's shortcomings, opened their hearts, and did what had to be done to set things right. Today we reaffirm that heritage.

In both justice and mercy, we can save those children, one by one by a million, until at last no one will be cast away. No one will be cut off from us. No one will be denied a place in our family.

Thank you.●

RESOLUTION OPPOSING ANY FURTHER USE OF THE DAIRY TERMINATION PROGRAM

● Mr. McCLURE. I rise in support of the efforts of Senator WALLOP to oppose any further use of the Dairy Termination Program as a method of controlling dairy production. I do so knowing of the importance of both the dairy industry and the beef industry to the State of Idaho. I support this resolution because the Dairy Termination Program damaged not just the beef producers of Idaho but the other small businesses which relied upon the dairies which went out of business.

When this legislation was passed as a part of the Food Security Act of 1985, the Federal Government held enormous stocks of nonfat dry milk and cheese and was purchasing more every day as dairy producers continued to overproduce in response to lucrative Government support prices. To stem this tide the national milk associations proposed that the Federal Government pay milk producers to leave the business by selling their herds to be slaughtered. This was a great deal for farmers who were ready to retire or who just plain wanted out of farming. It was not so great a deal for cattle producers, farmers who raised hay and barley and corn silage to support these dairies. It was not such a great deal for the small town parts suppliers and other support businesses which relied on these dairies for business. The ripple effect in the small rural towns was extensive. But only the dairymen who participated in the buyout were the beneficiaries of Government money.

In all, over 14,000 dairies went out of business. This meant the slaughter of 1.3 million cows, calves, and heifers. This dealt a major blow to the beef cattle industry as it caused large drops in both the cash and futures prices of beef cattle and also in pork. This came at a particularly difficult time for the cattle industry as the industry had suffered through more than 10 years of below average prices. The Dairy Termination Program further weakened an already unstable market.

There is no doubt that the dairy industry needed to reduce production in a way that would not adversely affect its producers. I was in favor of altering the dairy program in a way which would slowly reduce support prices which would reduce the incentive to produce over a sufficient period of time to allow the industry to adjust. This was done but the Dairy Buyout Program was also implemented.

Some would say that the termination program worked. Commodity Credit Commission net removals under the price support program dropped by more than half—from 12.3 billion pounds milk equivalent in fiscal year 1985 to 5.4 billion pounds milk equivalent in fiscal year 1986. Similarly, CCC outlays dropped from $2.3 billion to $1.2 billion during this time. However, it appears that post-buyout milk production has rebounded faster than originally estimated. Although early 1987 production was 3 percent below 1986, by the last quarter of 1987 it was 3 percent higher. Milk production has continued to increase and with new technology such as bovine somatatrophin coming on line, milk production has the potential to increase substantially.

When this happens will the dairy industry turn again to the Federal Government to buy dairy farmers out of business? The original program only required dairy farmers who sold out under the DTP Program to stay out of dairy production for 5 years. Does the dairy industry expect the Federal Government to buy them out again? If so, perhaps I should go into the dairy industry so the Government can buy me out of business.

At best dairy termination programs such as the one legislated in the FSA of 1985 are only temporary fixes to the problem. Unfortunately, it is one that plays havoc with other agricultural interests mainly beef, pork, and hay producers. I will not support any additional dairy termination programs. If the dairy industry needs assistance to control production it will need to be done in a way which will not damage other agricultural producers.

Mr. President, I thank you for this time and urge my colleagues to support not only this resolution but any efforts to impose another dairy termination program on rural America.●

TRIBUTE TO ROSA PARKS

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to a great American, Rosa Parks, an individual whose valiant stand played a major role in the civil rights movement. On May 4, she will be honored with the American Heroine Award by the South Jersey chapter of the National Conference of Christians and Jews and the Jewish Community Relations Council.

December 1, 1955, will remain an important date in the battle for civil rights in America. On that day in Montgomery, AL, a soft-spoken seamstress refused to give up her seat on a bus to a white passenger and was arrested. On December 5, she appeared in court and was fined $14 dollars for breaking the Montgomery segregation law. That brave woman was Rosa Louise Parks.

Rosa Park's action and arrest triggered a reaction that helped dismantle a system of discrimination that had lasted for generations. On December 5, 1955, blacks began a boycott of the Montgomery bus system that lasted over a year.

On December 20, 1956, Federal marshals served an injunction prohibiting segregation on Montgomery buses. Blacks would no longer, and could no longer be required to sit at the back of the bus. The next day, for the first time in history, blacks and whites rode together on an unsegregated basis in Montgomery.

Despite her role in this historic event, Ms. Parks has remained a private person, but one with strong convictions. Throughout her life she has continued to stay active in civil rights forums and seminars, and in urging young and old to register to vote. She has participated in political rallies for causes she believes in. For 20 years, she served as a member of the staff of U.S. Representative JOHN CONYERS in Detroit.

She has been the recipient of many awards that have included the Springarn Medal for Civil Rights, and the Eleanor Roosevelt Woman of Courage Award. The Southern Christian Leadership Conference sponsors an annual Rosa Parks Freedom Award, and she is known as the mother of the modern civil rights movement.

As Ms. Parks is honored by the South Jersey chapter of NCCJ and the Jewish Community Relations Council, I extend to her my heartiest congratulations and very best wishes. Mr. President, Rosa Parks is an inspiration to all people in the fight for civil and human rights. She is an American heroine.●

FORMER CONGRESSMAN DAVID W. DENNIS ENDORSES CONGRESSIONAL TERM LIMITATION

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, although the term limitation movement may not seem powerful inside the Beltway, it grows daily among the public from the States we represent, in size and fervor. In over 20 States, petitions to Congress to adopt a term-limitation amendment have been introduced. In nine States, those petitions have or will be debated in committee or on the floor, and in two State legislatures, term-limitation petitions have passed.

Alongside the growing movement in the State legislatures, is an equally growing movement from all segments of the public. I have received countless letters and calls from businessmen, senior citizens, entrepreneurs, and college professors. People from every range of location profession and ideology praise term limitation, and ask how they can get involved. Mr. President, eventually Beltway-insider views will no longer matter—the overwhelming public demand will drown out the snide pundits who have become detached from the public.

I have also received numerous letters from former Members of Congress who from the perspective of experience can see the need for this urgent reform. These former Members have moved on from Congress, and live under the laws they helped enact. Most agree that term limitation is the most far-reaching, fundamental reform we can undertake.

I ask that one such letter from Mr. David W. Dennis, be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks. David Dennis represented the 10th District of Indiana from 1969 to 1975. Former Members of Congress provide current Members with a unique perspective. I urge all Senators to listen to those who have made laws, and who now live under them.

The letter follows:

LAW OFFICES OF DENNIS & VERTESCH,
Richmond, IN, April 24, 1990.

Hon. GORDON J. HUMPHREY,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: As a former member of Congress (10th District, Indiana, 1969–1975), I do support Senate Joint Resolution 235.

I have come to this conclusion somewhat reluctantly, but I believe it to be necessary in order to secure the continuance of true citizen representation, as contemplated by the founding fathers.

I am

Sincerely yours,

DAVID W. DENNIS.●

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WIRTH). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this proposal has been agreed to, I think, all around. Certainly the two leaders and Senator HATFIELD and I and the staffs have made every endeavor to contact other Senators. So therefore these are the remaining amendments that we know about.

I ask unanimous consent that, other than the committee amendment, section 320, and amendments thereto, the only amendments remaining in order are as follows: BUMPERS, on food safety, one amendment; one amendment for Senator PELL, Foreign Relations reporting language; one amendment by Mr. DECONCINI on GSA buildings; and an amendment by Mr. MOYNIHAN on GSA buildings; an amendment by Mr. BIDEN on Andean nations with a possible Kasten second-degree amendment which would have to be relevant thereto; an amendment by Mr. WIRTH on U.N. environmental program with a possible Kasten amendment which would be required to be relevant thereto; one Central America amendment by Mr. DODD if there are any further cuts in Central American funding; one amendment by Mr. MACK on Cuba; one amendment by Mr. METZENBAUM in the second-degree if relevant to the Mack Cuba amendment; one amendment by Mr. KASTEN on Namibia; an amendment by Mr. HATCH on drug helicopters to Colombia; one amendment by Mr. D'AMATO on Lithuania with relevant second-degree amendments in order thereto; one amendment by Mr. ARMSTRONG on Lithuania with relevant second-degree amendments thereto in order; and one amendment by Mr. HATFIELD; one amendment by Mr. BYRD; and no motions to recommit without instructions in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to thank the distinguished chairman, the President pro tempore, Senator BYRD, Senator HATFIELD, the majority leader, and all my colleagues. We have made a good-faith effort; in fact, we have been working on this side all day long to shrink the number of amendments but, second, to make certain everybody who had a genuine amendment would have the opportunity to offer it. I am hoping even though we have six listed on this side that only one may be offered. There may be more than that, but I think there are some that will not be offered.

So, we have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the two leaders for the work they have done to help bring the bill to this point and for the excellent work that they have done today, and their staffs. Both leaders have had their staffs working with committee staffs, and this listing of amendments is the result of that work by our staffs. I think it has taken a long time to get to this point. I hope that the Senate can complete action on this tomorrow.

As the Republican leader has said, in his opinion, and I share it, several of these amendments probably will not be called up, so let us hope that will happen.

There will be a vote on cloture tomorrow evening. I believe it is 7.

We will begin tomorrow morning at 9:30 on the bill. Let us hope we can complete action tomorrow.

Mr. President, anent the agreement that has just been entered, I would add this proviso, that all of the amendments enumerated are first-degree amendments except as specified to be second-degree amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement?

Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the agreement follows:

Ordered, That when the Senate resumes consideration of H.R. 4404, the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill, other than the pending committee amendment, and amendments thereto, the only amendments in order be the following amendments, with all amendments to be in the first degree unless otherwise specified:

Bumpers, food safety;
Pell, foreign relations reporting language;
DeConcini, GSA buildings;
Moynihan, GSA buildings;
Biden, Andean nations;
Kasten, relevant 2d degree to Biden;
Wirth, U.N. environment;
Kasten, relevant 2d degree to Wirth;
Dodd, Central America, if further cuts in Central American funding;
Mack, Cuba;
Metzenbaum, relevant 2d degree to Mack;
Kasten, Namibia;
Hatch, drug helicopters to Colombia;
D'Amato, Lithuania, relevant 2d degree amendments;
Armstrong, Lithuania, relevant 2d degree amendments;
Hatfield; and Byrd.

Ordered further, That no motions to recommit with or without instructions be in order. (April 30, 1990)

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 9 A.M.; MORNING BUSINESS; RECESS FROM 12:30 TO 2:15

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 9 a.m. Tuesday, May 1, and following the time for the two leaders there be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 9:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

I further ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, the Senate stand in recess from 12:30 to 2:15 p.m. in order to accommodate the respective party conferences.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 9 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business, I move in accordance with the previous order that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 9 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, at 10:38 p.m., recessed until Tuesday, May 1, 1990, at 9 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMRKS

CONGRATULATING SENATOR ROBERT C. BYRD ON THE OCCASION OF CASTING HIS 12,134TH VOTE IN THE U.S. SENATE

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, it is with intense personal and professional pride that I rise to offer my congratulations to the Honorable ROBERT C. BYRD, the senior U.S. Senator from West Virginia, on the occasion of having cast his 12,134th vote in that body, on behalf of the people he serves with love and compassion in his own beloved State as well as for an entire Nation.

For 32 years, ROBERT C. BYRD was first and foremost father, grandfather, husband, and friend to his family, helping to mold his children and his grandchildren in such a way as to raise them to become active, caring, and productive citizens.

During those 32 years of being there for his family, ROBERT C. BYRD has been there for the family of humankind, working as the chosen leader of the Democrat Party, the esteemed majority leader of the Senate. In that capacity alone, he took the time to become the most knowledgeable Parliamentarian of this century, as has no equal among his peers today. That honor, and it is an honor, didn't just happen, but came about as a result of a restless intellect, steeped in the importance of the traditions of the U.S. Senate, and yearning to know and understand it all. Not being the kind of man to rest on his laurels, ROBERT C. BYRD has always taken the next step, and has left that legacy for the next generation to learn from—and he has done it in his own lifetime. I can only imagine what his next project might be, for I know his mind is never still, his hand never idle, and he deeply believes that there is no limit to his ability to use knowledge for its own sake and the well being of others.

ROBERT C. BYRD is living proof that coming from humble beginnings is not necessarily a strike against one's ability to overcome adversity and to become a nationally known figure. From a very young age, I believe ROBERT C. BYRD knew that while it is one thing to be recognized for achievement above and beyond what society may require of us, it is quite another to be recognized for the achievement you require of yourself. We have all heard of the men down through history who marched to a different drummer. He is such a man.

ROBERT C. BYRD came to the Senate without a law degree, but he didn't let that stop him. He labored long and hard for 10 years, in his spare time—and there hasn't been a lot of spare time for this man who has promises to keep—but he obtained his law degree just as he has achieved all those things that were important for him to achieve in order to become the best U.S. Senator possible.

ROBERT C. BYRD, having a depth of love for the traditions of the great body in which he is privileged to serve, has read into the Journal of the proceedings of the U.S. Senate, every day for many years, a lesson on the history of that proud institution as it went about the business of the people.

He has recently published an account of those history lessons, in a beautifully written and illustrated book that will become a scholar's delight in years to come when future historians are seeking to know what ROBERT C. BYRD knows and has kindly, deftly and learnedly imprinted for posterity between the pages of his labor of love.

As other great men before him have found, ROBERT C. BYRD has lived his professional and his personal life in the knowledge that the future does not belong to those who are content with today, apathetic toward common problems and their fellow man alike, timid and fearful in the face of new ideas and bold projects. He has lived his life, in the Senate, in his State, and in his home, surrounded by the family he deeply cares for, as a man who knows how to blend passion, reason, and courage in a personal commitment to the ideals and enterprises of an America he reveres.

I am told that his first vote upon being sworn in as U.S. Senator was to vote for adjournment. In his 32d year, the year in which he proudly broke the record for having cast the most votes in that body—12,134 of them—he voted for legislation calling for the care and education of children. It is a most fitting way for ROBERT C. BYRD to have been enabled to cast that record-breaking vote—for he has always been most concerned about the kind of America we want to pass on to our children.

For 32 years, and for many more to come, ROBERT C. BYRD has stood and will stand tall and proud, as one among us who has spent his life in the admirable pursuit of a way in which to bequeath to our descendants a better and safer world—better and safer than the one we live in today—one in which people are free from the terrors of want, of poverty, of ignorance, of greed, of war and oppression, free and able, as he has been, to realize their own talents and to fulfill their own destinies.

Archimedes said: "Give me a place to stand, and I will move the world."

ROBERT C. BYRD has shown that one man can move the world, and so can we all. The statement that his 32 years of public service makes is this: Few will have the greatness to bend history itself, but each of us can work to change a small portion of events, and in the total of all those acts will be written the history of his generation, and perhaps of generations to come.

Congratulations Senator BYRD, and while I am about it, let me say to you that I will savor, still use in my own public service effort on behalf of West Virginia, all that I learned from you, who gave me my first serious, meaningful job as an aide in your Senate Office. I will never forget, and you can be sure that I am still learning from you, your words, your deeds.

I look forward to doing so for at least another 32 years!

ADDRESS OF BENJAMIN MEED, CHAIRMAN OF THE ANNUAL DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE COMMEMORATION OF THE HOLOCAUST

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, last week in the great rotunda of the U.S. Capitol, many of us here attended the annual National Civic Commemoration of the Days of Remembrance. Organized by the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, this sober ceremony paid tribute to the memory of the 6 million victims of the Nazi Holocaust. The chairman and organizer of this most outstanding event was my dear friend Benjamin Meed, a survivor of the Warsaw Ghetto and member of the Holocaust Council.

Mr. Speaker, Benjamin Meed's address opening at the Civil Commemoration is a profound and moving statement. I ask that it be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to give it serious thought.

The text of the speech follows:

REMARKS BY BENJAMIN MEED

Mister Ambassadors, Mr. Secretaries, Members of Congress, members of the United States Holocaust Memorial Council, distinguished members of our Armed Forces, honored guests, my fellow survivors, and dear friends.

It is a great honor for me, a survivor of the Warsaw Ghetto, to welcome you here today. From the Warsaw Ghetto to this magnificent Rotunda is a long way.

Only a decade ago, a unanimous Congress created the United States Holocaust Memorial Council and charged it to perpetuate the memory of the victims of the Holocaust. These days of remembrance have since become a time of reflection and contemplation for all Americans.

We gather today in the Nation's Capitol to "Remember the Voices That Were Silenced." We are here to mourn, to remember, and to affirm our resolve that mass tyranny, bigotry, and systematic killing of men, women, and children will never take place again, anywhere. We recall the millions of people who were murdered, among them more than a million Jewish children. But we also recall the frightening silence of indifference. It came from around the world—from ordinary people and national leaders alike. Those who could have raised their voices in protest chose not to speak.

And indeed, only 4 months into this new decade, historic political changes in Eastern Europe have begun to unfold before our very eyes, and have certainly given us much to think about.

Poland, Romania, Czechoslovakia, and Hungary have recently instituted new governments. Now, we are confronted with the imminent unification of Germany. Have history's lessons taught us how to proceed? What forces must the world set into motion—yes, what safeguards—need to be implemented? or will the world, once again, remain silent?—I hope not.

There is much to celebrate in the newly emerging free nations of Eastern Europe. And yet, as the companion of freedom we find a resurgence of anti-semitism. In the Soviet Union, there is a newfound fear—of a resurgent nationalism rooted in tradition that is deeply anti-semitic. From Germany we have heard a long overdue apology but also talk of forgetfulness, of amnesia, of revisionism, and diminishing the significance of the crime. Some say forgive, most ask that we forget. We cannot.

The challenge is here, today, for us to write history's new chapters, and to not let others rewrite it in camouflaged texts—history which has been engraved with the blood of innocent people and the lives of American and Allied soldiers, our liberators. Surely, the uniqueness of the Holocaust with the lost 6 million Jewish lives, and many millions more, make this obligation very clear. This uniqueness is the universal lesson. A lesson we shall never forget.

On this most solemn of days, let us strengthen our resolve to preserve the authenticity of history and to assure a place in history for our children. Let our voices be heard—and no longer silenced—as we confront new and volatile forces, and lay the groundwork for the 21st century.

REMEMBERING A FORMER COLLEAGUE J. KENNETH ROBINSON

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor former Virginia Congressman, J. Kenneth Robinson, who passed away on April 8.

I entered the House with Ken in 1971, and I always considered him a friend as well as a colleague. I had the fortune to serve with Ken on the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence for several years.

After a distinguished career in the Army during World War I, Ken served in the Virginia State Senate until he was elected to Congress in 1970. Ken also served with distinction on the House Appropriations Committee, becoming the fifth ranking Republican before his retirement in 1985.

He was raised in Frederick County, VA, and his district included the northern suburbs of Richmond, to the Shenandoah Mountains and Winchester.

Ken also distinguished himself in the field of agriculture. He graduated from Virginia Polytechnic Institute with a degree in horticulture. He helped run his family orchard business and also was past president of the Virginia Horticulture Society and the Frederick County Fruit Growers. While on the Appropriations Committee, Ken worked hard on agricultural issues to best serve his districts needs.

I extend my sympathies to his wife, Kathryn and his children and family. He will be deeply missed by all of us here in the House.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY GOV. EDMUND G. "PAT" BROWN

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to stand before my colleagues today and call their attention to an outstanding leader in California, Gov. Edmund G. "Pat" Brown, as he celebrates his 85th birthday.

As a prominent leader in the State of California, Governor Brown has made numerous contributions to our State, and the citizens of California continue to benefit from his legacy.

Governor Brown was instrumental in providing California with superior statewide transportation systems and statewide water programs. Additionally, he brought innovative ideas and thoughtful debate to California's education community, successfully enabling the university and State college programs to rank the best in the country.

Much of the growth of California can be attributed to Governor Brown's personal efforts to focus attention on the growing concerns of the people and issues affecting the State itself. His dedication and commitment to service clearly indicate his compassion for people and his concern for the progress of the State of California.

On April 24, 1990, Governor Brown will celebrate his 85th birthday with a gala dinner in Sacramento. This day is a celebration not only for the Governor, but for all Californians who have benefitted from his many years of service. I congratulate Governor Brown on his birthday and join with his family and friends in wishing him many wonderful years ahead.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in wishing Gov. Edmond "Pat" Brown a wonderful birthday. May he have an enjoyable day and continued happiness and good health.

SALUTE TO CARMEN J. GAITA, SR., RETIRED POLICE CHIEF OF TOTOWA BOROUGH, NJ

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest pride and admiration that I rise today to salute a truly outstanding public servant, citizen and human being who has dedicated his life to protecting his community.

I am speaking of Chief Carmen J. Gaita Sr., who retired this year after more than four decades with the Totowa Borough Police Department, and 19 distinguished years as its chief. For his innumerable contributions to his community, his State and our Nation, Chief Gaita will be honored with a dinner on Thursday, May 3, at the Russian Hall.

Mr. Speaker, I know this event will be well-attended, and that the evening's proceedings will be a great source of pride, not only to Chief Gaita, himself, but to this devoted family; his wife of 42 years, Lucille; his son, Carmen, Jr., the former mayor of Little Falls, NJ; his daughter, Lucille, and his two grandchildren, Lauren and Steven Gaita.

For the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert Chief Gaita's official biography, one that is filled with details of continued achievement and outstanding community service:

CHIEF CARMEN J. GAITA, SR.

Chief Carmen J. Gaita, Sr., son of the late Antonio and Maria Gaita was born in the borough of Totowa on July 14, 1924. He lived his entire life in Totowa, being educated at Memorial Grammar School and graduated from Passaic Valley High School. While at Passaic Valley High School, he received various awards and held the position of chief of the safety patrol.

He enlisted in the United States Navy during World War II, having served four years. Upon discharge as aviation storekeeper, he furthered his education by attending Bergen Junior College, Teaneck, New Jersey. On January 1, 1949 he was appointed to the borough of Totowa Police Department. He progressed through the ranks and was promoted to sergeant on March 16, 1953. Was elevated to lieutenant August 16, 1957, he earned his captain's bars March 16, 1963, and was promoted to deputy chief on April 15, 1970. He was appointed chief of police on January 1, 1971.

Chief Gaita pursued his police profession with basic and advanced courses in police and civil defense work, conducted jointly by the State police and F.B.I. Since a member of the Totowa Police Department, he has been the recipient of seven citations, awarded for outstanding and heroic duty. Carmen has been a member of the North Jersey Patrolmen's Benevolent Association Local No. 80 for the past 42 years, served as president and having been awarded a silver life membership in the said organization during 1969 by its officers and members. He was the president of the North Jersey Police Burial and Benevolent Fund, Inc., having held that position for the past 35 years.

Along wth his great service to the borough of Totowa and his outstanding career with the police department, Chief Gaita served as president of the New Jersey State Association of Chiefs of Police during the year 1977 and 1978. As a member of the Passaic County Chiefs Association he served as president during 1976. He was also a member of the International Police Chiefs Association and served on the executive committee from 1977 to 1987.

In addition, he is a life member of the borough of Totowa Fire Department, joining the Volunteer Fire Company No. 1 in 1946 and served as president and treasurer for many years. He is also a life member of the Totowa First Aid Squad, Inc., being one of the five original organizers and presently serving as a trustee. He organized the Totowa Police Athletic League in 1952, upon realizing the great need for recreation for the youths of the borough of Totowa.

In 1962 he was elected by the citizens of the borough of Totowa to serve on the board of education. He was again re-elected to his second term in 1965, serving for a total of six years, during which time he also served as president.

Chief Gaita is a member of Christ Episcopal Church and a past church warden. He is a member of Totowa Borough Memorial Post No. 227 American Legion, a member of Little Falls Lodge 263 F and AM, and a life member of the Italian American Club and served as president for many years.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to present a brief profile of a truly outstanding public servant, civic leader and human being who has truly made his community, his State and our Nation a better place to live, Carmen J. Gaita, Sr., retired police chief of Totowa Borough, NJ.

THE EXPORT FACILITATION ACT

HON. SAM GEJDENSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced legislation that would amend the Export Administration Act of 1979. H.R. 4653, the Export Facilitation Act, received the unanimous approval of the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

As originally conceived just after World War II, and as implemented since that time, the intent of the Export Administration Act was to deprive the East Bloc of Western technology that would contribute to its military development, to the detriment of our national security. The events in Eastern Europe compel us to question the basic premises on which these export controls are based.

It is now in the interest of the United States to provide advanced technology to the countries of Eastern Europe. It is in our interest to have them develop economically, to promote democracy and open communication with the West, and to help them to remain free of Soviet control. With the proper safeguards, we should be willing to sell them such technology, not in spite of our national security interest, but because of it.

However, at a time when bold action is called for, the executive branch has been the scene of bureaucratic tugs of war between cabinet level departments. At a time when the very existence of the multilateral body, Cocom is jeopardized, the U.S. is still dotting "i's" and crossing "t's" rather than writing new pages. At a time when an already impatient Germany is reunifying, merging Europe's greatest industrial power with the nation that had the closest ties to the Soviets, we must reconsider the structure of our export control system.

Hopefully the administration will be coming forth shortly with its proposal for Eastern Europe. Hopefully this proposal will recognize a change in thinking that reflects concerns raised on Congress on both sides of the aisle. These concerns are based on the increasing isolation of the United States, even from its closest allies at Cocom.

And it is no wonder. In February, the U.S. offered a much heralded proposal for the decontrol of machine tools. The administration's proposal was so far behind the times that it would have decontrolled nothing that is made today.

Unless the administration changes its tune, the United States could well be the catalyst for the disintegration of Cocom—at which point the U.S. could play by itself with all of its high tech toys.

In addition to responding to the changes in Eastern Europe, this bill is motivated by certain basic principles: To limit bureaucratic wrangling and inefficiency; to maintain the effectiveness of Cocom; to promote government accountability and due process; and to foster U.S. competitiveness.

In order to achieve these objectives, the legislation would take a number of important steps:

First, it would ease restrictions on exports to Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union; the bill provides that the U.S. will propose to Cocom to decontrol all items which can now go to the PRC on an expedited basis. For items above this level of technology, for countries of Eastern Europe with adequate safeguards against diversion, there shall be favorable consideration for civil end uses.

Second, the bill would create a license free zone in Cocom. This would mean that as of September 30, 1991, there would be no permission required to export to, or reexport from Cocom countries. If the executive branch determined that a country was not properly enforcing export controls, it could require licenses for that country.

A very high percentage of U.S. exports go to our Cocom allies and are subject to the burden of export controls without significant benefit. In 1989, the Commerce Department granted 27,500 licenses to Cocom—38 percent of the total—and only 10 were denied. Also, with the coming of a borderless European Community in 1992, it may be rather difficult to enforce export controls within the European Community.

Third, this legislation would sunset the list of controlled items. By October 1, 1992, all items would be removed from the commodity control list unless they are reinstated with justification for each item. The control list is cumbersome and out of date. Items are on the control list without justification and just stay there. We need to change the inertia of the system.

Fourth, the bill would define critical terms so as to properly distinguish between munitions—controlled by the State Department—and dual use items—controlled by Commerce. If something is on the list of munitions controlled multilaterally by Cocom, then it would be on the U.S. munitions list. If an item were not on the international list, then it would be subject to control by Commerce.

The State Department could still decide to impose foreign policy controls on items that fall off the U.S. munitions list. This section would also establish a process to resolve jurisdiction disputes between Commerce and State in a timely manner.

There are a number of other important provisions in the bill: Providing for the routine decontrol of items as technology advances; providing for notice of Cocom actions to U.S. exporters; giving the Commerce Department a representative at Cocom; clarifying the role of the Defense Department in the review of license applications; increasing the penalties for willful violations of the Act; and eliminating the prohibition on judicial review.

This bill is not only the product of bipartisan cooperation, it is the product of bipartisan participation. Members from both parties have contributed extensively to its provisions. I urge its rapid consideration and passage.

ARIZONA CATTLEMEN'S ASSOCIATION

HON. JIM KOLBE

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, on January 9, 1990, the Today Show on NBC–TV aired a piece which presented the cattle grazing industry in an unfair manner. It was totally one sided in its presentation of the issues. As you might imagine, cattle growers throughout the West reacted angrily. But their response has also been positive; in the best traditions of American democracy, they have petitioned their elected officials.

Last week, a delegation presented a rather impressive stack of signatures to me. It included the names of over 4,000 people from the State of Arizona representing 120 different occupations. In addition, 2,000 names from 28 other States and 2 foreign countries. This impressive demonstration clearly shows that there is a lot of concern over the way so much of America's media distorts the issues surrounding cattle grazing on public lands; but the concern goes beyond a simple television program.

The signers of these petitions realize that cattle grazing on the public lands of the Western States is a significant part of a healthy economy in those States, and an important part of the American food chain. They believe that our lands should continue to be used for a variety of purposes, including recreation, farming, wildlife preservation, and livestock grazing. They also know that often those leasing the vast tracts of public land for cattle grazing have provided the only stewardship of that land. Yes, there have been abuses; yes, there has been overgrazing. But such incidents are isolated in comparison to the good work cattle growers do to preserve, protect, and improve public lands.

Mr. Speaker, we need a debate about how our Nation's public lands should be used. But the public's knowledge in that debate is not enhanced by distorted images presented by the national news media.

Mr. Speaker, I am including with my remarks, a copy of the resolution which accompanied the petitions. The original signatures have been placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Senate.

RESOLUTION REGARDING GRAZING ON PUBLIC LANDS

Whereas, cattle grazing on the Public Lands of the western states is a significant part of a healthy economy in those states; and

Whereas, beef calves raised on public lands of the West are a significant part of the American food chain as well as America's agricultural economy; and

Whereas, contrary to the opinion of environmental activists, the western livestock industry is not an isolated, freestanding, expendable segment in America; and

Whereas, false information on cattle grazing in the West is being presented as truth to the American public and was so presented on January 9, 1990, on NBC's Today Show: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That state and federal legislators be informed that removal of cattle from public lands would be disruptive to the economy of the western states as well as the American food chain and would adversely affect the Consumer Price Index; and be it further

Resolved, That these legislators be informed of the determination of the undersigned that management of public lands should continue for multiple use, including cattle grazing, as a practice vital to the preservation of resources, the continued productivity of those rangeland resources and the well being of wildlife.

REMARKS BY CHAIRMAN OF THE JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF, GEN. COLIN L. POWELL, UPON HIS ACCEPTANCE OF THE EISENHOWER LIBERATION MEDAL OF THE U.S. HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL COUNCIL

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, last week in the Great Rotunda of the U.S. Capitol, Gen. Colin L. Powell, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was awarded the Eisenhower Liberation Medal by the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council. This award was a key part of the annual "National Civic Commemoration of the Day of Remembrance," which paid tribute to the memory of the 6 million victims of the Nazi Holocaust.

The Eisenhower Liberation Medal is given in honor of the American soldiers and officers who helped liberate the European concentration camps in 1945. The award is given to individuals whose actions—like those of Gen. Dwight David Eisenhower, Supreme Commander of Allied Forces in Europe during World War II—symbolize America's historic commitment to the defense of freedom.

General Powell is a most fitting and appropriate recipient of this distinguished medal. He has served as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff since October 1, 1989. Prior to that appointment, he was assistant to the President for national security affairs from December 1987 until January 1989. Colin Powell has a distinguished military career, beginning with his commissioning as a second lieutenant in the Regular Army in 1958, and including service on two occasions in Vietnam, and command of a number of key military units.

Mr. Speaker, the liberation of the concentration camps in 1945—the event which the Eisenhower Liberation Medal commemorates—was a moving and dramatic event for both victims and victors. When survivor and liberator met hope and freedom embraced. Then as now, the response of the survivor was gratitude. For the soldier, the responsibility was and is to bear witness.

Mr. Speaker, Colin Powell's remarks on receiving the Eisenhower Liberation Medal is an important and sober statement I ask that it be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to give it serious attention.

REMARKS BY GEN. COLIN L. POWELL

With much emotion, Mr. Meyerhoff, I accept this medal on behalf of all the brave soldiers who liberated Europe.

As a soldier who's seen some combat, I have vivid images of that first group of soldiers to discover each of the concentration camps. Particularly that group of battle-hardened veterans of the 4th Armored Division who in the early days of April 1945 came upon the camp at Ohrdruf.

Months earlier, they had burst from the Normandy beachhead like a roaring forest fire, raced 700 miles across France, and taken more prisoners and engaged and destroyed more enemy units in a shorter period of time than any other unit in modern history. They were tough. They were fearless. They felt they were invincible.

Then they stumbled onto the camp at Ohrdruf. Listen to the words of one infantryman: "I guess the most vivid recollection of the whole camp is the pyre. * * * It was a big pit where they had stacked bodies, stacked bodies and wood and burned them. I guess I'll never forget the ashes. * * *"

The 4th Armored shuddered to a halt. Nothing had prepared them for this.

Generals Eisenhower, Patton, and Bradley had to see it for themselves, unable to believe the reports of their forward units. "The smell of death overwhelmed us even before we passed through the stockade," General Bradley recalled. He said that Eisenhower turned pale and silent, but insisted that he would see the entire camp.

Thirty-two hundred bodies had been thrown into shallow graves. Other emaciated corpses simply lay where they had died. General Patton moved off and went behind a barracks and threw up. Out of character for Eisenhower, he become violently angry and turned and snapped at a soldier standing nearby. Every word the General spoke was filled with his immense revulsion. One man described his words that day as "falling like icicles."

General Eisenhower finally left the camp and went to Third Army headquarters and cabled Washington. His message read: "We are constantly finding * * * camps * * * where unspeakable conditions exist. From my own personal observation, I can state unequivocally that all written statements up to now do not paint the full horrors." Later he would say to Marshall, "For most of it, I have no words."

Those soldiers would never be the same again. The camps were a turning point in their lives. They had confronted an utter disregard for the nobler aspirations of which mankind is capable. That is why they insisted at once on remembrance. And that is why we must never forget.

These are not events disconnected from the present world. Look at Ohrdruf, for example. In 1989, that small town has been liberated a second time. Forty years of dedication and vigilance by the free peoples in the NATO alliance have liberated Ohrdruf again. Today, the people of Ohrdruf look forward to a reunited Germany in which they too can enjoy the healing sun of democracy and economic prosperity.

So long as America and her allies stand guard around the world, so long as our great strength never falters, so long as we tell ourselves, "We will never forget," other oppressed peoples will eventually feel that sun too. Such a world must be our fondest hope. That is why we must always be strong. That is why days like this are important. That is why we must always remember.

Thank you. Shalom.

THE RETIRED SENIOR VOLUNTEER PROGRAM OF SACRAMENTO

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Retired Senior Volunteer Program of Sacramento and their outstanding volunteers. Through the Federal ACTION Agency's Older American Volunteer programs, the RSVP has given 16 years of excellent service to the citizens of Sacramento.

Since 1974, the Retired Senior Volunteer Program has helped my community by assisting in our hospitals, schools, public agencies, and charitable organizations to assist our citizens with their everyday needs such as transportation, counseling, food distribution, making toys for homeless children, tax preparing, and even crime prevention. The program has helped many seniors, disadvantaged and disabled individuals achieve their highest level of functioning as they strive for independent community living. Through their knowledge, maturity and caring these older volunteers exemplify the spirit of volunteerism in California. It is through the dedicated work of these talented volunteers, that the Retired Senior Volunteer Program has been able to offer our citizens a place to turn. The active involvement of the volunteers we honor today is an example of the effective method of how the ACTION Agency helps people to help themselves.

Mr. Speaker, I highly commend all the volunteers and staff of the Sacramento Older American Volunteer programs for their many accomplishments and the vital assistance they have provided to the citizens of Sacramento. I salute their dedication and commitment to the welfare of our great State and extend all my best wishes for much success in all of their future endeavors.

HOSTAGE AFFAIR MUST BE BROUGHT TO AN END

HON. LAWRENCE COUGHLIN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, today's media reports are indicating that educator Frank Herbert Reed of Massachusetts has been freed by the Islamic fundamentalists who held him captive in Lebanon. I would like to express my personal appreciation to all of those who were involved in this action.

This release represents another step toward the improvement of relations between the United States and those who have sponsored the Hezbollah organization in the past. Such an improvement in relations can only serve to benefit all sides.

But, Mr. Speaker, while the release of Frank Reed certainly offers further reason to be optimistic about America's future relations with the sponsoring nations, it will not by itself resolve the current state of affairs. Additional Americans, including my constituent Joseph Cicippio and five others, continue to languish in cruel captivity at the hands of those whose countrymen, ironically, they had sought to serve.

Mr. Speaker, America is a great nation, with vast resources, and a near boundless reservoir of enthusiasm for good relations with all peoples. At the same time, however, our Nation is one that is, above all perhaps, resolved to seeing justice prevail. The injustice of even one innocent American held against his will precludes the kind of improvement in relations that would benefit all parties to the hostage affair.

As President Bush has said on more than one occasion, "Good will begets good will." I hope those who can influence the kidnapers in Lebanon will continue to exercise their ability to improve this tragic situation. Only following the release of all of the Americans held hostage in Lebanon can we truly turn the page to a new chapter in the Middle East.

SELFLESS COURAGE OF BOB TUR AND BYRON ALPERSTEIN

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize and thank reporter Bob Tur of KNX newsradio, and photographer Byron Alperstein for their courageous actions during one of southern California's most devastating storms.

On January 17, 1988, Bob Tur and Byron Alperstein set out for Redondo Beach in a KNX helicopter to report on the storm's effects on the coastal community. From the air, they were able to see that the storm was capsizing small boats, the high surf was destroying the breakwater, and portions of the Portofino Inn were beginning to collapse. While hovering above the scene monitoring police radio dispatches, the two heard the fire department's request for assistance in evacuating the hotel. Realizing that there were no other helicopters around, Bob and Byron responded, putting thoughts of personal risk aside.

For more than an hour, Bob guided the helicopter through strong winds and torrential rain to rescue 50 hotel guests stranded on the roof of the collapsing hotel. Flying in near zero visibility, trying to avoid power lines and light standards, the two ferried the guests to a parking area 400 yards away.

Mr. Speaker, in averting what could have become a tragic loss of life, Bob Tur and Byron Alperstein demonstrated a selfless courage that deserves special recognition. I ask my colleagues in the House to join me in honoring these two men for their heroism.

CONGRESS SHOULD CORRECT MISTAKE MADE IN 1977

HON. CURT WELDON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, the American people have had enough. For nearly a decade, senior citizens have asked Congress to fix the Social Security "notch" and for an equal number of years, they have been turned down.

It is time that we, as a Congress correct the mistakes made in 1977. As we are all aware, people born between 1917 and 1921 have found that their Social Security benefits are lower than those people born in 1916. The disparity is not based on their earnings history. They receive lower benefits because they were born in the so-called "transition years." We know it better as the "notch."

In trying to prevent the Social Security system from running dry, Congress instituted sweeping changes in 1977 which reformed the formula by which benefits are calculated. Unfortunately, this change hurts people who are forced to draw their small income from this new formula. This hardly seems fair. In fact, I wonder how many of my colleagues would like to have their paychecks computed on the basis of the year they were elected to Congress.

Congress made these changes in 1977 because they feared that the Social Security system was running dry. Those fears should be well erased by now. During the next decade, annual Social Security surpluses are expected to average more than $121 billion per year. So let's drop the fiction that we need to pay lower benefits to ensure the solvency of Social Security.

I have cosponsored legislation, H.R. 2707, which would restore equity and fairness to individuals born in the "notch" years. The bill, however, would hardly break the Social Security System. Adoption of this legislation would still permit the trust funds to grow to more than $1.3 trillion by the end of this decade.

I have heard plenty of people complain that we should not fix the "notch" because it will increase the deficit. To that I say, "hogwash." The Social Security trust funds should not be used to hide the deficit. Those moneys have been collected to pay for retirement benefits, not to hide the deficit. Yes, fixing the "notch" will cost money, but it is money set aside exclusively to pay for such benefits.

Mr. Speaker, since I came to Congress in 1987, I have failed to see any concrete action on any legislation to address the "notch." I call upon my colleagues to reflect on this problem. To those who agree on the need for real reform, let us join together to find a solution. To those who continue to preach inaction, let them be wary of our growing strength and numbers.

JEAN HOWARD, ELKS MOTHER OF THE YEAR

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, like other Members of the House, I often rise to praise someone in my district whose life represents citizenship at its best, whose actions inspire everyone. I do so today. And this one is really special to me.

Mrs. Jean Howard of Glens Falls, NY, has been named Mother of the Year by Glens Falls Lodge 81, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. When Exalted Ruler Louis Vandenburg made the announcement recently, I thought Committee Chairman Franklin V. LaDeau and the Elks could not have made a more appropriate choice. Let me tell you something about Jean Howard.

When I moved north to Glens Falls, NY, many years ago, Don and Jean Howard were two of the first people I met. They are two of the oldest friends I have, and I can think of few friendships I value as highly. When I say that I speak for everyone who knows them.

A good mother centers her life on her family, and Jean Howard has been no exception. She has raised two sons, Donald, Jr. and Robert; and four daughters, Carol, Donna [Usher], Patrica [Sullivan], and Marjorie [Peters].

That would be enough, but it only begins to describe Jean Howard. She has been like a mother to Glens Falls Elks, and a pillar to the community in general. Jean Howard is one of those people who makes you stand back in awe and say: "How does she do it?" She has been active for years with the Warren-Washington Counties Association for Retarded Citizens, serving as vice president for 2 years and president for 3. The association singled her out for her service in 1982. She has also frequently manned the phone banks for the Center for the Developmentally Disabled. She has been a helping mother at BOCES, assisting such outdoor activities as picnics, swimming, and other field trips.

Jean has served as chairlady and cochairlady of Ladies of the Elks for several terms. At the lodge's 100th anniversary celebration, she chaired the committee in charge of the Past Exalted Rulers Recognition Night. She was also active in the lodge's Scout troop and annual blood drives.

Mr. Speaker, that will give you a partial idea of the kind of person Jean Howard is. This Sunday, May 6, she will be honored at the lodge with a reception. It's going to be my pleasure to speak at that event, and present her with a flag that flew over this Capitol Building. And I will be as proud as I have ever been to join her family and many friends in paying tribute.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and everyone present to join me today in saluting Jean Howard, Glens Falls Elks' Mother of the Year, and a very special lady.

TRIBUTE TO DR. RICHARD L. WENZEL

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished philosopher Will Durant, once said, "The health of nations is more important than the wealth of nations." Certainly, many people would agree with this statement; but I can think of only one person who has dedicated his life to this philosophy by overseeing the health of the people living in my district for the past 20 years. Dr. Richard L. Wenzel, Toledo and Lucas County Health Commissioner is retiring this month, after a lifetime commitment to good health. Dr. Wenzel, a native Ohioan, has nobly served the people of Lucas County by guarding the welfare of the community. He is well respected by members of the community for his vast knowledge of medicine, dedication to public health, and commitment to being an excellent physician. I'm sure Toledo and Lucas County will miss his leadership, but they have benefitted and progressed from his guidance.

Dr. Wenzel was born in Marietta, OH which is still the home of his 93-year-old mother. He graduated from Marietta College, with honors in 1943 and earned a medical degree from Ohio State University in 1946. He continued his education as an intern at Jersey City Medical Center and and began his residency in obstetrics and gynecology at St. Ann's Hospital for Women. From 1948–53, Dr. Wenzel practiced medicine in the U.S. Army Medical Corps in the Pacific as a preventive medicine officer. After his army discharge, he obtained the post at the Columbus health department as chief of communicable disease. He furthered his education at the University of Michigan by graduating with a master's degree in public health in 1957. In 1958–60, he worked for the Marietta and Washington County public health system. Through the 1960's he worked as a professor at the University of Michigan's school of public health. Dr. Wenzel was certified in public health by the American Board of Preventive Medicine in 1963. He has also served as a consultant to the Michigan Public Health Department and the U.S. Public Health Service's division of Indian health. In 1970, he was recruited for the Toledo position and has held that position for the past two decades. In 1977 he was named chairman of the governing council of the largest specialty section of the American Public Health Association and served on the governing council of APHA, the world's largest public health organization. He has also been a consultant for community health studies in Cleveland; Fort Wayne; Aurora, IL; Muncie, IN; Fairfax County, VA; and Branch County, MI. Obviously, Dr. Wenzel has had a well-rounded career in the study of health.

These are only some of the accomplishments of Dr. Richard Wenzel. His dedication to his career, devotion to the health of the Toledo's community, and commitment to gaining knowledge through education on all health issues has earned him respect throughout Toledo and Lucas County. His perseverance in serving the people of his community has made him a well known man throughout Ohio. It gives me great pleasure to share with my colleagues in the House of Representatives the life of a man Toledo knows and respects so well, Dr. Richard Wenzel.

IN TRIBUTE TO ERNA P. HARRIS

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1990

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to and to honor Ms. Erna P. Harris, who has been, and continues to be a stalwart fighter for justice. She is a beloved and honored member of the deservedly well-known political community in my district, Berkeley. If Berkeley is known as a city which cares about social and economic justice, about political equality, about peace abroad, about the reduction of nuclear weapons and nuclear power, and how all these are interrelated, it is because of individuals such as Erna Harris.

Ms. Harris, who is just 81 years young, continues to have her sagacious smile, her energy for good work, and her wicked sense of humor about the very serious issues that she has tackled. She is a graduate of journalism from Wichita University, now Wichita State University, which she chose over scholarships to universities in Oklahoma because they were segregated. As an African-American, she "was not going to go to one more segregated school."

Some of the more serious, and unpopular causes that she wrote about and published during World War II, were criticisms of the draft, internment of Japanese-American citizens and confiscation of their lands, and the Red Cross' segregation of blood plasma according to whether they were from European-Americans or African-Americans. The Red Cross denied this but the paper got anonymous calls from Red Cross workers that the story was true and the policy was eventually changed.

Ms. Harris has been a member of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, and a member of their international board. As an activist against the Vietnam war, she was a peace delegate, committed to George McGovern, to the Miami 1982 National Democratic Party Convention and partook of the antiwar demonstrations within the convention.

Berkeley was the home for five decades of a strong, consumer founded cooperative supermarket, the Consumers Cooperative, and Ms. Harris has been not only a major supporter of the work of the co-op but also a member of its center council and board of governors. She continues to work on such issues because it gives her pleasure; the work makes her face shine, and the consequent smile and good humor is our luck to share.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, May 1, 1990, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Tuesday, May 1, 1990

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 18, 1990)

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable HERBERT KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

*And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers * * .—Malachi 4:6.

Almighty God, Father of us all, thank Thee for this remarkable prospect with which the Old Testament closes. We pray for our children in a day when peer pressure is sometimes almost overwhelming, neutralizing other influences.

Help us as parents to make adequate time for our children. Help us to surround them with affection as well as discipline and counsel and direction. Help us to be models which are safe for them to emulate.

Breath of God, breathe Thy love and healing into our families. In His name who said,  * * Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.*—Mark 10:14.

Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.
Washington, DC, May 1, 1990.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HERBERT KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. KOHL thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the standing order, the majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, following the time for the two leaders, there will be a period for morning business, not to extend beyond 9:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

At 9:30, the Senate will resume consideration of H.R. 4404, the emergency supplemental appropriations bill. Last night, the managers of the bill were successful in securing a unanimous-consent agreement which now limits the remaining amendments in order to the supplemental appropriations bill. A list of those amendments can be found at page 2 of the Senate Legislative Calendar.

In addition, only one committee amendment has yet to be addressed, and that amendment will be pending when we resume consideration of the bill this morning at 9:30.

Rollcall votes can be expected throughout today's session relative to the supplemental appropriations bill, and it is my hope and intention that the Senate will complete action on this bill by 7 p.m. this evening, at which time the Senate will vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to S. 135, the Hatch Act reform.

The Senate will recess today from 12:30 p.m. until 2:15 p.m. in order to accommodate the party conference luncheons.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time, and I reserve all the time of the Republican leader.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 9:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not to extend beyond 5 minutes each.

UNOCAL "CLUNKER" INITIATIVE

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I take the floor today to commend the efforts of a certain noteworthy organization that has shown by its actions last Friday that it truly does care about the environment. That organization announced an innovative and highly effective program to address the air quality in the Nation's most polluted city, Los Angeles.

Included in this program is a very promising initiative offering the residents of Los Angeles $700 to hand over their pre-1971 automobiles and then scrapping those automobiles to recycle the metal. This offer comes out to be 40 percent over the average Blue Book value of the same automobiles. At such a price, I anticipate a good number of southern Californians will give up their old clunkers.

Back in 1970, new cars emitted about 20 times as much as a new car today. Consequently, most pre-1971 cars are today polluting up to 30 times the average of the 1990 models. Taking just one of those cars off the road could do as much good for the air quality as getting 30 people to car pool, or removing 30 new cars from the road.

What is getting one car off the road worth? In the Senate Environment Committee debate, it was suggested that getting a person to car pool rather than drive to work was worth about $50 a month. This new initiative will accomplish the same thing for about 40 cents a month. Mr. President, I call that a lot of environmental bang for the buck. This seems to me like a very positive way to try to solve this, a very innovative way and, interestingly enough, it did not take a Government law to have it happen.

Who is this innovative, environmentally-minded organization who put so much thought and effort into an idea that will truly have some consequences on the quality of our environment? Was it the National Resources Defense Council with their $16 million annual budget? Or maybe it was the Wilderness Society applying the $20 million that goes into their coffers annually. Could it have been the National Wildlife Federation allocating a small portion of their $86 million budget to such a worthwhile project?

No, Mr. President, it was none of the above. It was announced today by none other than Unocal Oil Co. Yes, my colleagues heard me right, one of those greedy corporate monsters which the environmental community labels as "big oil." I think the environmental community might pick up a point or two from this big oil initiative and just look at how much can be accomplished with 40 cents.

All too often, I think the national environmental groups spend their money lobbying Congress, spending their money here wining and dining the staffs of the various committees, sending out fundraising letters, propping up various political campaigns and the environmental value of those expenditures is suspect. Certainly it is not the return on the money that a simple buying of clunkers, old cars will have, as recommended by the very innovative managers of the Unocal Oil Co. which, incidentially, Mr. President, is the second-largest fertilizer distributor in my State.

Mr. President, I call on—in fact, challenge—national environmental groups to start putting their money where their mouths are, put their minds together and devote some resources to initiatives that will produce real and positive improvements in the environment. I challenge them to no more than merely match the initiative announced by Unocal, then we can really see who has the health and welfare of our planet at heart.

I long to see the day when people with a lot of environmental zeal will simply start buying up the old pre-1971 cars and recycling them. That would have a very positive impact on the quality of our air.

Mr. President, I see no other Senator seeking recognition. I ask unanimous consent I might extend my time for 5 more minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A VACUUM OF SILENCE ABOUT LITHUANIA

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I rise today to address the very serious situation in Lithuania and to call on the most powerful force on this Earth to become involved in what quite possibly is the most important issue of our time.

I want this force to help me launch a peace offensive in the Baltics.

It is not often that this Senator calls on this force, this most powerful force on Earth, for help. On the contrary, I am quite often at odds with this force.

Now, Mr. President, you and my colleagues may wonder who or what this "most powerful force on Earth" is.

The most powerful force on Earth, Mr. President, is the media—the people who sit behind the word processors, who run the cameras and talk into microphones.

I am calling on the media, the newspapers, television networks and radio stations to point their cameras and microphones at the terrible, terrible things that are going on in Lithuania today.

For the last few days, this Senator and other Senators have risen to protest the economic warfare being waged by the Soviet Union against the poor people of the independent Republic of Lithuania.

We all know what is going on over there. There is no mystery—despite the fact that Gorbachev literally kicked the media out of Lithuania—about what is going on over there.

Is it not interesting, that Gorbachev kicked out the media and they made not so much as a whimper. What happened to the righteous indignation we usually hear when they are excluded?

Yet we all know of the power the media wields. They are truly the most powerful force on Earth and I am asking for their help.

Despite what I or others say America seems paralyzed by the irrational idea that our foreign policy depends on Gorbachev.

Hogwash.

Our Nation was founded the principle of liberty, not only for ourselves, but for people everywhere. American blood has been shed around the globe in the name of freedom. But no one is asking Americans to shed blood now. The Lithuanians are only asking that we recognize that they, too, deserve to be free.

Today Mr. President, I am asking the most poweful force on Earth to focus their cameras and microphones on that tiny country of Lithuania.

I am willing to give Mr. Gorbachev the benefit of the doubt. He may have an argument for his acts of economic aggression, and I, for one, would like to hear his arguments.

I would also like to hear from President Landsbergis.

Today, Mr. President, I am calling for a great debate, telecast live on television all over the planet, carried live by radio to every nation on the globe, reported by Dan Rather, Bernard Shaw, Peter Jennings, Ted Koppel, Tom Brokaw, Jane Pauley, Bryant Gumbel, Deborah Norville, Barbara Walters, Harry Reasoner, Morley Safer, Mike Wallace, Paul Harvey, Jill Brooke, Charles Kuralt.

On March 27, in a radio commentary, Dan Rather said:

> Somebody said, "Well, Lithuania trying to break away from the Soviet Union is like Rhode Island or California trying to break away from the United States." Baloney. Rhode Island and California sought to come into the United States. * * * Such was not, and is not the case with Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia. * * * Why is the United States of America—the land of the free, home of the brave—not throwing itself fully, completely into support for freedom, democracy and independence for the freedom-loving peoples of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia? What is going on here?

And that is Dan Rather. I will tell Dan what is happening—nothing. But, Dan, if you are listening or watching, you can help. Let us start calling on Mr. Gorbachev and Mr. Landsbergis to take center stage and debate.

Mr. President, if we have to, let us bring Walter Cronkite out of retirement.

This would be the superbowl of debates. Mr. Gorbachev standing behind his podium arguing before the court of world opinion for denying the people of Lithuania the freedom they seek and Mr. Landsbergis behind his podium pleading his cause for freedom for his people.

Mr. President, today I called a nationwide radio talk show, the "Rush Linbaugh Show," and asked his listeners to help me call for a public debate between the leaders of the Soviet Union and Lithuania.

My office was immediately bombarded with dozens of calls saying, "Keep it up, STEVE. How can we help?" And I intend to keep it up.

Within minutes of that call, I was called by the USA Radio Network which has 642 affiliate stations. They gave me a chance to ask for help on all 642 of those stations and the phones started ringing again.

I have a call in to Ted Turner. I am going to ask Mr. Turner to use his influence and network to help stage the superbowl of debates. It will be bigger and better than the Goodwill games.

Now, Mr. President, some may think I am making light of the issue. I assure you I am not. I am dead serious.

If Mr. Gorbachev can make a case for his actions, I want to give him a forum to do just that. I want to give him all the credibility he can earn by convincing freedom-loving people around the world that he is right to starve the Lithuanian people into submission to the Soviet Empire.

I expect that there are many who will say, there goes STEVE SYMMS again; Gorbachev will never consent to a debate. They may be right, Mr. President, but we will never know unless we give him the chance.

I am calling on the League of Women Voters to help if they can. They have experience in putting on debates and every one of us in this Chamber has probably been in a League of Women Voter-sponsored debate.

In the next few days Mr. President, I plan to call every television network, every radio network, every radio talk show and as many editors as I can to ask them to help raise the flag for freedom.

Let us have a debate. Let the two leaders stand up before the world and explain their positions.

No more tanks. No more sabre rattling. No more rationing. No more threats. It is time to talk.

In summary, Mr. President, I know the situation seems to be changing daily with respect to Lithuania, but I do think that the most powerful force, in terms of the political arena in the world, is the news media. I think the news media has been incredibly silent with respect to launching a peace offensive in the Baltics. It is not often that I will call on the news media necessarily for help, but I want to say that the news media, I think, has the ability, they have the word processors, they have the cameras, they have the microphones—they have the ability to be the spokesmen for the world, if you will, for the people of Lithuania who are seeking freedom.

In the last day or so, I note that President Landsbergis is calling upon his Parliament to possibly put on hold their efforts for independence. I regret that decision, but I understand it totally in view of the fact that there was really a vacuum of silence in the world with respect to Lithuania as they were seeking independence.

A lot of Senators have risen on the floor—I laud them for it and I have done so myself—to protest the economic warfare that is being waged by the Soviet Union against the poor people of the independent Republic of Lithuania. We all know what is going on over there. There is no mystery despite the fact that Gorbachev literally kicked the media out of Lithuania. We still understand what the issue is.

It is interesting that Gorbachev is the idol of the American-left news media. He was in fact made the Time magazine's Man of the Decade. But they have been surprisingly silent now as Gorbachev has kicked the media out of Lithuania. I am surprised about the lack of righteous indignation we usually hear if they were excluded.

The other day the distinguished senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] made the observation in front of a Senate Press Gallery, loaded with cameras and media people, that what would they do if France, for example, were doing likewise to one of the islands in the South Pacific? Would they stand by if Argentina did something like this? Would the news media stand by? If Brazil did something like this, would the media stand by? No. They would not. But when Gorbachev and the Soviet Union does it, it seems to make it OK.

I do not know whether that says they are terrorized and frightened to death of the superior nuclear arsenal that is at the disposal of the Soviet dictators or whether it says they have somehow been mesmerized by the smile of Mr. Gorbachev and are ignorign the iron teeth that lie behind that smile.

Mr. President, I think if we think that our foreign policy depends totally on the survival of Mr. Gorbachev then we are headed for a very difficult time ahead. That is my major concern. It seems to me there should be some basic principles of human rights of liberty, not only for ourselves but for people everywhere. It would make a more consistent position for the United States, one that would be consistent with the fact that many, many Americans have shed their blood around the globe in the name of freedom. It would make a better tribute to them for us to have stood and stand firmer with those good people in Lithuania.

No one is asking for the American soliders to go to Lithuania and shed blood. The Lithuanians are not asking that. All they are asking is the United States simply recognize them.

I would ask the news media, the most powerful force in terms of political ideas available to mankind, to focus their cameras and microphones on the tiny country of Lithuania.

I am willing to give Mr. Gorbachev the benefit of the doubt. He may have an argument for his acts of economic aggression. I am pleased to see some reports that they may start to be relaxing some of it. But I would like to see if Mr. Gorbachev is so sure about this to see him and Mr. Landsbergis stand up and debate this. The only people that can make this happen are the worldwide media.

In fact I brought this up with the leader of Pravda when Senator KASTEN hosted him for a luncheon last week. He said that would not be possible at this time. I said you should call on not only your own media apparatus but those of the free world, CNN, ABC, NBC, et cetera, to focus on this, and demand that we stage a super bowl of the idea war, if you will, of the debate.

I wonder where all the media people are. A report should be carried live on every radio station to the globe. We have people like Dan Rather, Bernard Shaw, Peter Jennings, Ted Koppel, Tom Brokaw, Jane Pauley, Bryant Gumbel, Deborah Norville, Barbara Walters, Harry Reasoner, Morley Safer, Mike Wallace, Paul Harvey, Jill Brooke, Charles Kuralt.

On March 27, to his credit Dan Rather said the following:

> Somebody said, "Well, Lithuania trying to break away from the Soviet Union is like Rhode Island or California trying to break away from the United States." Baloney. Rhode Island and California sought to come into the United States. * * * Such was not, and is not the case with Lithuania, Estonia, and Latvia. * * * Why is the United States of America—the land of the free, home of the brave—not throwing itself fully, completely into support for freedom, democracy and independence for the freedom-loving peoples of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia? What is going on here?

That is Dan Rather.

What I would call upon the major media networks to do is say that over and over and over, get it around the world, and demand Mr. Gorbachev come out, and Mr. Landsbergis, stand on the center stage, and debate this issue. No sabres, no tanks, no warfare—just the idea of whether or not the Lithuanians are entitled to have an opportunity to be free.

Mr. President, I have with me the Washington Times article by syndicated columnist Pat Buchanan, dated April 25, 1990. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times, Apr. 25, 1990]

UNITING BEHIND A CYNICAL POLICY

(By Pat Buchanan)

As Nashville Chamberlain flew to Munich, there was much on his mind. The Sudetenland was historically German; it had been ceded to Czechoslovakia at Versailles; its people had been mistreated; they wanted to reunite with their kinsmen. Had a plebiscite been held, a majority would have voted to go home to Germany. Moreover, the prime minister did not want his country going to war over a "faraway people about whom we know very little."

That was his reasoning; what is our excuse?

Why are we appeasing Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev?

Vilnius has not asked for tanks or troops; she has only asked that the United States, the lighthouse of freedom, stand beside her in this terrifying hour in which she has chosen to stand up for liberty.

The conduct of the United States Government passes from the inexplicable to the shameful. When even the leader of tiny Estonia can come to Vilnius to offer a symbolic sword of defense, why are we behaving like this? Comes the chorus: We must save Mr. Gorbachev.

But if the Soviet dictator is the sort of man who will choke a country to death, why save him? If we look away, as he strangles Lithuania, what kind of people are we?

To watch the American Establishment unite behind this cynical policy is as instructive as it is disheartening.

Addicted to summits and showplace agreements, the White House and State Department are said to be enraged with President Vytautus Landsbergis. Is it not ever thus: Blame the victim. Henry Kissinger suggests Lithuanian freedom may have to be postponed, so as not to interfere with the Great Game of statesmanship.

The U.S. press ablaze with righteous indignation when South Africa booted reporters out of its black townships, meekly accedes to Mr. Gorbachev's order to get out of Lithuania. Having canonized him Man of the Decade, the Establishment press has a vested interest in his image and is moving to cover that investment.

In the great tradition of Walter Duranty, The New York Times' man in Moscow who won a Pulitzer covering up Josef Stalin's Ukrainian holocaust, columnist John Oakes demands that President Bush lean on the Lithuanians: "If [they] . . . are deceived into thinking . . . a sympathetic America will continue to support them right down the line—the results could be catastrophic for the Lithuanians, destructive for President Gorbachev, and highly dangerous for the United States."

"Catastrophic for the Lithuanians"? But how would a Moscow apologist like Mr. Oakes know better than this persecuted people what is in their interest? And if choking Lithuania is "destructive" of Mr. Gorbachev, whose fault is that?

"Dangerous for the United States"? Why? What will Moscow do, should Mr. Bush lose his practiced self-control and blurt out, "God Bless Lithuania!" Shower us with rockets?

Mr. Landsbergis may be a prickly character, whose timing and tactics are less than perfect. But there is no doubt who is right here. There is no doubt where history will place him—beside the murdered Imre Nagy of Hungary, beside Poland's Lech Waleas, beside President Vaclav Havel. Defiant Lithuania is exposing Mr. Gorbachev as a bully and thug—the man, we now recall, who dropped millions of mines camouflaged as toys on Afghan villages. As the Lithuanians stand up, we see Moscow clearly now, and, no longer through a glass darkly. Not pretty, is it? In his fulmination against the American Right, Mr. Oakes betrays himself and his class. They have always been more comfortable with "reform" communists than with their conservative countrymen whom they obviously despise.

Good to know. Because, the true allies of the Right are not in the State Department, nor at The New York Times. They are in the streets of Moscow, marching for Lithuania. They are the millions, from Ukraine to Kamchatka, the Kola Peninsula to the Aral Sea, who have had a bellyful of perestroika and glasnost and want freedom.

Even the neoconservatives have abandoned the Right, to join the Establishment. But they are not only wrong in principle, they are wrong in terms of cold pragmatism and national interest.

A poll by The Wall Street Journal poll may show that, by 3-to-1, we Americans prefer Mr. Gorbachev to Lithuania. But does anyone think these numbers will stand up, as broken Lithuamia goes down?

We are a moral people. When this Baltic republic, abandoned by the West, goes under, we will be disgusted with our conduct; and, when the victor of Vilnius arrives in May, a crocodile grim from ear to ear, we will take it out on him, because we were cowardly when we should have been brave. And, if bankrupt and broken, Lithuania is still holding out when Mr. Gorbachev walks down that ramp, to swap smiles and toasts, anyone think we will cheer him?

The West's affairs with Mr. Gorbachev is over, finished.

What kind of Soviet Union do we want? That is the issue. Is is not a free Russian federation, whose republics choose to be there, whose people are rid of a bloodstained party that has oppressed them for 72 years? Mr. Gorbachev has revealed himself to be an enemy of that Russia; why, then, is he our indispensable friend?

Winston Churchill said of the men at Munich that, faced with a choice between dishonor and war, they chose dishonor and got war. All that was asked of us was that we show as much moral courage as tiny Estonia. We failed the test. Whatever the Lithuanians think of us now, they are surely right.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that since it is close to 9:30 a.m., I may speak as if in morning business until about 9:35 a.m.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. GRASSLEY pertaining to the introduction of Senate Joint Resolution 303 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that morning business be extended for no more than 5 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TAXATION

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss a couple of related matters, the first being my support as one of the original cosponsors of a resolution from my distinguished colleague from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY] and his statement. I associate myself with his statement of just a little while ago on National Tax Freedom Day.

This coming Saturday, May 5, gives us all a great deal of relief. We look forward to that day because after that we can start working for ourselves again.

This resolution informs the taxpayer that the money they make after May 5 is theirs. Everything that they make the first 125 days of the year belongs to the Government.

Forty-five years ago, Tax Freedom Day was on April 1. Last year, the date was May 3 and this year the tax man cometh and he can ask for 2 additional days.

My constituents are like every one else in the United States. They believe they are paying too much in taxes and the Government is not acting fiscally responsible with their money.

We could probably take issue with some of that, because we also understand that the demands that the public makes on what they expect Government to do enters into it.

The Nation's nominal income is estimated to grow only 5.7 percent, while the total tax hike is projected to increase 7.2 percent. That is one step forward and two steps back. Stated simply, Mr. President, the average taxpayer is going to pay higher and higher taxes.

It is a shame that the average working men and women of this country will spend 2 hours and 45 minutes out of an 8-hour workday to satisfy Federal, State, and local tax collectors. That is an hour and 20 minutes more than the worker spends on housing and household operations.

I believe we are headed toward the day when the IRS will have one tax form for all taxpayers, consisting of just 2 lines. The first one will say:: "How much did you make last year?" You write that in, and the next line says: "Please send it in." And I think that is going to be a sad day for this country.

Ironically, the Tax Freedom Day occurs the same week that Senator DANFORTH has proposed a constitutional amendment dealing with taxation. I understand that that amendment has been withdrawn, but we have assurances, and I applaud Senator DANFORTH, Senator BOND, and Senator BIDEN, for considering this in the Senate Judiciary Committee because, I for one, am supportive of that legislation.

I think it is going to take a constitutional amendment.

I just do not understand. I am not an attorney, and I do not understand all the jargon dealing with the Jenkins case in Missouri. But you do not need to be a rocket scientist—you just need a little bit of horse sense—to understand that the Federal court should not have the power to order the imposition of taxes. Several Members have come to the floor and stated the views of the Founding Fathers regarding taxation without representation, and I would have to concur with that.

Before coming to the U.S. Senate, I was out in local government as a commissioner. There you know how to deal with budgets and the first-year process of budgeting for local government. After all, that is the only true representative government because it is close to the people. That is kind of where the rubber hits the road and you understand the budgeting process.

You also understand the real value of maintaining reserves. I can remember my first year as a county commissioner. If you did not do anything but protect the integrity of the reserve system, then you have done a good job. In a time when tax bases were going down and we were trying to scramble for money, many departments wanted to go into their reserves in order to shore up that year, thinking they could save money the next and replenish the reserves. It just could not be done. We were very cautious about that in Yellowstone County, MT, so we maintained the integrity of the budget.

I think we could bring the same kind of mentality to the Federal Government and start building on that. I believe that we must draw the line on unelected officials' dictating policy, especially in the collection of taxes. I think the constitutional amendment is in order to ensure this fundamental right is retained by the people through their elected representatives.

Like I say, I can remember when I was an elected commissioner. I do not know how it is everywhere else, but I can tell you, you get a snowstorm in Yellowstone County, MT, they do not call the motor grader to plow the road; they call the county commissioner. That is how close to the people and how responsible you are to those people.

I support the constitutional amendment of the Senator from Missouri and applaud the efforts made by him and the members of the Senate Judiciary Committee and Senator THURMOND, from South Carolina. They have taken an attitude now to look at this situation, and I think it could be that one of the great, great things that is happening in constitutional government in this country is to not allow the courts to start setting tax policy for this Nation. So I hope all of my colleagues will give their full consideration for the far-reaching implications of the Supreme Court's decision. I think it is almost a historical landmark in this country as far as the attitude of government.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EDUCATION ARTICLE BY FRANK NEWMAN

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, last week the New York Times published an article that described four important, low cost ways to improve our schools. The article was written by Frank Newman. Mr. Newman, formerly president of the University of Rhode Island and currently president of the Education Commission of the States, is one of the Nation's leading educators.

His prescriptions are simple and direct: Use tutors and role models for every at-risk child, involve parents, expect more from all students, and pay greater attention to the needs of individual students.

These suggestions are not a complete answer to our educational problems. Nor are they brand new, flashy initiatives. But all of these have been tried and extensively evaluated. The bottom line is simple: These steps make a positive difference. And, importantly, implementing these ideas is a straightforward, low cost proposition. Given the budget pressures facing Federal, State, and local governments, we must make the maximum possible use of ideas like these.

I hope my colleagues will take the time to read this important, informative article. I ask unanimous consent, that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Apr. 15, 1990]

FOUR QUICK FIXES FOR OUR SCHOOLS

(By Frank Newman)

DENVER.—As the U.S. struggles in its role as an international leader, there is widespread consensus that schools and school systems need a top-to-bottom restructuring. To achieve the sort of results that are needed will take at least 10 years of hard, consistent effort.

But there are at least four things communities, schools and parents can do today to improve schools. These are not complete answers nor are they new. They are, however, concrete approaches that have been tired and shown to improve schools and learning.

Use tutors and role models for every at-risk student. The easiest way to improve school performance is to improve the motivation of the students coming in. Rhode Island has introduced a plan to mentor every interested third-grader, starting in 1991, using college and high school students and people from the community. The cost? Minimal.

In San Antonio, middle and high school students—many with academic problems of their own—have mentored elementary students in a six-year program in which both groups' grades show marked improvement. One student mentor attributed his improved performance to his new responsibility: "I have this kid depending on me. I can't let him down."

Involve parents. Probably the most obvious and most powerful strategy to improve student performance is parental involvement—parents working with teachers and helping students take on more difficult learning projects.

A program conducted by the Yale psychiatrist James Comer in seven school districts has demonstrated that through intense parent and community involvement, schools can dramatically improve the learning of poor, urban minority youngsters. In all the districts, parents are involved in developing policy, working in the schools and supporting student academically. Achievement and self-esteem have risen and social development has improved significantly.

In 1981 Missouri created the "Parents As Teachers" project. It works because it involves parents in education from the very beginning and trains them to be their children's first and best teacher. More than anything else, the interest and involvement of parents says to children that things like reading and learning are important.

Expect more from all students. Extensive research has shown that the expectations teachers and parents have for children markedly affect their performance and behavior. The province of Ontario in Canada has long expected students, at all ages, to be critical thinkers and problem solvers—not merely pencil pushers who fill in little dots on multiple choice and standardized tests. Ontario students regularly outperform U.S. students on international assessments of mathematics and science.

Vermont, Kansas and California recently set new expectations and higher goals; New Mexico, Nevada and Maine have just held state conferences to redefine and upgrade their expectations of students and schools. Parents and other interested citizens can and should raise the issue of expectations with their principals, superintendents and boards of education.

Know students as individuals. In most high schools, teachers see as many as 150 students a day in class. It's virtually impossible to be aware of and respond to that many students' individual needs, talents and learning styles.

By changing assignments and the way teachers work with each other, a coalition of schools led by Theodore Sizer of Brown University has demonstrated that this pupil-teacher ratio can be cut to 80 to 1. The result at these schools is improved attendance, better grades and higher graduation rates. Any school can easily reorganize its curriculum and schedules.

Thirteen years ago, Middle College High School, created by La Guardia Community College in Long Island City, N.Y., began accepting only dropouts from surrounding high schools. Yet, almost 85 percent of these students graduate and most on to college. The secret? The school limits enrollment to 500 and teachers and principals know every student.

These are four straightforward approaches that work and that communities can take right now. And the cost is almost nothing. There are, of course, other things that need to be done that are more costly, more involved and will take much longer: for example, schools must be radically changed to include more hands-on learning; teachers and principals need to be retrained. School systems need more flexibility at the school level while providing greater accountability.

But these four steps will help children today—and they will assist us in the urgent task of more fundamental reforms. We need to expand what we know works.

SAMMY L. DAVIS, CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, on Friday, April 27, 1990, the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Mooresville Post 1111 in Mooresville,

IN, honored Sammy L. Davis, a Congressional Medal of Honor recipient. It is wholly appropriate that a tribute be established and this ceremony be held at Mooresville High School, because it is essential that our youth understand the price paid in defense of our Nation. These young people could have no better example of devotion, duty, and patriotism than Sammy L. Davis. I would ask that the Congressional Medal of Honor citation be placed in the RECORD as a permanent testament of this Hoosier's heroism.

There being no objection, the citation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CONGRESS TAKES PLEASURE IN PRESENTING THE MEDAL OF HONOR TO SAMMY L. DAVIS

Rank and organization: Sergeant, U.S. Army, Battery C, 2d Battalion, 4th Artillery, 9th Infantry Divison. Place and date: West of Cai Lay, Republic of Vietnam, 18 November 1967. Entered service at: Indianapolis, Ind. Born: 1 November 1946, Dayton, Ohio, Citation: For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity in action at the risk of his life and beyond the call of duty. Sgt. David (then Pfc.) distinguished himself during the early morning hours while serving as a cannoneer with Battery C. at a remote fire support base. At approximately 0200 hours, the fire support base was under heavy enemy mortar attack. Simultaneously, an estimated reinforced Viet Cong battalion launched a fierce ground assault upon the fire support base. The attacking enemy drove to within 25 meters of the friendly positions. Only a river separated the Viet Cong from the fire support base. Detecting a near-by enemy position. Sgt. Davis seized a machinegun and provided covering fire for his guncrew, as they attempted to bring direct artillery fire on the enemy. Despite his efforts, an enemy recoilless rifle round scored a direct hit upon the artillery piece. The resultant blast hurled the guncrew from their weapon and blew Sgt. Davis into a foxhole. He struggled to his feet and returned to the howitzer, which was burning furiously. Ignoring repeated warnings to seek cover, Sgt. Davis rammed a shell into the gun. Disregarding a withering hail of enemy fire directed against his position, he aimed and fired the howitzer which rolled backward, knocking Sgt. Davis violently to the ground. Undaunted, he returned to the weapon to fire again when an enemy mortar round exploded within 20 meters of his position, injuring him painfully. Nevertheless, Sgt. Davis loaded the artillery piece, aimed and fired. Again he was knocked down by the recoil. In complete disregard for his safety, Sgt. David loaded and fired 3 more shells into the enemy. Disregarding his extensive injuries and his inability to swim, Sgt. Davis picked up an air mattress and struck out across the deep river to rescue 3 wounded comrades on the far side. Upon reaching the 3 wounded men, he stood upright and fired into the dense vegetation to prevent the Viet Cong from advancing. While the most seriously wounded soldier was helped across the river. Sgt. Davis protected the 2 remaining casualties until he could pull them across the river to the fire support base. Though suffering from painful wounds, he refused medical attention, joining another howitzer crew which fired at the large Viet Cong force until it broke contact and fled. Sgt. Davis' extraordinary heroism, at the risk of his life, are in keeping with the highest traditions of the military service and reflect great credit upon himself and the U.S. Army.

COMPLETION OF CLAFLIN COLLEGE'S CAPITAL CAMPAIGN

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on Friday, April 27, 1990, Claflin College, South Carolina's oldest historically black college, celebrated the completion of its first capital campaign. I had the pleasure of serving as honorary national cochairman for the campaign along with Dr. Jonas T. Kennedy of Bennettsville, SC. The campaign was a great success and, in fact, exceeded the college's goal of $3.5 million.

Unfortunately, as a result of the Senate's late session on Friday, I was unable to attend the college's ceremony as I had intended. Instead, Mr. Tom Moss of my staff attended the event and delivered the remarks which I had prepared for the occasion. These remarks reflected the fine accomplishments of the college, and acknowledged the support of the many friends of the college around our great Nation.

Mr. President, I am very proud of the outstanding achievements of the Claflin College administration, faculty, staff, students, and alumnae, and I was truly disappointed that I was unable to attend this historic event. For this reason, I ask unanimous consent that the speech, which I prepared for the ceremony, be placed in the RECORD at the conclusion of these remarks and that my colleagues take a moment to read about this historic fundraising campaign.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR STROM THURMOND AT CLAFLIN COLLEGE, APRIL 27, 1990

I am pleased to announce another first in the 120-year history of South Carolina's oldest historically black college—Claflin College. On December 31, 1989, Claflin College successfully concluded its first capital campaign, exceeding the $3.5 million goal.

A number of grants and gifts made during the campaign will be received over a period of several years. Several proposals submitted during the campaign may still be funded, yet at the end of the capital campaign, Claflin College had in hand more than $3.6 million.

As honorary national cochairman of the capital campaign, along with Dr. Jonas T. Kennedy of Bennettsville, South Carolina, I have learned a great deal about Claflin's history. Methodist missionaries bought the campus from the former Orangeburg female college to establish the first school for black students in our State.

Boston philanthropist Lee Claflin and his son, William, a former governor of Massachusetts, donated the funds to purchase the property and thereby founded Claflin College.

From the beginning, then Claflin University, was open to all people. The 1869 articles of incorporation affirm:

"No instructor in said university shall ever be required by the trustees to have any particular complexion or to possess any particular religious opinions as a test of office, and no student shall be refused admission to or be denied any of the privileges, honors, or degrees of said university on account of race, complexion, or religious opinions * * *" This too was a first for a South Carolina school.

Two of the buildings on this campus, which are on the National Register of Historic Places, were designed by a Claflin alumnus and instructor. William Wilson Cooke of Greenville, designed Lee Library and Tingley Memorial Hall before he left Claflin to become the first black senior architectural designer in the U.S. Supervising Architect's Office in Washington D.C.

We have seen more Claflin "firsts" in our own day. In 1980 the honorable Ernest A. Finney, Claflin class of 1952, became the first black associate justice on the South Carolina Supreme Court.

In 1988, the Reverend Joseph B. Bethea, Claflin class of 1953, became the first black bishop of the South Carolina United Methodist Conference.

This capital campaign was conducted to ensure that students, armed with a quality college education, will achieve other firsts in service to the church, the government, business, and the arts, throughout the United States and South Carolina.

During this campaign, several large national foundations discovered Claflin College. The Lilly Endowment of Indianapolis made the largest single donation in Claflin history with a $300,000 investment in the honors program, plus another $105,000 for the office of institutional development.

The Bush Foundation of St. Paul and the Hewlett Foundation of Menlo Park, California, invested $152,000 to renovate Tingley Hall (administration and classrooms), Bowen Hall (teacher education), and Laymen's Hall (honor's program). The Bush Foundation added nearly $100,000 more for faculty development.

The Arthur Vining Davis Foundations of Jacksonville, Florida put $100,000 worth of new books on the shelves of the H. V. Manning Library.

Mr. Earl Middleton will mention some of the other significant gifts to the campaign, but I would like to pay tribute to Dr. and Mrs. Jonas T. Kennedy.

The Kennedy's gave several hundred thousand dollars to build the magnificent health and physical education center on this campus in 1980. Last year they issued a dollar-for-dollar matching challenge to the college and the United Methodists of S.C. to pay off the last $150,000 owed on that building.

Thanks to their generous gesture, Claflin College was able to burn the mortgage in September and set its sights on a new 200-bed dormitory. By the way, you will be pleased to know that I personally spoke with the Assistant Secretary for Higher Education at the Department of Education this morning, and Claflin's application looks promising.

The many foundations, corporations, and individuals who have contributed to the capital campaign have dramatically strengthened Claflin College and charted the course for a new century of progress. Your efforts will help educate the children of tomorrow, and I commend all who participated in this worthy endeavor.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 1,872d day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

I also ask unanimous consent that an article from today's Washington Post concerning the release of Frank H. Reed be included at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, May 1, 1990]

AMERICAN HOSTAGE REED IS RELEASED BY SHIITES—IRANIANS SAY NEXT STEP IS UP TO UNITED STATES

(By Caryle Murphy)

DAMASCUS, SYRIA, April 30.—Frank H. Reed was released tonight by Shiite Moslem captors after 44 months as a hostage in Lebanon, the second American freed as part of an apparent Syrian-Iranian initiative to improve ties with the United States.

The 57-year-old educator and Massachusetts native was handed over to U.S. Ambassador Edward Djerejian at Syria's Foreign Ministry in the same manner that American educator Robert Polhill was released April 22 after being held 39 months.

The authoritative, English-language Tehran Times, in an editorial in its Tuesday edition, warned that "now the ball is in the court of the U.S. and Western countries."

The daily said that unless there is "an appropriate response" such as pressure on Israel to release its Arab prisoners, "there is no chance for the continuation of Iranian mediation" on the hostage issue.

Reed and Polhill are the first Americans released from captivity since the fall of 1986, when three others were let as part of the clandestine Iran-contra arms-for-hostages deal between Washington and Tehran.

With Reed's release, six Americans and nine other Westerners remain hostages, most of them thought to be held by factions of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah movement.

Reed, looking thin and pale, said after arriving here that he felt "rather odd" without the blindfold he was forced to wear 24 hours a day for much of his 3½ years in captivity.

Reed said he felt basically well, having received "adequate food and fresh fruit" in captivity as well as clean clothes and the opportunity to bathe and shower "fairly regularly."

"Our problem was the passage of endless time. We had no information," he said. "In fact, there were times when I really didn't even know what month it was."

While his captors offered him the possibility of watching non-news programs on television, Reed said he refused "because I didn't want to be entertained when I'd lost my freedom."

Reed, who was director of a private school in Beirut before being kidnapped on Sept. 9, 1986, also told Syrian television in an interview today that during his captivity he was never told why he was seized. "The bottom line was, I was an American," he said. Summing up his captivity, he said: "It was lonely. It was boring."

As he struggled at the press conference to keep from breaking down, Reed, who wore a dark suit and blue tie, said he could not answer some questions out of concern for those still held. He thanked the Syrian government for helping to facilitate his release and expressed hope that other foreign hostages will soon be freed.

"I hope with Godspeed my colleagues that are still hostages somehow will be released," he said.

The group that released him, which called itself the Organization of Islamic Dawn, said Sunday he would be carrying a message to the U.S. government.

Djerejian thanked Syria for helping to gain Reed's release. He said the Syrians had told him they had worked closely with Iran on the matter, and he said the U.S. government viewed this "as an encouraging sign."

[In Massachusetts, Reed's family rejoiced at the news of his release. "He's out! He's out!" said Reed's wife, Fifi, upon learning from State Department officials that the transfer was completed in Damascus. "He is with the Syrians now."

[Mrs. Reed, 39, was making plans to travel to West Germany with their son, Tarek, 9, to reunite with Reed, who accepted a government offer for medical tests at U.S. facilities in Wiesbaden, West Germany. Family members had gathered early today at the apartment of Reed's 91-year-old mother, Leota Sprague, in Malden, a suburb of Boston. She quietly gave thanks to God on learning of her son's release. "I am not a crier," she said. "I'm weeping now, but I did not sit and cry."]

Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk Charaa said, "I hope this second gesture of goodwill will be met with a similar gesture of goodwill during the process of releasing the rest of the hostages."

Polhill's release by another Hezbollah faction, the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine, was characterized as a "goodwill initiative" by his captors, who asked for a similar response from the United States.

Islamic Jihad also demanded the release of about 400 Lebanese Shiite and Palestinian prisoners held by Israel and its ally, the South Lebanon Army. Four low-ranking prisoners were released last week, but the South Lebanon Army said it did this merely to show traditional goodwill for the end of the Moslem holy month of Ramadan.

Washington made no reciprocal goodwill gesture to Iran for Polhill's freedom. President Bush called Syrian President Hafez Assad to thank him for helping gain Polhill's release, but Bush said there would be no improvement in ties with Tehran until all American hostages are free.

Reed, a former New Hampshire school principal and native of Malden, was set free despite widespread anger among Moslems generated by the U.S. House of Representatives' approval April 24 of a resolution affirming support of Jerusalem as the undivided capital of Israel. A senior Hezbollah leader in Lebanon called the House action "monumentally ill-intentioned" as a response to Polhill's release and said he hoped no other hostages would be freed.

The Tehran Times, in an editorial for Tuesday's edition that it made available today, said that "release of two American hostages without any preconditions and solely for humanitarian and Islamic causes was an extreme gesture of goodwill and self-sacrifice by Lebanese Moslem groups," and added, "Naturally, without an appropriate response from the West, there is no chance for the continuation of Iranian mediation.

The editorial said Iran and its Lebanese allies expect Washington to exert pressure on Israel to release a "significant number" of Arab prisoners. It specifically named Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, a Shiite cleric abducted from Lebanon last July by Israeli forces.

Polhill and Reed were released after several weeks of statements from Iranian officials that they intended to resolve the hostage crisis. Iranian President Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani reportedly has decided that freeing the hostages is necessary before he can overcome his economic estrangement from the West, which has been a major obstacle to rebuilding Iran's warravaged economy.

Syria, which has 40,000 troops in Lebanon and its own intelligence connections with some Hezbollah factions, has made no demands of Washington for its cooperation in freeing the Americans. But Syrian officials and Western diplomats here say Assad expects that U.S.-Syrian relations will improve if he helps end the hostage crisis.

Syria, seeking to avert a strain with Iran, a key ally, has emphasized that Tehran played a key role in both Polhill's and Reed's release. Bush's failure to thank Iran following Polhill's release is thought to have created tension between the two countries.

Diplomats here caution, however, that Syrian and Iranian success in freeing the other hostages from their independent-minded proxies in Lebanon is uncertain.

Some of their fundamentalist allies have parochial demands for letting their captives go and, in the view of analysts, some are demands Iran and Syria cannot fulfill.

"I'm not so optimistic about the hostages," one diplomat said.

"Maybe some hostages will be freed but I think it will be hard to have the hostage situation [totally] resolved.

"There will always be groups which have different political aims [from Damascus and Tehran] and the big countries behind these groups may not have 100 percent control over them."

In an indication of such differences, senior Hezbollah leader Hussein Musawi told the Associated Press in Beirut today he hoped that no other American hostages would be released because of the congressional support of the Jerusalem resolution.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time for morning business has expired. Morning business is closed.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, now pending before the Senate, I take it, is the dire emergency supplemental and committee amendments. Is that right?

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the pending business.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4404) making dire emergency supplemental appropriations for disaster assistance, food stamps, unemployment compensation administration, and other urgent needs, and transfers, and reducing funds budgeted for military spending for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is the committee amendment on page 62, line 21, through page 64, line 7.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on page 62, commencing on line 921 is section 320, dealing with the amendment of the Budget Act. I am not trying to preempt our distinguished chairman and ranking member of our Budget Committee. I understand they will join us momentarily. I prefer to wait for their presentation as to why they think it absolutely imperative that we amend the Budget Act on the supplemental.

The President has submitted his budget and this is a Democratic Congress. We, in turn, ought to submit ours.

I hasten to comment accurately that the President has submitted a fraudulent budget and that it is not incumbent upon us to submit a Democratic fraud. On the contrary, it is our job to submit an honest budget. In that light, I have been working many years in the vineyards. We have been discussing all manner of amendments to the Budget Act to repeal Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, to permit 2-year budgeting, and so on. We have debated Senator SANFORD's initiative to compel comprehensive truth in the way we treat our budgetary affairs. We have had the Moynihan initiative that would stop the thievery; namely, the use of the Social Security surpluses to mask the true deficit. And we have talked about my amendment which said simply remove Social Security surpluses from the calculations. Yet during all of these discussions, I never have heard this latest one.

The whole thrust and intent of the Budget Act was that we ought to submit proposals in an orderly fashion on the floor, and that the entire membership of the Senate would be on notice. Proposals would be referred to the Budget Committee. The committee would obviously hold hearings, because we would not amend the Budget Act willy-nilly. And after the hearings, the Budget Committee would report out.

But under no circumstances could you just make a fundamental change by amendment on the floor on any bill. And for the leadership of the Budget Committee here in the U.S. Senate to take this present initiative, I think we ought to hear from them as to what is the dire emergency need for amending the Budget Act in this surreptitious fashion.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARKIN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I have an amendment on Cuba that was reserved in the unanimous-consent request. But I do not intend to offer the amendment on this bill. I want to make a statement as to why.

I believe that the amendment will in fact be stripped from the supplemental in conference.

Second, I think it is important that we move on with this piece of legislation, that we get down to the President the supplemental which will provide the $720 million to Panama and to Nicaragua.

Third, I will have an opportunity at the appropriate moment to offer the amendment, which I intend to do, and offer the amendment at a time at which I believe it will become law.

I have just a couple of comments with respect to what the amendment is.

Most people probably do not realize that there is a significant loophole in the embargo that we have on Cuba today. In fact, in a 5-year period there were some $1.5 billion worth of trade with foreign subsidiaries of United States companies that were engaged in trade with Cuba. The amendment would have taken us back prior to 1975.

There are four provisions that I will mention. It restores the embargo to U.S. subsidiaries abroad. It would place a prohibition on non-U.S.-flag vessels from docking in U.S. ports if they had docked in Cuba to engage in trade within a 6-month period. It provides Presidential authority to reduce economic aid to countries that buy Cuban sugar up to the value of sugar bought in the past year, and provides for up to $50,000 in civil penalties.

I might add that all of these provisions that I have just mentioned either were passed by the Senate last year or were part of the original embargo, that is, language prior to 1975, or were unanimously passed by a House committee during this past year. So I am confident that we will eventually pass this particular legislation. I just feel that trying to push forward with the idea today is the wrong time, and we will have an opportunity to do that later.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the committee amendment on page 62, line 21, through page 64, line 7.

Mr. SASSER. Parliamentary inquiry. That amendment is in the bill; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This was an excepted committee amendment.

Mr. BYRD. The answer is, yes, the amendment is in the bill.

Mr. SASSER. As I understand it, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina is moving to delete that amendment. I will direct my question to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, responding to my distinguished colleague from Tennessee, I have been awaiting, of course, for an explanation of why we ought to amend the Budget Act. This particular section, 306, amends the Budget Act through a legislative mechanism that is in violation of the Budget Act. And for the chairman and the former chairman and our distinguished ranking member to come forward under a dire emergency supplemental, never having discussed this matter whatever in committee, either the Budget or Appropriations Committee, I wanted first to listen to them and see if maybe I could be persuaded that this is indeed a dire emergency and should be in the supplemental. But if they do not persuade me, I will be constrained to make a point of order under section 306 of the Budget Act.

I do not yet make that point of order. I want to listen to the distinguished chairman. We have never had the opportunity, very interestingly, to hear from either Senator about this particular provision.

Mr. SASSER. Well, Mr. President, I see the distinguished ranking member is on his feet. I will defer to him, and perhaps he might wish to make a proper explanation.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I first say to my friend from South Carolina, I truly appreciate his attitude here, and I will do my best, briefly, to explain why I think we ought to do this. But I clearly understand that it is subject to a point of order, one that the distinguished Senator described.

Frankly, if the distinguished Senator wants to make the point of order after I have had a few moments, and perhaps Senator SASSER has a couple minutes, I am not at all sure, if he desires to make it, that we will not let the Chair rule that it is subject to a point of order and take it out.

So I am going to try to explain why I think we ought to do this, as best I can, and what I have done in an effort to get this amendment where it is.

There is not any question, Mr. President, that technically this amends the Budget Act and, therefore, is subject to a point of order, procedural point of order, a serious one, nonetheless, in that it has not been reported out by the appropriate committees.

Having said that, I do want the Senate to know that this was not taken lightly, because the ramifications of not doing something like this should not be taken lightly. So it is my understanding that we have discussed this amendment. I have not done this personally with each and every one, but I understand the chairman of the Banking Committee and the ranking member of the Banking Committee of the U.S. Senate supports this. I understand the chairman of the Budget Committee supports this. I am the ranking member, and I support it. I believe there are a couple of other committees that we have conferred with at the ranking member's level, and we did not get any objection to it. I will not state that until I have their names here with specificity.

Let met try to explain a technical problem with reference to the Resolution Trust Corporation and the appropriation process and budgeting. The first point: This amendment has nothing to do with the money that has been raised that is available to be used by the Resolution Trust Corporation as it pertains to on-budget/off-budget of that money established in last years savings and loan bill.

As you recall, when we created the Resolution Trust Corporation, there was a very big debate, I say to my good friend, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, as to whether all that money we raised that is sitting there to be used, how much should be on budget and how much should be off budget.

The first point I want to make is that this amendment has nothing to do with the established accounting system. That is done, and we are not changing it. Here is the anomaly. Is it urgent? I do not know. If you can fix it before the year is out, if you believe what I am going to tell you is urgent, then this is not necessary on this bill.

But I believe if it is not fixed in some way related to this amendment, then here is what is going to happen. Here, the Resolution Trust Corporation can carry out its mandate under the law, to use a portion of its money for working capital to purchase assets of failed thrifts.

Again, I want to repeat: We are not changing the accounting system established last year. But here it is. The intriguing thing is that we all know they are going to have to spend the working capital to buy assets. That is the very nature of cleaning up the mess.

When they spend that money to buy assets, the expenditure of the money is an expense item under the current technical interpretation of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Example: If in a given year they spend $30 billion to buy assets, they are cleaning up the mess, I say to the chairman. When RTC purchases assets to resolve the S&L mess, the deficit is $30 billion higher.

That means that Gramm-Rudman targets have been adversely affected by $30 billion by the mere expenditure to purchase the assets. Whether we like the way we did it or not is not the issue. You spend that working capital to buy assets, and you buy $30 billion worth. You have then and there during that fiscal year required that we save an additional $30 billion to meet the Gramm-Rudman targets. Is it not interesting that technically you have now spent that money and you have assets?

The year ends. You have been charged for 30 billion dollars' worth of purchased assets. You own them. You sell them in the next fiscal year. Let us assume in the next year you sell $20 billion of them, because you are not going to do this all in any short period of time.

The way the technical interpretation of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is, you get no credit for the $20 billion yet. You have $20 billion in assets. You are going to sell them. You have been charged for the $30 billion to buy them.

Gramm-Rudman requires you to reduce the deficit by an additional $30 billion. The year ends, and what are we subject to? We are subject to manipulating and playing games with the expenditures to buy assets, and then you sell them to get the money back.

Plain and simple, all we are saying is that this is a multiyear transaction of buying and selling, and that you should not, in any given year, charge Gramm-Rudman targets with the expenditure for which you get assets. But rather, you should leave the accounting to a multiyear, so that you get the offsets when you sell the assets that are in your inventory that you spent the money for.

Frankly, I am not here to try to convince anyone that the Resolution Trust Corporation as it was set up could not have been set up better. I am not here defending how we financed it. Those are finished. I am not trying to change any of that.

I am merely suggesting with my friend, the chairman of the Budget Committee, joined by the chairman of the Banking Committee and the ranking member, in consultation with OMB, with the help of CBO, to try to fix what I have just described, which is an anomaly that is brought about by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings accounting.

It has nothing to do with trying to cheat on the deficit. It has nothing to do with words we have used in the past about playing around the edges of the budget process or not charging the budget, when in fact the deficit is accruing; gimmickry. It has nothing to do with that.

If somebody has a better way to fix this very strange anomaly, I am for it. But I can assure Senators, here is what is going to happen. In the year we are in, this big pot of money that is already there, it is reflected in the budget, is going to be spent, about $30 billion of it, to buy assets.

The assets we are going to own, we are going to get charged $30 billion when we spend the money to buy, and that will go into the deficit. We will then have to find $30 billion more to hit the Gramm-Rudman targets, even though the assets that we bought are going to be sold and liquidated in future years.

But if they are done in a different timeframe, you will create these kinds of ups and downs in the budget numbers which really have nothing to do with the real deficit, No. 1.

No. 2, you are going to invite activities on the part of OMB or the Resolution Trust Corporation, or others, to try to play games with the way we buy and sell. Because who wants to be charged a full $30 billion in 1990 and say we have broken the budget by $30 billion, when we spent existing money to buy assets we have to buy with money that is already accounted for in the budget process?

But technically, the expenditure of that money to buy the assets is exactly the same as if you appropriated it. You get the exact same negative on the deficit as if you had appropriated in an appropriation bill enough budget authority to spend $30 billion. In reality, the RTC gets its working capital from the Federal Financing Bank. I just do not believe this is the way we want to do it.

If we would have known about these kinds of ins and outs when we drew up Gramm-Rudman, we would have tried to fix it, I think. I do not think we would have had the expenditure to buy assets, if it happens in a given year, all be charged against the budget, even though in the next year you are going to sell them and get resources and assets back.

I do not think we would have included that in the Gramm-Rudman targets. But it is there, by interpretation of both CBO and OMB, that the event that I have described would be charged as an expenditure, even though in the next year what I have just described would clearly wipe out the expenditure when the assets are sold.

Frankly, I do not want to engage in a lengthy debate. I asked the appropriators, along with the chairman of the Budget Committee, to include this because I thought it might be a helpful tool. If this is going to delay the bill, or if anyone assumes that this is an effort to create any kind of gimmickry, I clearly am not part of that, do not intend it.

And if the point of order is made and we are serious about it, I will acknowledge that it is subject to a point of order and the amendment can be dropped.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, this particular amendment was presented to me as what I would characterize as a good Government amendment, an amendment that was supported by the Congressional Budget Office, by the Office of Management and Budget, by the chairman and ranking member of the Banking Committee, an amendment presented in an effort to prevent an artificial distortion of the budget deficit, that would thereby trigger an excessive sequester under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

Like the distinguished ranking member of the Budget Committee, this is not a matter that I feel strongly enough about that if a point of order is raised, I would move to waive it. But I would say that this provision neither authorizes nor appropriates a single dollar for the savings and loan bailout.

Moreover, without this provision, the 1991 budget deficit and resultant sequester thereto could be artificially increased by tens of billions of dollars.

I see the distinguished chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Committee on the floor, I have been advised by the Appropriations Committee that a sequester as large as $70 billion could result if this provision is not enacted. This would cause cuts as high as 28 percent in defense outlays and cuts of 25 percent in domestic programs.

The distinguished ranking member of the Budget Committee is quite correct. This is an effort, as I understand it, to secure operating capital for the Resolution Trust Corporation, money that will be borrowed in 1 year, but that would come back into the Treasury as early as the next year.

If we do have a sequester as high as $70 billion in 1991, I am advised that the converse of that would be that by 1992 collections resulting from the return of the working capital could reduce the deficit by tens of billions of dollars, thereby potentially bringing the budget artificially into balance by 1992.

This is why the administration maintains that the Resolution Trust Corporation desperately needs working capital to finance the buying, holding and selling of assets of insolvent thrifts. That is why the administration has come to the Budget Committee with this proposition. It appears to make sense to me that we would not want to artificially distort the deficit for Gramm-Rudman-Hollings purposes as we try to work our way through this very difficult problem surrounding the Resolution Trust Corporation.

Mr. President, that is my explanation for this being included in the appropriations bill. It was represented that time was of the essence here; that this was the vehicle to which this amendment should be attached; that it perhaps would not be possible to move budget reform legislation to the floor of the Senate, conference it, and get it passed in final form prior to this borrowing taking place and prior to the artificial distortion of the deficit occurring.

Mr. President, I rest my case. If we have not been sufficiently persuasive with the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, and, frankly, I doubt that we have been. If we have not been sufficiently persuasive, if he wishes to go ahead and raise his point of order, I do not intend to waive it. I might say that we might come to regret that on down toward the end of this year if we do see these enormous sequester numbers coming down on our head. We will try to form the Budget Act in time to avoid that problem, but, as the Chair knows, we are not always successful in these endeavors.

So, having said that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, when you have worked in the vineyards as we have, trying my best to force truth in budgeting, and yet to be accused now of defending truth in budgeting by artificially distorting, then you have got my attention.

I want to artificially distort, the two Senators said, artificially distort.

Mr. President, who is doing the distortion? And what we have here is artfully, not artificially, but very artfully distorted. In one breath they said, we have not authorized the appropriation of a single additional dollar; in the next breath, they said that if I do not go along with the amendment, it is going to cause a horrendous sequester—$70 billion. So one minute this is just a technical amendment involving no additional dollars, and the next minute it is worth 70 million bucks. One minute, it is technical; the next minute, it is real.

Let us talk to the real threat that is going on here and the maneuver that is afoot. Let us first answer as to the alleged technical nature of this amendment, because this is a good opportunity for the Senate to sober up. As our distinguished former President said, if this is not the time to start doing something about this deficit and debt and horrendous interest costs, then when is? If this is not the place, then where is the place?

So this is just not a little quibble about a technicality. This is real, and they know it is real. It is a shenanigan that is part and parcel of the larger budget fraud.

The entire thrust is, Mr. President of the United States, you take care of $58.9 billion of the deficit with your fraudulent OMB plug. Now we need to be certain that the $33 billion for S&L working capital is not used to lighten the task at the summit. And when we get to that summit, before we get through, we will take other revenue-losers off-budget, and then we'll claim we only need to find $10 billion to reach the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target. So we will have a $10 billion summit, and we will take it out of defense and we will congratulate each other on solving the deficit problem with the peace dividend.

Well, you cannot solve the problem just with the peace dividend, you cannot solve it just with taxes, you cannot solve it just with spending cuts, you cannot solve it just with asset sales. You have to solve it with all of the above. That is how badly off we really are—$300 billion in spending more than we have taken in in revenues this year, more last year. You have a true $300 billion deficit this particular year. And therein is our problem.

I want to get to answering this assertion that the issue here is technical. Wrong. It is substantial. Oh, no, this is not a little accounting technicality. I am not really interested in these accounting maneuvers. I am interested in the effects. In 1989, when we first got into this S&L bailout for Resolution Trust Corporation monkeyshine, we said we needed $50 billion. We said, we have already taken the snapshot, this money is for 1989, so put that on budget. But we are going into '90, so we will put the next $30 billion off budget—$20 billion in 1990 and $10 billion in 1991. So when we continue this machination, you have added then to the $20 billion for this year. Then we put $10 billion in '91, and you add the $33 billion for 1991 under this particular provision. That would be $43 billion in 1991.

The CBO says, concerning the Resolution Trust Corporation and what we have done in 1989 and 1990, that we are talking about capital, that we just temporarily put up the money to purchase assets, which we will sell in later years. We will address this argument in a minute.

Meanwhile, concerning the plan to roll back FICA taxes, we are going to keep patting the distinguished senior Senator from New York on the head and telling him what a nice gentleman he is, and what a really important subject it is, and we really appreciate it, and in concept we agree, and what a grand fellow he is. But do not ever think we are going to vote for his plan, because we are hooked on $136 billion in money from the trust funds—Social Security, airport and airways, highway, Federal finance bank, Medicare, you name it.

As we work our way to the summit, the media does not have the foggiest idea what is going on. They accept the fraud hook, line, and sinker, and this is why we are misled. that is why we can meet, as we did last Thanksgiving, and claim we have reduced the deficit to $100 billion, meeting the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target, yet by Christmas time the deficit has already soared to $159 billion.

That is what they are now prepared to do yet again, and they will all say that the current-year deficit is spilt milk, let us move on. They now emphasize the word "Hollings" in Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, like I have a bone to pick, like I revere Gramm-Rudman-Hollings so. Certainly, I think it is a good law if it is adhered to. But there are so many laws that are violated.

Right to the point. We have not adhered to Gramm-Rudman-Hollings in the last 3 years, and that is why I shocked them—I thought I would—by asking for a divorce from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. They did not pay any attention. That is why I proposed a value added tax, because I knew we were going to have to get both spending cuts and real revenues, both, to try to deal with the deficit mess. And we get deeper and deeper and deeper in the hole.

The current issue is not technical, it is real. It is substantial. And they say we are purchasing assets? But these are very dubious assets. They are what the bankers euphemistically call nonperforming assets. In the vernacular, these assets are known as dogs, cats, white elephants, boo boos, turkeys. We will not get our money back in full, I can tell my colleagues that.

Every time we pick up a paper we see the S&L bailout estimate go up and up. They started off at $150 billion, the next estimate was $200 billion, then $300 billion, $360 billion; then $400 billion, then $425 billion.

Too bad we don't treat other asset purchases so charitably and generously. Do they say to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] that we ought to fully fund his student loan program and put it out of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings calculations. Because those certainly are quality assets. The young students who borrow that money, they are going to pay it back. So perhaps we ought to put Pell grants under section 306 of the Budget Act in this wonderful amendment because we want to treat assets differently. And I would consider the students participating in the Pell grants as a real asset compared to the nonperforming assets we are purchasing from the S&Ls.

What about the farmers, the farmers' loans from the Government. What about those? We make loans to the farmers and, after all, they are going to pay back. Should these assets be out of the G-R-H calculation.

But we are all hell-bent to put massive expenditures for the Resolution Trust Corporation off budget. We won't do it for students or farmers, but for the rascals in the S&Ls, yes, we ought to take care of them.

Or consider the REA Program—every dollar paid back. What a tremendous asset and wonderful program. Yet they red line it, get rid of it; call it waste, fraud, and abuse. The Grace Commission dared to classify it in the waste, fraud and abuse category.

But now we claim these are assets. They claim we purchase $30 billion worth of S&L assets and we are going to get $30 billion back, and so this is just a little technicality. Meanwhile, we try to red line rural electrification in America. Or, if you have REA, count it. But when it comes to the S&L crooks, don't count it. Out of sight, out of mind.

Or what about low-income housing? I just read the story in the morning paper about the audit revealing mismanagement in HUD programs for the elderly. The very last line is:

> The auditors told Kemp he needs to develop a program to sell the centers that are coming under HUD's control because of defaults.

I never heard the chairman of Banking, Housing and Urban Development come over and say, let us recognize these HUD properties as assets and not count it. So we have no housing for the homeless; no assets in low-income homes. But for the S&L crooks, the sky is the limit.

Or consider the $9 billion in foreign military sales, which are wonderful assets. We are going to get the money back. And if we throw in a cake and a key and a Bible we might get a hostage back, too. Yes, we are going to put that $9 billion in foreign aid on budget. But no such treatment for the Resolution Trust Corporation and S&L assets. That is what the Senator calls real assets. So we are going to change the rules under a dire emergency supplemental, because it is allegedly an anomaly brought about by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

I guess any truth in budgeting truly is an anomaly, in this body. I remember Mark Twain said: "The truth is such a precious thing, it should be used very sparingly." Yes, an anomaly.

Well, when we get truth in budgeting—and we had it momentarily for 2 years under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings—it worked extremely well. But at Christmastime of 1987, we began discovering these technicalities and anomalies and dodges.

Mr. President, what they really do not want to talk about is the larger budgetness. We are in fiscal gridlock. As I have just emphasized, we have a true deficit of $300 billion. We were supposed to have "Morning in America," but we are having "Morning After in America."

What is really happening, as the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee pointed out in session just a week ago, we have run up a bill of $1.4 trillion under Reaganomics. What a terrible thing it was. I happened to be one of the Senators who did not vote for it in 1981. In fact, that year I voted for the spending cuts and against the tax cuts.

Mr. BRYAN assumed the chair.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I tried to hold the line as best I could in 1981 because we had just finished a major effort to keep President Carter's last deficit below the deficit that he inherited from President Ford. There was a conscience at one time in this body. There was a conscience in this Government.

President Lyndon Baines Johnson—I will never forget it—was very sensitive to the charge of wanting both guns and butter. "Mr. President, how do you expect to pay for Vietnam, the guns, and your Great Society, the butter?" When we came to the end of his term in 1968, we had to levy a surtax. He really would have been run out of town if he said "Read my lips, no taxes, we are not going to pay the bill."

At that time, there was a definite environment of fiscal responsibility, and President Johnson led the way. He said we are going to levy a 10-percent surtax on income. There was not any argument about rich versus poor, regressive versus unregressive, or anything else; we levied the tax. That still was not enough, so we cut $5 billion out of spending. Almost 2 months into the fiscal year, we cut another $5 billion. As a consequence, we gave Richard Milhous Nixon a $3.2 billion surplus in 1969.

Can you imagine that, Mr. President? Can you imagine this Government, like your State and my State operating in a surplus, in the black. The city mayors have to, as well, or they would lose their bond rating; the Governors would lose their bond rating. But up here all you can lose is the next election. So what you do is engage in shenanigans such as section 320 of the dire emergency supplemental appropriations, never discussed in the Budget Committee, never discussed in the Appropriations Committee, never discussed at all if they could have sneaked it by.

So we had a conscience as President Carter left office. As chairman of the Budget Committee, I said, "Mr. President, you are going to leave a deficit bigger than the one you inherited from President Ford." He said "How much?" I said, "You inherited a $66 billion deficit from President Ford, and the Congressional Budget Office has just estimated that your last deficit is going to be nearer $75 billion." Can you imagine that? If we could ever get down to $75 billion during my days in the Senate, I would be happy. I would be happy just to get below $100 billion in real terms.

Carter said, "That cannot happen." I said, "It is going to happen unless you leave me alone to straighten it out. There is OMB; they are the culprit." Even under the Democratic administration, I said, "You tell that crowd at OMB to leave me alone. I will get the votes."

I went right down here—I will never forget it—in the well of the Senate and took some of my more liberal friends aside—the distinguished Senator from Washington, Senator Magnuson; Senator Church of Idaho; Senator Culver of Iowa; Senator Birch Bayh of Indiana; Senator Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin; Senator George McGovern of South Dakota. I said you fellows have to give us the votes because we Democrats are going to end up with the biggest deficit in history—$75 billion. They did not want to vote for cuts. I said you have to uphold the program. And so we cut—the word was reconciliation. The House would not even pronounce it at that particular time, would not go along. Bob Giaimo did go along. In that regard, we cut the deficit back to $58.7 billion, down from $66 billion.

So, I repeat, this $33 billion for the S&Ls is not a little technicality. We rarely have an opportunity to discuss thoroughly the budget, the deficit, the fiscal policy of the U.S. Government on this floor. Instead, it is all machinations. It is all parliamentary maneuver. It is all procedure and no substance.

Three weeks ago, I wrote an article for the Washington Post. I wrote that what we ought to do is forget about Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, and forget about all these machinations, and decide where this country is, where we want it to be in 5 years, where we want it to be in another 10 years, and how do we get there, how do we pay for it? Lay it out to the American people, and quit acting like we have passed some kind of test because we technically complied with Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, because we know it is a charade and we manufacture the charade as we go into the summit, with the American people believing us. We need to stop the politics and the bickering. The President can do better on that score. He will gig you and knife you and undermine you, and then appear with a nice pleasant smile on TV and say, "I hope we can stop the bickering."

So the American people think that if we get the two together, the Congress and the President, that we have accomplished something. They are wrong. Bipartisan summits are the cancer not the cure. We got together at Christmas with President Reagan in 1987. Again the next year and last year. We said a deal was a deal. We in the Budget Committee waited and waited for meetings. But we did not have any meetings, and then on a Friday afternoon, at 7 o'clock we looked up at the TV and, my gracious, there was the chairman of my Budget Committee, the ranking member, the President and everybody around, leaders of Congress, saying a deal was a deal. But other congressional leaders were conspicuous by their absence. They did not want to get caught in the picture because they knew the deal was irresponsible.

Now the White House is trying to roll the Congress again, and we are trying to help them with this particular amendment. Put the S&L money off budget, do not count it. Issue the bonds. If you want to go to Mars, issue go-to-Mars bonds or wherever else you want, just have the off-budget, bond approach. You do not have to put anything on budget that you do not want. It is total fiscal irresponsibility.

I received yesterday from Robert D. Reischauer a letter, it says:

> DEAR SENATOR: This letter responds to the two questions we discussed in our phone conversation earlier today. First, Section 320 of H.R. 4404, the Dire Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for 1990, as reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, would represent an amendment to the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

So it would represent an amendment.

Second—

And I quote from Dr. Reischauer—

> under current law and accounting procedures, the net expenditures of the Resolution Trust Corporation, including those financed by working capital borrowed from a Federal financing bank will be included in CBO's sequestration calculations under the Balanced Budget Act.

Now, there it is. This is not a technicality. It is the law. He is citing current law and accounting procedures. If my distinguished friend from New Mexico wants to change the accounting procedures—and we had many amendments when we adopted Gramm-Rudman-Hollings—he knows how difficult that is. We had to give and take, and take and give, and get a united Congress, a majority of the House, a majority of the Senate and the President together. He knows better than any. He can put in his changed accounting procedures, and then let me have it apply for the farmers and let me have it apply for housing and students and the Lockheed loan and the Chrysler loan and any other advances we make in Federal financing and say that what we are really buying in that student is an asset in the future. We know that that student is going to really bring in four times the income as a college graduate than what he would as a high school graduate, and we will have far more income tax paid by that individual. And so that is an asset and we ought to count it as such and not account for it here when we spend money.

The whole thrust of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings was to cut out all of these accounting arguments and get it all on top of the table so we could look at it all as a whole picture. But section 320 that they have snuck in here is designed to get it off the table. It is to get it off the table and say that it should not be counted.

We have, Mr. President, a desperate situation because if we do not get ahold of ourselves now and own up to the deficit for what it is and stop using the trust funds, then the ox is in the ditch.

I gave notice that I would make a point of order regarding section 320 and they could appeal by moving to waive the Budget Act, and if they succeeded, I certainly would move to take Social Security off the accounting, and, if successful, I would move to roll back the FICA payroll tax.

Now, let me touch Social Security. Last year, and even before then, we realized that we are beginning to spend lots of Social Security moneys on non-Social Security expenses. When we passed the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings in 1985, we only spent $9 billion in Social Security moneys. This year we will spend $66 billion, next year $74 billion. As Senator Dirksen said, we are getting into real money.

No one has worked longer and harder for the integrity of Social Security than our distinguished senior Senator from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN. He has been a member of the Greenspan Commission. He is chairman of the Social Security Subcommittee on Finance. I have followed his leadership and willingly now would follow his leadership on this particular score. He sent a letter with our distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania last year at the beginning of the session advocating that we use Social Security funds for a couple, 3 more years and then stop. I said, if you are really going to do it, you have to do it immediately.

I went whole hog, to exclude all of Social Security from budget calculations. And we negotiated throughout the year. I had over 20-some cosponsors, with the leader among them. We had a press conference with the distinguished majority leader present. We had the Speaker of the House there. We put it forward as congressional policy. That was late last year.

Earlier in the year, I said to my distinguished majority leader, Senator, what I need is a vote when we consider the debt limit extension. I do not want to play games and have any surprises. And when we reached that debt limit bill, it was a temporary debt limit and Senator MITCHELL pleaded, look, if we do that, we invite a whole raft of amendments; this is only temporary.

So I yielded. He said you will get an up-and-down vote on the permanent debt limit before we leave here in a few weeks. When we reached the permanent debt limit and I was ready to bring that matter up, as you remember, it was 1 o'clock in the morning. Senator HEINZ was participating in the main in that exchange. We were told look, let us get this bill, let us go home for Thanksgiving and at the first part of the year we will get you your up-and-down vote on Social Security. Now it is May and the first part of the year has passed.

I have followed Senator MOYNIHAN's leadership throughout, since he submitted this initiative in December of last year, and he has been doing a stalwart job. But I think the leadership may have persuaded him that it is a matter for the Finance Committee.

If we wait for the Finance Committee to consider it, what really happens, as they say in reconciliation, is that if you call a motion, it must be made revenue neutral. And if he is backed into that particular corner, then it is going to be very difficult to find the moneys, the $36.5 billion, to offset the Moynihan initiative.

That is very disturbing to me, and I have talked to the majority leader and told him I was prepared, if they were going ahead here with section 320, to go ahead with the Moynihan amendment. I was told that perhaps Senator MOYNIHAN did not want to do it. I do not want to do it on this. I think amending the Budget Act is totally inappropriate on this particular score, but if the super majority or 60-some votes of the Senate is willing to amend the Budget Act this way, then obviously I am put to the task of looking out for far more important initiatives than the accounting of the resolution trust company.

I think we ought to give some attention to Social Security. I think the Senator from New York is correct, we ought to stop the thievery. In fact, 79 Senators adopted a resolution on February 28 of this year as a sense of the Senate that we use the peace dividend from the Pentagon budget, allocate it to eliminating the deficit and the debt. They used the words in that resolution "stop the thievery." The word "thievery" was used.

So we now know how 79 Senators on both sides of the aisle feel. So I think I have more—79 Senators—for Social Security than they have for the scoundrels in the S&L's. So I am put to the task of bringing Social Security up, which brings me to the point that this particular initiative is being finessed and we are going to say it is too late in the year; it is not budget neutral; it is not this; it is not that.

I have had the balance, you would call it, to propose a tax, if we can pronounce that word in this body, a tax in order to raise revenues. The tax must be substantial, as I pointed out. Over 10 years now, we have been spending $200 billion to $300 billion more than we are taking in. So no one initiative, spending cuts or otherwise, is going to suffice.

So you need some real money and you need a value-added tax, a consumption tax on everybody as compared to a payroll tax on working Americans—far less regressive that is than the payroll Social Security tax on working Americans alone.

In fact, it is a dirty shame to increase payroll taxes this past January, with surplus revenues coming in in excess of $1 billion a week, all of it being spent on foreign aid, spending on welfare, spending on any and every program. By decreasing the budget deficit using surplus Social Security dollars, we are simply increasing the deficit in the trust fund by an equal amount.

In fact, it has been estimated by CBO that if this continues, in addition to the Social Security deficit we have now, we will add another $500 billion or more in the next 5 years, not to the surplus, not to reserves, but to the Social Security deficit, and thereby lower our spending deficit.

That is the game that has been played. We have been trying to put a stop to that and a stop should be put to it. On that particular score, I would be obligated on any financial measure to bring this up. My emphasis is that we are not trying to grandstand or upstage the leadership of the distinguished Senator from New York. But Social Security is not a single-Senator issue. We are all interested in it.

To Senator HEINZ' credit, when we were bringing up Gramm-Rudman-Hollings in 1985, in August of that year, Senator HEINZ of Pennsylvania said it should be put off of the accounting. That was 5 years ago.

So there are Senators on both sides of the aisle interested in Social Security and who have had their various measures, initiatives, motions made. There were freezes voted for in this body in 1985, and I give credit for that. But the truth of the matter is that we get very sticky when it comes to doing something real in this body. We hide behind the parliamentary maneuvers on for instance, the capital gains tax. I happen to have a different view, both politically and substantively with respect to capital gains. But I would long since have gone ahead and allowed Senators to vote for it. They have the votes. I would not vote for it. But they have the votes. Let them show in fact and not in just arguments that it cost revenues to the Treasury. Then we can easily point out that rather than the big-spending Congress, we have the President and the White House trying to take care of their rich friends and in the process caused an increase in the deficit.

So rather than parliamentary maneuver around, I would have given them a vote. We have not had a vote on that. The maneuver now is I guess if they are not going to ask for a waiver of the Budget Act, as we were told up until this morning, that this means they do not want to get into the Social Security issue. They really do not want to get into Social Security. They will do anything in the world to get by.

Question: Do you want to get by? Here is the choice concerning taking RTC out of the calculations to the tune of $33 billion for 1991 in addition to the $10 billion we have already passed, or $33 billion in spending compared to $36.5 billion under Senator MOYNIHAN's initiative. They say, well, we do know a little bit of arithmetic. Rather than losing the $33 billion, we are going to stand up against losing $36.5 billion without a hunch. So, they reckon, we had better not ask for a waiver.

I wish they would ask for a waiver. In a sense, I wish they would get the waiver. Then we could set the real wedge in for truth in budgeting, in fairness in fiscal policy, and in stopping the "thievery," as the distinguished Senator from New York has pointed out.

If they can set that precedent for me, then I want to be able to use their argument about being technical. The Senator from New Mexico comes and says this is just technical. He says it is just a little technicality in assets, and he is the only fellow that has had the audacity to call what those savings and loans have dumped into our laps as "assets." They are turkeys, they are dogs, they are white elephants, they are nonperforming assets as the bankers call them. That is what they are. They are all bailing out as fast as they can, and it is growing bigger than anything we have ever had.

Then the chairman himself of the Budget Committee says we do not want to unofficially distort for Gramm-Rudman-Hollings purposes, inferentially saying that the Senator from South Carolina, the author of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, wants to unofficially distort. His section 320 would avoid the unofficial distortion. Then he goes on in the same breath almost to say it is going to cost $70 billion to sequester. That is not artificial. That is real.

So there we are, Mr. President. I will withhold the point of order or allow others to make it. I see the distinguished senior Senator from New York on the floor. Our distinguished colleague from Florida has been waiting. I will withhold further debate in making that point of order until others have completed their comments.

I yield the floor.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] is recognized.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise briefly to express my great appreciation and admiration for the way in which the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, my friend for many years in the Senate, has set forth the facts concerning the Social Security trust funds and the U.S. budget, and the way in which he is insistent that the Senate address this subject in this Congress. And it will, sir. He knows that has been assured by the majority leader—that there will be a vote on this matter. There may be several.

The majority leader is well aware that a Senator can have a vote about any issue he or she wishes. But the point is he wishes, he desires a vote; the majority leader wants a vote, too.

We have to deal with this elemental issue of honesty. These are trust funds. In 1941, when a very distinguished professor at Columbia University named Luther H. Gulick, an authority on public administration matters, was down here working on the New Deal a bit, he called on President Roosevelt. He said:

> You know, Mr. President, I think that it is time to give up the separate Social Security payroll tax and merge it with the general revenues. It makes more economic sense.

In a memo which we found in the Roosevelt Library in Essex County, NY, Gulick records that the President said that maybe it would make sense as an economic matter, but that the separate tax was not there for economic reasons. It was there so that money would be set aside and no darned politician in the Senate or the House could get their hands on it. He said no darned politician in the Congress can get their hands on that money.

But he never thought that it would be a President who would get his hands on the money that quickly. But, sir, that is why you have a numbered account, your numbered account. That is why you have a trust fund and a special bond that never sells below par, to ensure confidence in a system of which Americans were doubtful and suspect, and to this date the majority of nonretired adults in our country do not think they are going to get their social security.

Well, why pay when they see what is happening with the trust funds? Two things I point out to my friend, and I think him for the urgency with which he presses this issue.

The trust funds are now rising at $1 billion a week. By 1995, it will be $2 billion a week. By 1998, it will be $3 billion a week. By the year 2000, $4 billion a week. If we cannot break a $1 billion a week habit, do not even think about a $4 billion a week habit. We either address this now, or we will draft into a situation of financing the American republic with the pension contributions of the American people, something which would be far from the imagining of Franklin Roosevelt and Robert F. Wagner.

It is elementally a matter of trust. It is also a matter of tax equity.

We amended the Constitution to provide a graduated income tax, and effectively we are repealing that 16th amendment without saying so in this. I make the point that as a pension contribution, the Social Security tax should not be described as regressive. Benefits are related to the earnings you pay taxes on, and the benefit formula is progressive. But when it becomes a mode of financing the American Government, we would have the most regressive tax system of any society on Earth, something we could not have contemplated years ago. But we have drifted into this.

I make a final point because the Senator has been so patient. It needs to be recorded that this is the first time, Mr. President, we have ever had to deal with a subject of this kind. There has never been such a revenue stream in history. The way things now stand, we will bring in $3 trillion by the year 2018, excluding interest. That would purchase the New York Stock Exchange today.

In 1977, when we put the contribution rates in place—Gaylord Nelson, our beloved former colleague did it in the Finance Committee—we created this surplus coming on stream 10, 15 years out. We never debated it. You will not find it in discussion. A few knew it meant going to a partially funded system, but it was not discussed at that time.

In 1983—the Senator was kind enough to refer to the Social Security amendments of that year—we did not change the rate structure. We simply moved a few of the rate increases forward to get a little money a little earlier.

The last increase legislated in 1977 took place on January 1 of this year. But now we clearly have to ask what to do with the surplus. We could save it. GAO urged us to do it. The National Economic Commission warned us, but we are not.

In testimony before the Finance Committee, Mr. President, our good friend, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Dr. Alan Greenspan, was asked by me, "You have urged that we save the surplus?" He said, "Yes."

I said, "Sir, in terms of the economic impact in the outyears, is there any difference between what we are now doing and going back to a pay-as-you-go system?" He said, "None." Because we are not saving it, but he did not elaborate. He said "none."

That is the thought, that something close to a subterfuge is taking place. The Federal Government implicitly undertook to save this money when we put those rates in place. We are not saving it. Bonds are accumulating, but they do not constitute economic savings. They constitute future obligations against an economy that will not be of large consequence.

So, Mr. President, we are going to have to face this in this Senate this year, as the Senator from South Carolina says. If we do not do it today, we will do it shortly, and we may do it more than once. I mean, this is a subject about which the more Senators think, the more they will think alike, and the more they will recognize that we cannot go on with this basic breach of trust; that the Social Security trust funds are held in trust by us. Those moneys are not general revenues; they are trust funds.

It is a concept that is central to American jurisprudence and polity. Any other arrangement in private life where we are using trust funds could be calamitous, and it will be calamitous for this Congress if we will not address the requirements of trust with respect to the maintenance of these trust funds.

Mr. President, I thank my friend once again. There is one thing certain; when FRITZ HOLLINGS thinks something has gone wrong, something is being done that is not right, he will be heard. And over a generation, since the years of John F. Kennedy, I have known him, and he has prevailed, year in and year out.

He has had an extraordinary American career, and it is an honor to serve in the same body with him.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank my distinguished colleague.

Mr. GRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, in the third century B.C. an Athenian general observed that whenever the army of Athens was under the greatest threat, when their lines were about to be overrun, when it appeared as if their prospects for victory were at their bleakest, it was at that point in time that the Athenian general staff back in the capital would decide it was appropriate to reorganize the army.

I believe we have arrived at one of those reorganizational steps, that at a time when the savings and loan crisis is at its bleakest, with every propsect of getting worse, when we are faced with financial challenges on all fronts, we have now decided that it is time to reorganize what is supposed to be the fundamental economic discipline of Federal fiscal policy, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

Mr. President, the reports that we are receiving are coming with increasing frequency and severity as to the status of the savings and loan industry and our attempts at its rescue. To quote just three items, on April 25, the Wall Street Journal carried an item entitled, "RTC Mulls Plan To Sell Property at Big Discounts."

It states:

The Resolution Trust Corporation is considering a plan to reduce prices of real estate the government has repossessed and is having trouble selling.

It goes on to say:

RTC chairman William Seidman compared the proposed policy to a department store markdown, calling it the "Filene's basement plan." Under the plan, if a property doesn't sell after six months, the RTC could reduce the price to 15 percent below the price set by private appraisers. After three more months without a sale, the price could be reduced 5 percent more. After that time, the property would be reappraised.

In today's Washington Post, Mr. President, there were two articles back to back. The first is entitled "Sinking Deeper Into S&L Debt," and it states:

L. William Seidman walked two blocks from his office at the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. to the White House two weeks ago to personally deliver the bad news to President Bush: Cleaning up the nation's insolvent savings and loans is going to cost many billions of dollars more than the administration has planned to spend.

Mr. President, adjacent to that article and reminiscent of the statement of the Athenian General, what was the response of the administration to the bad news delivered on April 5 of the fire sales, the bad news of 2 weeks ago that there would be many billion dollars more required for the savings and loan rescue? The answer is the "President Said To Be Urging FDIC Chief To Step Down."

The White House has been feuding for months with Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. Chaiman L. William Seidman about savings and loans, but now they seem to have reached agreement on at least one issue: Seidman should step down soon.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that those three articles be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THRIFT AGENCY DELAYS VOTE ON PROPERTY SALES

Savings and loan bailout officials delayed action yesterday on a proposal to speed the sale of repossessed real estate after a top bank regulator said he feared the plan could hurt struggling institutions.

The board of the Resolution Trust Corp. was set to vote on a new policy that would have allowed the agency to sell properties as much as 20 percent to 30 percent below their appraised value.

However, it agreed to delay a vote for two weeks after Comptroller of the Currency Robert Clarke said he feared the effect of cut-price sales on financial institutions operating in fragile real estate markets.

"I think we have to be awfully careful," said Clarke, who regulates nationally chartered banks and is a member of the RTC board.

"We have a number of institutions out in the marketplace holding an awful lot of property * * * that we'd like to keep out of the RTC. I'm not sure we know as much about the broader consequences * * * as we should," he said.

The agency's current policy is to sell no property in six distressed states—Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Colorado, New Mexico and Arkansas—for less than 95 percent of its appraised value. It is intended to prevent properties from being "dumped," sending depressed properties even lower.

However, agency officials are having difficulty attracting bids close to the appraised price and want to offer a reduced price without a costly and time-consuming second appraisal.

In addition, qualified appraisers are hard to find in some areas of the country because RTC ethics rules preclude hiring anyone implicated in an S&L failure.

RTC Chairman L. William Seidman, while agreeing to the two-week delay, said speeding real estate sales is essential to holding down the taxpayer cost of the S&L bailout.

"We are sitting here with billions of dollars of property which is costing us huge amounts of money as long as we keep it," Seidman said.

"We've got to convince bidders they can get a bargain from us. * * * Otherwise, we won't have any customers," he said. "* * * The first citizen volunteering to buy out of patriotic motives has yet to come forward."

The policy under consideration would permit the RTC to sell property for 85 percent of appraised value after it had gone unsold for six months, or four months in the case of single-family homes. It would allow an additional 5 percent cut after three more months.

The plan also would allow the agency to sell properties at well-advertised auctions for as little as 70 percent of appraised value or, in the case of properties appraised at less than $100,000, for the highest bid regardless of the appraisal.

The proposal drew praise from analysts who complain real estate sales so far have been too slow. They said that after the changes the agency would still comply with last summer's S&L bailout law, which requires properties in distressed areas be sold at 95 percent of "market value" rather than appraised value.

"Market value is not what an appraisal says it is. It's what a buyer is willing to pay," said Robert Litan of the Brookings Institution. "As long as you have a sufficient number of bidders, that is the market price."

Joseph E. Robert Jr., chairman of J.E. Robert Cos., an Alexandria real estate management firm, said he doubted prices would be further depressed by quicker sales.

"The market has already taken in to consideration the overhang and the fact that the RTC has this property," he said.

RTC MULLS PLAN TO SELL PROPERTY AT BIG DISCOUNTS

(By Paulette Thomas)

WASHINGTON.—The Resolution Trust Corp. is considering a plan to reduce prices of real estate the government has repossessed and is having trouble selling.

In a signal that it's having a tough time selling the property, the thrift bailout agency said in a meeting yesterday that it may slash prices below appraised values more than originally planned. Its real-estate portfolio may eventually total as much as $100 billion.

RTC Chairman William Seidman compared the proposed policy to a department store markdown, calling it the "Filene's basement plan." Under the plan, if a property doesn't sell after six months, the RTC could reduce the price to 15 percent below the price set by private appraisers. After three more months without a sale, the price could be reduced 5 percent more. After that time, the property would be reappraised. For residential property, the first markdown could occur after four months.

"It's costing us every day because we are not making the sales that we could be making," said Mr. Seidman. The RTC has taken control of about $16.4 billion in foreclosed real estate, but it sold only about $2 billion of that since the agency was created in August.

The board delayed for two weeks any decision after Robert Clarke, comptroller of the currency, said he was concerned that the policy could hurt other real-estate prices. The agency will re-examine the proposal during that time.

The RTC said the proposed policy wouldn't violate a provision in the savings-and-loan restructuring law that restricts the RTC from selling real estate below 95 percent of the market value in depressed areas. The agency argues that market value shouldn't be set exclusively by appraisers, but by what price attracts buyers.

The RTC may also consider how to guarantee loans for some private borrowers to finance purchases of RTC real estate, said David Cooke, executive director of the agency.

Separately, the RTC tapped Greenwich Capital Markets Inc., a Greenwich, Conn., investment banking specialist that deals in asset-backed securities and mortgages, to act as its adviser in setting policies for securitizing mortgages and loans held by the RTC thrifts. In addition to the $250,000 policy contract, Greenwich will launch a pilot project to bundle some RTC assets to be sold in blocks. The amount of that contract will depend on the extent of the assets in the securitization program.

SINKING DEEPER AND DEEPER IN S&L DEBT

(By Jerry Knight and John Berry)

L. William Seidman walked two blocks from his office at the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. to the White House two weeks ago to personally deliver the bad news to President Bush: Cleaning up the nation's insolvent savings and loans is going to cost many billions of dollars more than the administration has planned to spend.

Seidman warned that so much cash is needed so quickly to pay off depositors that the cleanup will run out of money by early next year, according to sources familiar with the meeting.

Seidman's assessment was no surprise to Bush, say top aides who have been warning the president that the S&L cleanup costs will send the federal budget deficit soaring. Driven mostly by the extra S&L spending, the fiscal 1990 federal budget deficit will grow past the $180 billion mark, and possibly past $200 billion, the Congressional Budget Office predicts. Only three months ago, the administration pegged this year's deficit at $121 billion.

Seidman gave Bush no estimate of how much more the government will have to spend to protect depositors' savings in the sick thrifts, the sources familiar with their meeting said. Figures bandied about in the past have ranged from $50 billion to $500 billion. Until recent weeks, the most widely accepted figure was $164 billion.

Until the administration gets a better idea of how much cash is needed, no decision can be made on where the money might come from, a Treasury Department official said. While stressing that there is no plan to raise taxes to pay for the thrift cleanup, the official also emphasized that the administration will pay whatever it costs to keep the promise to protect depositors.

The S&L cleanup is turning out to be unexpectedly costly because more thrifts are in trouble than previously thought, and their losses are bigger than projected, Seidman told the president. The FDIC chairman also serves as head of the Resolution Trust Corp. (RTC), the new S&L cleanup agency.

The costs of the thrift cleanup are becoming clearer as the RTC overcomes start-up difficulties and shifts its newly built bureaucratic machinery into high gear. In April, the administration gave the go-ahead to an aggressive effort to shut down insolvent thrifts whose losses are mounting daily by millions of dollars.

The plan calls for "resolving" 141 thrifts by the end of June by spending $51 billion either to pay off their depositors and shut them down or to pay private investors to take them over. That spending is swelling the federal deficit and raising urgent questions both in the administration and Congress about the cleanup's impact on the 1991 budget.

Even though part of the money being spent now will be recovered when assets from failed institutions are sold, the entire amount counts as a budget outlay immediately. If the rules are not changed on how these outlays are shown in the federal budget, the spending could make it impossible to meet the 1991 deficit target of $63 billion set by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law.

An amendment to change the Gramm-Rudman rules and exempt S&L cleanup spending from the deficient calculations was approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee last week with the backing of the Bush administration.

The Treasury is in the process of borrowing more than $40 billion to finance the current stage of the cleanup. Though administration officials insist the growing cost is coming as no surprise to financial markets, some analysts believe the additional borrowing is one factor behind the recent rise in long-term interest rates.

Higher rates are a problem for the entire economy, and they add directly to the cost of the S&L cleanup by increasing operating losses at some thrifts and reducing the value of their assets.

Uncertainty about interest rates is one of many factors that make the ultimate cost of the thrift cleanup impossible to calculate with any precision. The government is borrowing the money, and much of the total cost will consist of the interest payments. The administration is in the midst of figuring new estimates and plans to disclose how much more money will have to be spent in a report to Congress by the middle of this month.

When an S&L fails, the government has to put up enough cash to cover all insured accounts of up to $100,000. Usually, the government gives that money to a financial institution, which takes responsibility for maintaining the accounts or paying off the depositors if they want their money. In rare instances, the depositors are paid off directly by the government.

In exchange for covering the deposits, the government takes over the failed thrift's assets. Most of the assets are either loans worth less than the amount owed on them or real estate that has been repossessed because a borrower could not repay a loan.

The government's loss will be the difference between what it had to pay the depositors and what it gets when it eventually disposes of the loans, the real estate and other assets. Since selling the assets will take years, the government will have to pay billions of dollars to manage and sell the assets and won't know its true losses until the last asset is sold.

The S&L cleanup legislation signed by the president last August provided $50 billion to cover the remaining costs of thrift resolutions that were started before 1989 and $50 billion for the current cleanup.

Rep. Bruce F. Vento (D-Minn.), head of a congressional task force overseeing the RTC, recently calculated that the cleanup will cost at least $40 billion more than was provided by the legislation.

The much larger cost estimate made in April by the General Accounting Office of $325 billion included not only money to cover losses and administrative expenses but also the interest that will have to be paid to borrow that money.

Bert T. Ely, a private thrift consultant in Alexandria, figures the cleanup would cost about $125 billion if the government wrote a check today to cover all the losses of all the S&Ls that have failed or are likely to fail. But an immediate outlay of that magnitude would have to be financed by a tax increase.

The biggest factor in the final cost is how many thrift institutions eventually fail. Currently, there are about 2,900 thrifts. The official estimate last summer was that 560 of them would require government help because they were already insolvent. "Insolvent" means that if you added up all their obligations to depositors and other debts, they would not have enough assets to pay them off.

But everyone involved, including Seidman and other administration officials, the GAO, congressional experts and private analysts, acknowledges that more than those 560 institutions will have to be "resolved," as cleanup jargon puts it.

PRESIDENT SAID TO BE URGING FDIC CHAIRMAN TO STEP DOWN

The White House has been feuding for months with Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. Chairman L. William Seidman about savings and loans, but now they seem to have reached agreement on at least one issue: Seidman should step down soon.

Seidman, who will be 69 next month, has been saying for some time that he does not intend to remain in office until his term expires in 1991.

During their meeting at the White House recently, President Bush reportedly told Seidman this would be as good a time as any for him to leave. Bush wants to name his own FDIC chairman to head the cleanup of the S&L industry, two administration sources familiar with the meeting said. "It's no secret we would not be upset if he leaves. It's not like we're trying to talk him into staying," said one source who was there.

By law, the FDIC chairman is one of the few high-ranking government officials who do not serve at the pleasure of the president and cannot be fired. Neither the White House nor Seidman would comment on a report that the president offered Seidman an ambassadorship as an incentive to give up his post early.

Though the White House would not miss Seidman, Congress would. He is regarded as the administration's most influential voice in Congress, the person in the administration who is most respected by the Democrats who control the House and Senate banking committees.—Jerry Knight.

THE UNCERTAINTIES OF THE SAVINGS AND LOAN BAILOUT

(By Tobey)

Estimates of how much it will cost the Federal Government to protect deposits in the Nation's troubled S&Ls have ranged from $50 billion to $500 billion. Here's how the bailout works and some of the reasons it's so difficult to figure the true cost.

What happens:

An S&L gets in trouble when the money it owes to depositors exceeds the value of what it owns—stocks, bonds, real estate and loans due to be repaid by businesses and individual borrowers.

When the government decides to take over an insolvent thrift, it must come up with enough cash to make up the difference between what the thrift has on hand and what the depositors are due. The government must borrow those funds by issuing government bonds.

After taking over an S&L, the government takes control of the thrift's assets and must either manage them or sell them.

Over time, the government will sell the thrift's assets to recoup the money it paid to depositors.

The uncertainties:

More thrifts are in trouble than was estimated earlier, and it is taking longer than expected for the government to either close them down or sell them in trimmed-down form to new owners. Both trends inflate the final cost of the bailout.

Much of the cost of the bailout is the interest on the bailout bonds it issues for periods ranging up to 40 years. Because interest rates fluctuate, the total cost of the bailout is difficult to project.

The assets at the troubled thrift include loans that are unlikely to be paid in full and real estate that is worth less than the loan originally issued for it. It's difficult to figure how much these assets are really worth today.

Until all the assets are sold, no one will know exactly how much the bailout will cost. But timing the sales is tricky. Selling now could depress the real estate market even further. Selling later adds to short-term cost of maintaining foreclosed property.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, this state of affairs, which I think can fairly be described as the most serious financial debacle in the economic history of the United States of America, brings us to the issue before us today.

I am pleased that the chairman and ranking member of the Budget Committee have indicated that they will not request a waiver, so the Senate will not today have to, as a body, face this question. But I think it is important that there be a clear statement and understanding of what the issue is.

I commend my friend and colleague from South Carolina for his very lucid statement, and I also commend my colleague from New York for his recognition of the relationship of this issue to a tangled web of other fiscal issues, specifically, how are we going to treat the Social Security surplus.

First, what would this amendment do? I might say, Mr. President, that I attempt to answer that question with some uncertainty. This amendment has not been considered by the Senate Banking Committee, which was the originator of the savings and loan rescue plan, FIRREA, to which this amendment is now essentially directed.

I understand, although I do not serve on the Budget Committee, that this amendment was not heard by the Budget Committee to whose underlying statute this amendment is offered. I also understand that this amendment was not heard by the Appropriations Committee, although it is to a supplemental appropriations bill, a dire supplemental appropriations bill, that this item has been posed.

If those assumptions are all correct, we come to this legislation today without the fully developed record, the opportunity for a variety of points of views, both among our colleagues and within the informed public, to comment on the wisdom of this proposal. So, as I attempt to explain what it does, I do so within those limitations.

As I understand the amendment, it is essentially in two parts. Subparagraph (1) relates to a new concept, a concept which is not defined in this statute and, in my opportunities to explore, is not defined elsewhere, and that is the concept of working capital requirements. It would propose, under that statement of working capital requirements, to excluse from the calculation of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings those disbursements made to the Resolution Trust Corporation for the purposes of a working capital. It is estimated that those sums will amount to approximately $31 to $32 billion in fiscal year 1991. That is subparagraph (1).

Subparagraph (m) relates to a section in the 1989 FIRREA act which said that we would take the $50 billion that the administration then thought would be the necessary cost of accomplishing this rescue and divide it into $30 billion that would be placed off budget and $20 billion that would be placed on budget. The $20 billion that were placed on budget were to count against Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. They would, therefore, be part of the calculation of the deficit.

There was a convenient matter of the calendar. The decision to place that $20 billion on budget was made after the date which the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit target was established, the so-called snapshot period. And, therefore, while it counted, it did not require any additional sacrifice, alteration, or effort by the 1989 Congress in order to come into compliance because it essentially counted against previous years. I am going to return to that point shortly.

Only $10 billion of that $20 billion, however, has actually been spent.

So now we have the uncomfortable situation that we have $20 billion that might actually have to count against the deficit, and what subparagraph (m) would do would be to take that $10 billion off the calculation of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

That is my understanding, Mr. President, of what this amendment would do.

Let me place this in the context of a specific example. Let us take a savings and loan institution which had $1 billion of insured deposits and had $500 million of assets, as determined under the 1989 Savings and Loan Act, as the appraised value of the assets of that insolvent savings and loan institution. In calculating how that deficiency would be paid, the first $500 million, that is, the difference between insured deposits and assets, would be paid out of a portion of the $50 billion that we authorized last year. It could come from the $30 billion that was off budget or what is left of the $20 billion that was on budget.

The second $500 million, that is, that portion that is supposedly represented by assets, the Resolution Trust Corporation is authorized to borrow up to 85 percent of those assets, $425 million in this hypothetical, from a working capital fund, which would allow them to essentially carry those assets until such time as they were able to sell them. That is how the process is intended to work.

The effect of this amendment would be to clearly take all of the funds that were directed at the $425 million off Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and would take those that were directed at the $500 million, which is the permanent loss, and the $75 million, which is supposed to be a short-term gap financing for RTC until such time as the full $500 million is recovered to the extent to the $10 million appropriated last year on budget, which is still unspent, that would go off Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

As I stated, Mr. President, it is difficult to give a fully confident explanation of the evidence because of the way this matter has arrived today, but I believe that is a fair description.

The question is why should we not succumb to this tempting proposal, a proposal that would have the effect of relieving us of approximately $40 billion of expenditures which otherwise are going to create a problem in arriving and achieving our Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target for fiscal year 1991? The most fundamental reason is that the effect of that is not to cause this $40 billion plus to vaporize, to go away; it is to allow us to temporarily mask it so our grandchildren can pay for it.

Mr. President, here is a chart of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets. That is the black, more or less declining horizontal line beginning 1986, projected to fiscal year 1991. That is the target line that we are supposed to be operating on as we drive down the Federal budget deficit.

The rather embarrassing pink bars in back of that black horizontal line are what has been actually happening to the Federal debt. In 1986 we had a Federal debt of a modest $2.12 trillion, when we started this process of fiscal discipline that was going to get us to a balance Federal budget.

Projected to fiscal year 1991, our Federal budget deficit, the actual amount of the national debt, is $3.403 trillion. So in a 5-year period in which we are supposed to be exercising Federal fiscal discipline we have increased the national debt by approximately 50 percent, or $1.3 trillion dollars. That is what we have accomplished.

Who is going to be paying that national debt? Mr. President, my daughter and her husband gave us some very good news recently and that is that in November of this year, we will become grandparents. We are very pleased and excited about this event. It is going to be not so exciting nor pleasant for me to tell my first grandchild that even within the brief period that I have served in the United States Senate, that I have added over $1 trillion to what my grandchild, over his or her lifetime, is going to have to carry in terms of the Nation's debt.

What we are proposing to do here today, should we continue with this practice, will be to add another $10 billion to those pink charts of the national debt.

Second, Mr. President, we should not do this because it will undermine what is left of the discipline of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Let me go back in time just a few months, when we were debating the savings and loan rescue bill. One of the most controversial items was whether we should put the $50 billion—and that is what the administration, less than a year ago, estimated would be the total cost of paying off this debacle—whether we should put that $50 billion on budget or off budget. On budget or off budget; we debated that for days. The House had a similar debate.

The fundamental position of the administration was that we should put this off budget because, if we were to put it on budget, we would have to seek a waiver from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and that would have very negative consequences. It was pointed out it was going to cost us a lot of money to put this off budget, because we would have to be financing the cost of the savings and loan rescue plan at a higher interest rate than we could if the Treasury borrowed directly with on-budget financing. That cost was estimated last year to be between $5 and $10 billion over the life of this plan.

The administration said that is all right. We will pay the $5 to $10 billion because it is so important that we not put at risk the discipline of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Who were the people that were saying that? Well, on August 3, 1989, the person saying that was the President of the United States of America. Here is what the President of the United States of America said on August 3, 1989:

> While Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is not perfect, it represents the only available institutional requirement for fiscal discipline by the Congress and the executive branch. Exempting $44 billion in spending from this budget process, as would occur under the conference provisions—

Which had provided for the $50 billion to be in an on-budget status—> would be unprecedented. It would also seriously undermine the future value of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings as a source of budgetary restraint—risking adverse effects on both markets and the economy.

That is what the President of the United States said, Mr. President. He was not the only one, however, who called the alarm. On July 11, 1989, in an editorial piece under his name in the Wall Street Journal, Secretary of the Treasury, Brady said:

> It is essential the public understands that the underlying principle at stake here is not how best to finance the S&L plan, but whether to allow the S&L legislation to become the vehicle by which the fiscal discipline placed on government spending by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is destroyed.

Mr. President, that was what was being said just a matter of a few months ago, that we were about to destroy the fiscal discipline and the integrity of the U.S. Government if we were to allow an exemption to Gramm-Rudman-Hollings because we would save the $5 to $10 billion as a result of on-budget financing.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, the letter from the President, a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Greenspan; a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury; the Wall Street Journal op-ed piece from the Secretary of the Treasury; a letter from the ranking minority member of the Budget Committee; floor statements by the Senator from Texas; a letter from various Senators, further editorials from the Wall Street Journal and Washington Post, all on the issue of the impact of taking last year's attempt at savings and loan rescue and placing it on budget and therefore requiring exactly what is being suggested today, and that is an exemption from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

I ask unanimous consent all of those be printed.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 3, 1989.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
Republican Leader,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR BOB: I have repeatedly urged the Congress to act on legislation to resolve the crisis in the savings and loan industry. Indeed, the insolvent thrift institutions have had estimated losses of more than $6 billion since I proposed legislation on February 22 and asked Congress to take action within 45 days.

The conference report currently before the Congress incorporates key reforms that I requested. It also adds other important provisions developed by Congress through long and serious effort. Unfortunately, the conference agreement includes a financing plan that amends the requirements of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget process, as well as other provisions that will reduce asset recoveries for the taxpayers and add inappropriate subsidies. If the conference report is presented to me in its current form, I will veto the bill.

While Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is not perfect, it represents the only available institutional requirement for fiscal discipline by the Congress and the executive branch. Exempting $44 billion in spending from this budget process, as would occur under the conference provisions, would be unprecedented. It would also seriously undermine the future value of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings as a source of budgetary restraint—risking adverse effects on both markets and the economy.

I am prepared to work with Congress to bridge the divergent positions on the financing issue in a manner that preserves the budgetary discipline of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. It is essential to resolve this dispute this week before Congress adjourns for the August recess. Working together in a bipartisan spirit, we can achieve a fully responsible result for the American public.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC.

Hon. DONALD W. RIEGLE, Jr.,
Chairman, Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Subtitle B of Title V (p. 356) of the April 10, 1989, Committee Print of S. 413, the Financial Institutions Reform Recovery, and Enforcement Act (FIRREA) of 1989, authorizes the Resolution Funding corporation (REFCORP) to borrow $50 billion from the Treasury. It does so rather than raise the funds through the private capital markets. This change to the Administration's REFCORP funding proposal raises questions about the scoring of budget deficit effects.

As we understand the Senate bill, although the $50 billion in REFCORP bonds must be purchased by Treasury when issued, there is no limitation on when the REFCORP bonds would be issued. Consequently, as under the Administration's plan, REFCORP would be expected to raise $10 billion in FY 1989, $25 billion in FY 1990, and $15 billion in FY 1991 to fund expected RTC expenditures in those years. Unlike the Administration's plan, however, the Senate proposal would be deemed to incur additional outlays in 1989, 1990 and 1991 as Treasury purchases the REFCORP bonds, assuming that REFCORP were still considered to be a government sponsored enterprise and not an on-budget agency. Accordingly, this would increase the Federal deficit by roughly $10 billion in 1989, $25 billion in 1990 and $15 billion in 1991.

If the Senate proposal intended, instead, to direct REFCORP to borrow from Treasury in advance of its need to supply funding to the RTC, that restraint, in conjunction with the requirement that REFCORP borrow only from the Treasury, could undermine the view that REFCORP is, in fact, a government sponsored enterprise. If REFCORP is viewed as a government agency and not a government sponsored enterprise, then the borrowings from Treasury and the funding provided to the RTC are simply intragovernmental transfers. The effect of this, relative to the Administration's plan, would be to increase outlays by roughly $9 billion in 1989, $22 billion in 1990 and $12 billion in 1991.

Clearly, the budget outlays increases that would have to be recorded in either case would seriously jeopardize the bipartisan efforts to date to reach a budget agreement between the Administration and the Congress. They would likely make such agreement impossible unless the GRH targets were changed. But, as I have testified before your committee, I think changing the targets would be irresponsible for a host of reasons. Adverse economic and financial market effects would surely flow from either a failure to achieve a credible budget agreement that meets the GRH deficit reduction targets or a decision to change the targets. The cost of the adverse economic effects would far outweigh any small savings projected from using Treasury financing under the Senate bill.

Again, I respectfully urge you to reconsider the net costs of your approach in relation to the Administration's approach. On balance, it seems clear to me that the economic and market risks associated with the secondary effects of your approach argue strongly against it—and argue in favor of the alternative we have recommended.

I look forward to discussing this with you further as you move toward mark-up.

With best regards,

RICHARD G. DARMAN,
Director.

BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM,
Washington, DC, July 12, 1989.

Hon. PHIL GRAMM,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: I am responding to your request of July 11 for my views on the method of financing of the savings and loan rescue plan—in particular, whether I favor the House or Senate budgetary treatment provision. Let me begin by saying that I have and continue to support the position of the Administration on this matter as expressed recently by Secretary Brady. In other words, I favor the Senate version.

In my judgment, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings (G-R-H) budget process has been very useful in exerting discipline on the federal budget and, more fundamentally, on the federal government's claim on economic resources. We should not at this time threaten that process by setting a precedent that might be used in the future to undermine necessary fiscal discipline. The outlays authorized in this bill are not a new commitment. Rather, they reflect the realization of liabilities that have been accumulating over several years in association with the federal government's pledge to preserve the balances of insured depositors. Thus, I do not believe that financing these outlays through private industry borrowing violates the spirit of G-R-H.

The financing proposed by the Administration, and largely incorporated in the Senate bill, poses less risk than on-budget financing, with an exemption from G-R-H, that budgetary discipline will be weakened in the future. The establishment of a separate corporate funding entity using private sector funds would be difficult to replicate should there be an attempt to circumvent G-R-H budgetary discipline in the future. In contrast, treating such financing on-budget with an exemption could easily be followed again and would be more of a temptation for those who wish to avoid the hard budgetary choices that must be made.

Little more than $1 billion invested in U.S. Treasuries will finance through interest and amortization the expected nominally higher interest cost on REFCORP bonds relative to on-budget Treasury obligations. This is a small "insurance" premium for better budget discipline, which would avoid ultimately greater costs.

I should also mention that the Administration's off-budget financing plan ensures that the S&L industry will shoulder a continuing share of the cost of clean-up. It has been rather widely agreed that the industry should appropriately be expected to contribute to the resolution of the problem, with the size of the industry's contribution limited by what it can reasonably afford. The details of the Administration's plan reflect this understanding and ensure that industry resources remain committed to this purpose. Thus, there is no danger that this portion of the resolution costs will in the end be shifted to the taxpayer as there is under the House approach in which the industry's contribution could be given back to the industry.

I hope that you find these comments to be helpful as you attempt to complete work on this most important piece of legislation.

Sincerely,

ALAN GREENSPAN.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, July 12, 1989.

Hon. BOB GRAHAM,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR GRAHAM: Enclosed is a copy of the Op-Ed piece I wrote on the S&L financing which is currently being considered in conference. In spite of some imperfections in Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, it is enormously important to financial markets and finance ministers that we do not punch holes in this element of U.S. fiscal discipline. We are especially sensitive to this on the eve of the summit with other heads of state and finance ministers.

The Op-Ed piece expresses my concern that the final legislation contain the financing plan proposed by the Administration and adopted by the Senate. In my opinion, actions which indicate that we are willing to eviscerate the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings process would be negatively reflected in the world financial markets.

Very truly yours,

NICHOLAS F. BRADY.

NO TIME TO WAIVE GRAMM-RUDMAN

(By Nicholas F. Brady)

After years of bad investments, poor business practices, fraud and abuse, the savings and loan industry is about to enter a new era of responsible regulation and management, sound business practices and fiscal solvency. This era will dawn thanks to the combined efforts of the Bush administration and Congress to resolve the thrift industry's financial problems and create a system that will ensure that the excesses that have plagued the industry in the 1980s will not occur again. In all likelihood, by the middle of this month Congress will send the president a bill that could be signed into law.

Congress has ignored the pressures of the S&L lobby and refused to lower the capital standards that will place the industry on a sound financial footing. With considerable amounts of their own capital at risk, S&L operators will think twice before taking excessive risks or engaging in unsound activities.

Congress has acted wisely in this respect. But in its eagerness to resolve the S&L crisis expeditiously and economically, Congress is in danger of adopting a financial plan that will set a precedent that, in the long run, will place a far greater burden on the taxpayers than will the S&L solution. The financing plan contained in the House version of the bill has two serious flaws. First, it shifts to the government ultimate responsibility to contribute funds that should come from the thrift industry. Second, and most important, it exempts this substantial increase in government spending from the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit-reduction limits.

PRESERVE G-R-H DISCIPLINE

In contrast, President Bush's plan fulfills the government's obligation to stand behind deposit insurance while requiring that the S&L industry shoulder directly as much of the financial burden of the solution as it is able to bear. The Bush plan also fulfills an equally important obligation to taxpayers—the preservation of the G-R-H fiscal discipline essential to the reduction of the deficit.

It is essential the public understands that the underlying principle at stake here is not how best to finance the S&L plan, but whether to allow the S&L legislation to become the vehicle by which the fiscal discipline placed on government spending by G-R-H is destroyed.

A simple comparsion of the two plans reveals the essence of the issue. Both provide $50 billion to handle institutions that are, or will become, insolvent during the period beginning Jan. 1989, and extending three years after enactment of the legislation. There is broad agreement that the $50 billion will be sufficient. The Bush administration, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Reserve and both the House and Senate have subscribed to the $50 billion figure. It is over the way to raise the $50 billion that the administration and some members of Congress differ.

The Bush plan creates the Resolution Funding Corporation (REFCO), a private corporation capitalized by the contribution of S&L industry funds. To finance the resolutions of insolvent thrifts REFCO will issue bonds. These REFCO bonds will be backed by U.S. Treasury bonds purchased solely with the S&L industry's contribution to REFCO. When the Treasury bonds reach maturity, their value will be $50 billion, the amount required to pay off the principal of the REFCO bonds. Thus, by the purchase of Treasury bonds with industry funds, the S&L's contributions are locked into REFCO; they cannot escape and the industry's participation in the financial plan is assured. In addition, industry funds will be used to pay a portion of the interest on the REFCO bonds, with the government picking up the shortfall.

Under the House plan the $50 billion is raised by the Treasury issing bonds directly, while the industry contribution is in effect held in escrow by the government. Consequently, industry funds are not locked in and there is no guarantee that the S&L industry will not succeed in reclaiming these funds for its own uses in future years.

Given the effectiveness of the S&L lobby, this is a real possibility. The Farm Credit System was similarly financed in 1987, but in 1988 the member banks persuaded Congress to allow them to reclaim a substantial portion of their funds. Nevertheless, proponents of the House approach claim it is preferable because direct-issue Treasury bonds will carry an interest rate as much as one-quarter of one percentage point lower than the REFCO bonds. It is true that REFCO bonds will pay a slightly higher interest rate to compensate investors for the fact that they are not issued by the Treasury directly.

For this reason, proponents of the House plan claim it will save the taxpayers at least $125 million a year over 30 years. But they are extremely short-sighted to base their calculations on these savings alone. The financing of the S&L plan cannot be addressed in a vacuum; it must be placed in the larger context of the federal budget and deficit, and it is in this respect that the House plan's creators have failed to think through the consequences of their proposal. By issuing Treasury bonds for direct government financing, the House plan places the full burden of the $50 billion on the federal budget, thereby exceeding the G-R-H deficit-reduction targets. To make their plan work they will seek a waiver from the G-R-H provisions. Proponents claim this is a "more honest" approach than the Bush plan.

This is sophistry. The Bush plan counts every dollar of taxpayer funds spent on its S&L plan in the budget deficit and against the G-R-H targets. The point that opponents of the Bush plan attempt to obfuscate is that the $50 billion raised under the Bush plan comes from private, not taxpayer, funds. The Bush plan keeps these private funds out of the budget deficit—as it should. In contrast, the House plan puts these funds in the budget deficit and then uses a waiver to slide this inflated deficit out from under G-R-H.

The House plan sets a precedent of seeking an exemption from G-R-H for every new spending program that finds its way through Congress. A waiver granted to the S&L financing plan will be no less than a license for the inevitable demands for exemptions for costly new legislation on everything from nuclear-waste cleanup to the war on drugs. And if these waivers are granted, they will make a mockery of the G-R-H process and our commitment to deficit reduction. By contrast, the Bush financing plan will make it far more difficult for a program to claim the S&L solutions as a precedent for federal funding. To qualify under the standards the administration sets, a project would have to provide substantial, up-front private funds. And thus, the discipline of G-R-H will remain in place.

It is fashionable in some quarters to belittle G-R-H, to call it a sham, to disregard its impact on the U.S. economy. But those who take this attitude do so at our peril. While it is not perfect, G-R-H is our chosen, established mechanism for reducing the deficit. The financial markets and our international trading partners take our adherence to G-R-H very seriously. Lest anyone doubt that the world pays attention to G-R-H, simply consider what occurred in the fall of 1987. On Sept. 23, Congress passed a bill that eased the G-R-H targets and moved them off into the future. In less than three weeks long-term interest rates rose by more than half a percentage point.

Because the G-R-H waiver is masked as part of the S&L legislation, it may take a little time for the financial markets to fully realize its magnitude and effect. But once they do, interest rates are likely to respond. When this happens, the central rationale for the House financing plan—the $125 million a year in savings—disappears. An increase of only one one-hundredth of a percentage point on all short- and intermediate-term federal debt (a total of $1.5 trillion) would increase Treasury borrowing by $150 million a year. If interest rates increase by one-tenth of a percentage point Treasury borrowing costs would rise by 1.5 billion per year. This dwarfs the $125 million extra annual cost associated with the Bush plan. These simple calculations show the House financing plan for what it is—penny wise and pound foolish.

INTERNATIONAL CREDIBILITY

It would be equally foolish to ignore the damage we will do to our international credibility if we begin exempting new spending programs from G-R-H. Our trading partners are very concerned about our deficit. Their main barometer of our fiscal resolve is G-R-H. If we begin to waive G-R-H and waiver on our commitment to fiscal responsibility we lose both credibility and our ability to press for improvements in trade imbalances with these countries.

As the House financing plan demonstrates, it would be easy to speak the language of fiscal restraint while laying the groundwork for vast amounts of new spending. But it is not words that will convince the financial markets, our trading partners and the American public that we are serious about reducing federal spending. Ultimately, our deeds, not the rhetoric in which we cloak them, will speak for us. If we are to maintain a strong domestic economy and remain a credible world leader, the message our actions must carry is that we are committed to reining in government spending and living by the standards of fiscal discipline we have set for ourselves. By adopting the Bush financing plan in conference Congress can send forth this message.

COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, DC, August 2, 1989.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: When the Senate takes up the conference report on the savings and loan bill, you will be asked to decide whether to waive the Budget Act to allow "on budget" financing. I urge you to vote no on this question.

The plan adopted by the conferees follows closely the House-passed bill, which CBO scored as increasing the deficit by $9.8 billion in FY 1989. Given current levels of spending and revenue for FY 1989, this would give rise to a point of order under Section 311(a) of the Budget Act.

In simple terms, Section 311(a) provides that it is not in order to consider legislation which would cause us to breech budget resolution totals or the deficit target established by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. To waive this point of order, 60 Senators must vote in the affirmative.

Let me be clear on one point. The financing plan included in the Senate bill—the so-called "off budget" plan—would be subject to the same point of order. It too would cause CBO to score an increase in the FY 1989 deficit.

All waivers, however, are not created equal. Any plan will run afoul of 1989 budget totals—and thereby violate the Budget Act—because we are considering this legislation late in the fiscal year. The difference between the two plans comes next year and the years after.

We did not make room for direct Treasury financing of S&L obligations in the budget for FY 1990. Instead, on May 18, by a vote of 63-37, we adopted a budget which assumed the Administration's financing plan. We took this course because the alternative—waiving the $100 billion deficit target for FY 1990—was considered unacceptable.

Dodging the $100 billion target is no more acceptable today than it was in May.

This is not a technical dispute. We are not being asked to decide an accounting question—"on" versus "off budget." Both plans put the spending financed with borrowed funds off budget. The crucial difference lies in how they go about it.

The Senate bill would establish a funding corporation sufficiently private in nature to exclude it from the budget. This is not unprecedented. We have created other corporations which combine private capital with government sponsorship and do not consider these part of the federal budget.

The House bill, on the other hand, simply says that outlays "shall not be counted" when determining whether we have met the deficit target. It provides an irresistibly easy model for other programs looking to get out from under budget constraints. It is certainly an easier route to follow than establishing a government-sponsored enterprise.

Proponents of the House financing plan say that the exclusion from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit targets is justified by potential interest savings. In testimony yesterday before the Senate Banking Committee, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board addressed this issue.

While noting the uncertainty in any estimate—due to the uncertainties about interest rates—Chairman Greenspan suggested that $1 billion to $1.5 billion invested today for 30 years would offset any interest savings resulting from direct Treasury funding. He called this a "very small insurance policy" for the improved fiscal discipline that would result from adhering to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets.

There is far more at stake here than the cost of the S&L rescue. This is not a decision about including the cost of the S&L insurance activities in the budget. It is a decision about maintaining the discipline of fixed deficit targets and living with Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

When the Senate considers the conference report, I urge you to vote no on the motion to waive the Budget Act.

Sincerely,

PETE V. DOMENICI.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 7, 1989.

Hon. DONALD RIEGLE, Jr.,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.
Hon. HENRY B. GONZALEZ,
Chairman, House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We, the undersigned, are opposed to the proposal contained in the House version of the FSLIC recapitalization bill which would raise the deficit by $50 billion but exclude this enormous increase from calculation of the deficit under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

The practice of raising the deficit but exempting the increase from the only mechanism in place to control the deficit is fraudulent. It undermines every effort Congress has made to move toward a balanced budget and to sustain the economic expansion and it shatters our fragile credibility with the public.

If the Senate/House conference committee agrees to this proposal, we will vote to sustain a budget point of order against the conference report.

Since the timely enactment of the FSLIC recapitalization bill is vital to the taxpayer and to the health of the economy, we urge you to adopt the Senate funding mechanism.

Yours respectively,

Jake Garn, Phil Gramm, Arlen Specter, Pete V. Domenici, Bob Dole, Al Simpson, Connie Mack, Orrin G. Hatch, Conrad Burns, Christopher Bond, Richard G. Lugar, Bill Armstrong, Malcolm Wallop, Bob Kasten, Steven Symms, Chuck Grassley, John Heinz, Warren B. Rudman, Rudy Boschwitz.

WE NEED YOU, TOTO

Dorothy, the Tin Man, the Scarecrow and the Cowardly Lion were overawed by the Wizard of Oz until Toto, Dorothy's little dog, ran around behind the curtain and began tugging at Frank Morgan's pants cuff. "Pay no attention to the man behind the curtain," roared the wizard, but Dorothy was too smart for that. She followed Toto and discovered that the wizard and the man behind the curtain were one and the same. Old Frank was just a genial fraud.

Where are you now that we need you, Toto?

Yesterday morning the Senate Banking Committee started marking up a 600-page thrift bailout bill that has had only one controversial issue; which party's Wizard of Oz accounting is the more ingenious? Both have been trying to figure out a way to hide the first tranche of the thrift bailout, a rather conspicuous $50 billion.

The Treasury wants to take it off-budget, raising the money with bonds issued by a new corporation that up on the Wizard's big screen would be made to look like something other than a federal agency. The Democrats want to put the $50 billion in the current fiscal year's budget, turn it over to that same corporation and lend back what it doesn't need immediately to the Treasury. This at least would be on-budget, but it too has a little Wizard of Oz twist. Putting it into the Fiscal 1989 budget is not to exercise rectitude but to escape the discipline of Gramm-Rudman.

The secret of that is to stay out of the "snapshot." Under Gramm-Rudman, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) is required in August to offer its best guess of what the federal budget deficit will be for the coming fiscal year. If the estimate is on target, Gramm-Rudman doesn't kick in and force a closing of the gap. The Democrats want to get that $50 billion into this year's budget so it won't show up in the OMB snapshot. Since some could be loaned back to the Treasury, at least in theory, no one is hurt. You got that, Toto?

By a very narrow margin, the Democrats may have the better of it. At least they aren't trying to pretend that government borrowing isn't really government borrowing. Because the Treasury will do the borrowing, borrowing costs will be lower, everyone seems to agree. Finally, the government might be able to spend the money earlier, shutting down more of those Ponzi schemes the thrifts are running at substantial costs to the taxpayers while Congress is making up its mind.

Treasury, however, argues that appearances are what count. If the Democrats seem to be dodging Gramm-Rudman, the bond markets will react badly and the cost of all Treasury borrowing will rise. If the $50 billion is off-budget, so this argument goes, the markets won't notice. Are you still with us, Toto, or have you by now gone yelping off into the night?

Now, we all have some reason to worry about the ease with which the Democrats have found a way to beat Gramm-Rudman. Our the other hand, the Treasury's off-budget ploy doesn't thrill us, either. An off-budget federal obligation, however well-disguised, still is a federal obligation. That $50 billion is only a first tranche. The way things are going—especially with the House trying to dilute the Treasury's limited efforts to discipline the thrifts—we could eventually be talking about real money.

Congress caused the mess and neither Congress nor the Treasury knows how to skin out of it gracefully, or for that matter, even how to eliminate the reasons for it. Wizard of Oz accounting no doubt looked like the only course. The problem is that there still are a few Totos around.

BYE-BYE, GRAMM-RUDMAN

With the passage of the S&L cleanup legislation, the Gramm-Rudman budget rules are now bent and mangled beyond repair. They were in bad shape even before this bill came along, but it forced a major collision in what had become a budgetary demolition derby. This time—for once—it was really no one's fault. The S&L bill was essential. It had to be passed. It responded to a great financial emergency of a sort that no set of rules could have foreseen. This episode demonstrates that automatic legal procedures alone aren't going to get the deficit down.

The Bush administration said it was necessary to raise $50 billion for the cleanup, but wanted to circumvent Gramm-Rudman's limits on the deficit by keeping it off the budget. Most of the congressional Democrats sought to keep it on the budget so that the money could be borrowed through the Treasury, saving several billion dollars. But that would have required legislating an explicit exception to Gramm-Rudman, and the administration fought it furiously on grounds that it would set a precedent for all sorts of further exceptions. The quarrel nearly defeated the bill last week—and that was peculiar, for the two sides had efficiently settled much deeper questions of public policy in the bill. This final explosion over financing was a reflection of politicians' anxieties as they see the country's financial realities drifting farther and farther from the Gramm-Rudman targets.

In the final compromise that saved the bill, the two sides agreed to evade Gramm-Rudman both ways. Instead of $50 billion, only $30 billion will be raised off-budget. The budget is becoming less accurate as a measure of the government's actual commitments.

The remaining $20 billion will find its way around Gramm-Rudman by another route. One of Gramm-Rudman's eccentricities is that it applies only to future years, never the present one. This $20 billion will be spent on the budget, but on this year's budget. At the mad tea-party, the rule was jam tomorrow and jam yesterday, but never jam today. American fiscal policy under Gramm-Rudman has worked out a much more pleasant regimen; it's always jam today, and austerity is never to begin until the next fiscal year. This provision helps explain how the deficit, in violation of Gramm-Rudman's strict injunction, has actually risen over the past two years.

It would be better for the country if the Gramm-Rudman targets were met. But that won't happen without courage and fiscal good sense, now both in short supply.

[From the Washington Post, July 31, 1989]

FINISHING UP THE S&L BILL

As it emerged from the conference, the S&L reform bill is a remarkable achievement. The administration sent a strong bill up to Congress, and Congress has strengthened it.

One quarrel continues to boil: Should the cost of the cleanup be on the budget or off? That is a minor issue compared to the enormous improvements in financial safety standards that this bill offers, but it could still derail it. The conference put the costs on the budget, requiring an exemption from the Gramm-Rudman limits on the deficit. The White House wants the financing to be off-budget. Any exemption from Gramm-Rudman, it argues, would set a dangerous precedent. That logic would be more compelling if the administration and Congress were not collaborating this summer in the debasement of the Gramm-Rudman process with billions of dollars' worth of gimmicks and evasions to make an oversized deficit look smaller.

Our budget is better because it saves money. But on or off, the financing mechanism is not worth delaying final enactment of the bill. The losses of the bankrupt S&Ls are rising at a rate of more than $10 million a day, and it's money that is going to have to come from the taxpayer.

This legislation would impose radical changes on the savings and loan industry. The S&L scandal—the greatest financial scandal in American history—is the result of political meddling in the regulatory system on behalf of certain well-connected operators who got into trouble. As the rules went slack, the thieves and confidence artists arrived like flies at a picnic. The new rigor being demonstrated by the administration and the House Banking Committee is, in some part, penance for the sins of their predecessors. But they have chosen the right remedies.

They would insulate future S&L regulators from manipulation by politicians and lobbyists. They would—in a crucial improvement—require S&L owners to put substantial amounts of their own money into their businesses as an incentive to prudence. They would forbid S&Ls to put depositors' money into highly risky investments—junk bonds, for example. They offer credible assurance to the public that the S&Ls will never again be subject to the kind of mismanagement and deliberate looting that the past decade has seen.

In writing this bill, both the administration and Congress have closely followed banking standards. While a good many banks have failed in recent years, the banking system as a whole remains sound, and its deposit insurance fund is solvent—unlike the S&Ls'. As the new requirements take hold, S&Ls will evolve rapidly into institutions that look and behave very much like banks. The sooner President Bush signs this legislation into law, the better for the stability of the economy and the protection of the public.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 10, 1989]

THE S&L BUDGET DODGE

On budget or off budget? To close down the bankrupt S&Ls, the government is going to have to raise at least $50 billion to pour into deposit insurance over the next several years. But that threatens to push the budget deficit up far beyond the limits that the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act sets. To get around that embarrassment, the Treasury proposes a familiar expedient: don't count the $50 billion in the budget. Raise it and disburse it, but keep it off budget.

That's a bad idea. It would get the government back into the slippery and silly business of hiding certain costs off the budget simply because it is not convenient to count them. Worse, it drives up the cost to the taxpayer. When the government borrows off-budget, through agencies that do not have quite the government's full credit behind them, the bonds carry higher interest rates than those the Treasury sells. Over the 30-year life of the bonds, that difference in interest costs could come to billions of dollars.

Sen. Donald W. Riegle, the chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, thinks that's too much to pay for the luxury of circumventing the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act and the deficit limits. He would keep the whole operation on the budget. What about the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act? One of its many peculiarities is that it always applies to the years ahead, never to the current year. Sen. Riegle would float the bonds this year, then pass the money over to the S&L cleanup squad as needed.

The Treasury objects vigorously to that suggestion. It sees an endless line of big expenditures, all pleading for exemption from the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act, and it wants to avoid creating a precedent that they can follow. That's a serious consideration. But the answer isn't the kind of tricky, into-one-pocket, out-of-the-other-pocket scheme that it has devised. Sen. Riegle's plan is better—and a lot cheaper.

There's a still better possibility. Congress could deal with the S&L fiasco directly and honestly. It could raise the money routinely through the Treasury, at the low Treasury borrowing rate, and amend the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act to say that it doesn't apply to that $50 billion. It's not a precedent that other spending could follow, because in the case of the S&Ls the money has already been spent. That makes it fundamentally different from the money for environmental protection, education or defense. The S&L money's gone. There's nothing left but a big hole in the government's S&L deposit insurance fund. The government is already legally obligated to fill that hole. Why not just acknowledge that truth, and finance the consequences in the cheapest and simplest way available—on the budget?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I was stating what I felt were the reasons not to adopt this proposal to take this component of the financing of the savings and loan plan out of the discipline of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

A third reason is that, if we are going to have a waiver from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, it should be only in exceptional circumstances. The purpose of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings was to impose a difficult discipline. It was not intended to be a belt made of weakened elastic, that we would stretch whenever we wanted. It was intended to require some degree of sacrifice, some requirements of choice, some degree of vision as we attempted to bring our Federal fiscal accounts into order.

On Saturday nights at 11:30 there is a popular television program called "Saturday Night Live." One of the regular features of that is an actor who plays the role of the church lady and pontificates on various issues of ethics and morals. The church lady has a phrase, when someone has committed an act or uttered a statement that she feels to be less than of the standards required, she says, "Isn't that convenient." That is, convenient to take a position, to espouse a position that is ethically flawed. I believe we have adopted a convenient policy.

Why do we put the Social Security surplus into the calculation of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings? Why do we put in the Highway Trust Fund? Why do we put in the Aviation Trust Fund? Those would all seem to be examples of funds that were intended to serve a specific purpose that were financed from a designated revenue source, that were intended to give to each American the feeling that every time I filled up my car with gas, some of that money I was paying was going to make my roads better; that when I paid that surcharge on my airline ticket it would make the air travel safer; and when I paid that biweekly amount of payroll tax, it would help secure my status as an American retiree, deserving of respect and dignity.

But we have put all of those into the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings calculations because it is convenient to do so since they all mask the size of the deficit. Since those are all winners, they make the deficit look smaller. But when it is inconvenient because we are talking about a fund that is demanding resources, that would have the effect of increasing the size of the deficit, we want to take it off.

Mr. President, fourth, and finally, as to why we should not do this. I hate to say to my colleagues, but what we are talking about with the savings and loan and what the Senator from South Carolina alluded to earlier, the report in today's paper on the Department of Housing and Urban Development, these are not the only crises waiting for America. These are not the only land mines waiting for us to discover.

I have the privilege of chairing a select subcommittee of the Senate Banking Committee with responsibility of reviewing the Department of Housing and Urban Development. We have described ourselves as the group trying to find out what made the cheese of the Department of Housing and Urban Development so attractive to the rats that have rushed to chew away at it.

One of the issues that we looked at was a not very well known enactment of the 1982 Congress called Federal Managers Financial Integrity Act, [FMFIA]. This act was passed in 1982 as a means of giving some discipline through disclosure of how well Federal agencies were operating. They submit, on an annual basis, a report as to their status of internal controls.

On April 18, our select subcommittee received a report from Mr. Donald Chapin, the Assistant Comptroller General of the U.S. General Accounting Office, on how well this act has worked, specifically as it related to the Department of Housing and Urban Development, but more generally it applied to the executive branch of the Federal Government.

Here is what Mr. Chapin said:

Despite the performance of thousands of internal control evaluations and agency plans to correct the material internal control weaknesses identified, we see little overall improvement in the condition of controls throughout the Government since the passage of the Financial Integrity Act. Frequently, agency actions to improve controls have taken the form of systems improvement plans that were not well executed. In addition, many systems have continued to deteriorate or failed to keep pace with new demands and additional control weaknesses have appeared.

That, Mr. President, was an introduction of a report which went on to identify 14 areas that are being monitored by the General Accounting Office as being those potential land mines. I will not read all of the areas, although I ask unanimous consent to have the full report of Mr. Chapin printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FOWLER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, let me read the first of the areas the General Accounting Office identified. The first happens to be the issue we are now discussing, the Resolution Trust Corporation.

The management and disposal of approximately $200 to $300 billion of thrift assets will pose unprecedented management problems. A sale of this magnitude is unparalleled in history. The desire and potential to acquire these assets at bargain basement prices will make this area highly susceptible to fraud, waste, and abuse.

Second is the Internal Revenue Service receivables.

The existence of accounts receivable in excess of $60 billion which have grown about 300 percent since 1980 places this issue in the significant loss area.

Next, management of seized and forfeited assets. "This issue has been characterized by mismanagement which has been the subject of considerable press attention."

Medicare questionable claims: "The tens of billions of program dollars coupled with considerable potential for fraud and abuse indicates a high potential for financial savings from our efforts. Identified payments of $527 million by Medicare in 1985 that should have been paid by private insurance carriers illustrate the magnitude" of this issue.

Mr. President, the GAO goes on to identify these other land mines that we have out here. So let us not believe that by taking this off Gramm-Rudman-Hollings that we can breathe a sigh of relief and say this is that exceptional case; we have seen it; we identified it; we understand the limits of our exposure, and we are going to wash ourselves of it by vaporizing, by ignoring it.

Mr. President, we face as a Nation tremendous opportunities as we look toward the decade of the 1990's. The world is adopting our values. Thomas Jefferson is standing at the side of world leaders from Prague to Managua. The question is, will we, as a Nation, will we as the Nation that started this tremendous revolution, be there as a strong political and economic ally and participant of this new wave of freedom?

We, Mr. President, have the obligation to carry on a 200-year tradition of national pride and international leadership. This is an arcane area, the issue of how we should deal with this particular financial debacle in which forum that great battle for freedom be fought, but if we do not start soon, if we do not commence the process of applying real discipline to our activities and having the honesty and candor to face the consequences of our current actions, if we do not desist from a policy that says let your grandchildren pay, Mr. President, we are walking on a path that will put tears in the eyes of Thomas Jefferson as he stands beside those great world leaders who are the current evangelists of his words.

Our immediate past President used to ask a series of questions which I think are appropriate for this debate today and with which I conclude: If this is not the place to make the stand for fiscal discipline, where will that place be? And if now is not the day on which to take our stand, when will the time be? Thank you, Mr. President.

FEDERAL INTERNAL CONTROL AND FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS: MAJOR REFORM EFFORTS ARE NEEDED

(Statement of Donald H. Chapin, Assistant Comptroller General, Accounting and Financial Management)

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee:

I am pleased to be here today to provide GAO's perspective on the condition of internal control and financial management systems in the federal government and actions needed to help eliminate the system weaknesses that exist throughout the government.

In 1982, the Congress passed the Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act to strengthen internal control and accounting systems throughout the federal government and reduce fraud, waste, abuse, and mismanagement. At that time, audits of government programs and media reports had identified a large number of serious problems in areas that cut across all agencies and programs. Unfortunately, as discussed in our November 1989 report, Financial Integrity Act: Inadequate Controls Result in Ineffective Federal Programs and Billions in Losses (GAO/AFMD-90-10), 7 years after passage of the act, little has changed. Agency reviews, audits, and newspaper and other media reports continue to identify serious problems that paint the picture of a government unable to manage its programs, protect its assets, or provide taxpayers with the effective and economical services they expect and deserve.

WEAK INTERNAL CONTROL SYSTEMS EXIST THROUGHOUT THE GOVERNMENT

Despite the performance of thousands of internal control evaluations and agency plans to correct the material internal control weaknesses identified, we see little overall improvement in the condition of controls throughout the government since passage of the Financial Integrity Act. Frequently, agency actions to improve controls have taken the form of systems improvement plans that were not well executed. In addition, many systems have continued to deteriorate or failed to keep pace with new demands and additional control weaknesses have appeared. Some long-standing weaknesses, hidden before, have been identified. The Financial Integrity Act has opened our eyes to the problems of government, and we now have identified most of the weaknesses that put the government at high risk to fraud, abuse, waste, and mismanagement. But, we have not done enough to correct the problems that are being reported.

Mr. Chairman, to illustrate a point, I would like to read an excerpt from an article entitled, "The Stench at FHA."

"FHA has approved marginal or hopeless projects, let promoters milk them . . . and then abandon them. And while FHA has sat dumbly by, other promoters have gone from city to city defaulting on project after project. It has permitted still others to default on loans but continue to collect rents for up to five years. . . . In the last 30 months, the GAO has submitted to Congress 11 reports indicating FHA for derelictions ranging from misrepresentations of its income to slovenly neglect of its own foreclosed property."

That quotation is similar to many others written over the past year. However, there is one significant difference. It comes from an April 1966 Reader's Digest article.

In this respect, we have learned little in 24 years. Also, we have accomplished little in the 7 years since the passage of the Financial Integrity Act. We must have a new and larger commitment from all levels of agency management, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), and the Congress to take appropriate and timely actions to make a real change that will materially reduce the number of serious internal control weaknesses. Commitment means people, new ways of doing things over a sustained period of time, and money. The debacle at the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) has had one positive result; it has refocused needed governmentwide attention on the importance of strengthening the Financial Integrity Act. If we are ever to achieve the act's objectives, however, emphasis must shift from merely reporting under the act to correcting long-standing weaknesses. The situation at HUD has also opened many eyes to the need for additional legislative and administrative actions to strengthen financial management in the federal government. I will mention these actions later in my testimony.

FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS ARE WEAK AND IMPROVEMENT ARE SLOW, COSTLY AND OFTEN INEFFECTIVE

As with internal controls, we see very little progress in the government's efforts to strengthen its financial management systems. Many of the existing systems are weak, outdated, and inefficient, and cannot routinely produce relevant, timely, and comprehensive information. We have old systems that provide a flood of information but little reliable operational and cost data that are essential to monitor program performance, control costs, anticipate overruns, and provide a basis for program and budget planning.

The ever increasing size and complexity of federal programs and overall pressures to reduce the budget deficit will require the availability of adequate and accurate financial information for the successful performance of program management and oversight functions. As the President's fiscal year 1989 Management Report stated, "Once a leader in the early days of automation, the Government's financial systems and operations have eroded to the point that they do not meet generally accepted standards."

The federal government has planned corrective actions and provided billions of dollars for financial management improvement programs. However, these efforts to improve existing systems and develop and acquire new automated systems have and continue to experience massive problems. For example, design flaws, misjudgments in requirements, and poor program management caused the Navy to halt installation of a new automated management information system after spending an estimated $230 million over 9 years to develop the system. Unfortunately, the Navy's experience is not uncommon.

If the government is to strengthen its programs and run them in an efficient and economical manner, it must better manage its system improvement projects.

A STRONG WORK FORCE IS NEEDED TO MEET CURRENT AND FUTURE CHALLENGES

A key factor in the development, implementation, and maintenance of sound federal programs is a strong federal work force. Today, the federal government needs to attract, motivate, and retain committed people at all levels who can develop new ideas and innovative approaches and see them through to effective implementation. Concern is mounting over the impact that both the federal pay structure and the turnover in leadership positions are having on the government's ability to acquire and retain top quality people to carry out its programs.

As experienced employees retire or leave government service and additional staffing needs develop, it is becoming increasingly difficult to hire individuals with the experience and qualifications needed to accomplish the government's mission. The government's general pay scale causes additional problems because it severely restricts the financial incentive programs an agency can implement to reward and retain quality personnel. In addition, we do not really have a governmentwide training program for accountants and financial management systems personnel. We have to make an investment in people, both in terms of compensation and training. Otherwise, I am afraid problems will continue to manifest themselves.

ACTIONS NEEDED TO STRENGTHEN CONTROLS AND ACCOUNTING SYSTEMS

The legislative and executive branches of government must form a partnership, with the common goal of achieving effective and economical federal programs through, in part, the development of sound internal control and financial management systems. We cannot merely think in terms of tomorrow, waiting for something to happen. The poor state of the government's systems demands that we think and act today.

THE PROBLEMS SHOULD NOT BE LEFT TO THE AUDITOR

Agency top management must be committed to strong internal control and financial management systems and should be directly involved in ensuring that needed corrective actions are identified and implemented in a timely manner. With this commitment must also come increased coordination between agency management officials and those in audit organizations such as the Offices of Inspectors General and GAO. For example, last year GAO and the Inspector General and top agency officials at the Department of Transportation worked closely together to identify agency programs needing management attention and actions that could help resolve the existing problems. We need more of this interaction where management and auditors come to grips with major agency problems.

THE ADMINISTRATION MUST STRENGTHEN THE FINANCIAL INTEGRITY ACT PROGRAM

The government's basic internal control and financial management deficiencies are known and, in many instances, have been known for many years, but they remain uncorrected. The identification of deficiencies is an important step, but it is not enough. Agencies must also act effectively to correct them. In the past, no effective mechanism existed to ensure that agencies took the needed corrective actions. In our November 1989 report, we urged, among others, the following actions.

Agencies should be required to link the Financial Integrity Act internal control review and reporting process with the budget process. Agencies should identify corrective actions that require incremental funding and major reprogramming in the current budget. This should assist senior decisionmakers in assessing the magnitude of corrective action funding requirements.

Agencies should establish senior-level policy committees or take other steps to provide top management oversight of the internal control and reporting process. This should result in better anticipation and consideration of critical issues and more actions to resolve them.

Agencies should be encouraged to include a narrative statement in their Financial Integrity Act reports explaining the processes used to ensure that completed corrective actions were effective. The validation process should provide assurance that material weaknesses no longer exist and allow managers to focus their attention and resources on other issues.

The administration is clearly aware that serious problems exist in the federal government. As the Director of the Office of Management and Budget stated in testimony before the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs,

"The recently exposed HUD problems are not unique, not merely peculiar to a particular agency under what some describe as absentee management. . . . There are analogous problems in other agencies."

For its part, OMB has established a management integrity program that is intended to minimize and prevent fraud and waste in federal programs and operations. It has assigned responsibility to deputy secretaries and deputy administrators in each agency to ensure the success of this program. Through the reviews and evaluations conducted under this effort, OMB has identified over 100 high risk areas in the 16 largest and many smaller federal agencies and plans oversight and agency reporting on the actions to correct the problems.

INCREASED CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT AND FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT LEGISLATION NEEDED

The Congress can also significantly contribute to effective corrective action through its oversight role. We have recommended that its authorizing, appropriations, and oversight committees hold annual hearings using Financial Integrity Act reports, plans for corrective actions, and audited agency financial statements as the focal point in the process of reviewing agency actions to correct internal control and accounting system weaknesses. Such hearings could help assure the Congress that corrective measures are implemented and that they are effective.

In this connection, the widespread occurrences and significant dollar and programmatic impact of federal accounting system weaknesses, in particular, highlight the need for a new approach to federal financial management. We have long been a strong advocate of legislation which would establish a chief financial officer (CFO) structure for the federal government, with counterpart chief financial officers in each of the major agencies; and require the annual preparation and audit of agency financial statements and a report to the President and the Congress.

The legislatively established chief financial officer would develop a long-range governmentwide financial management plan. The supporting structure would provide direction and continuity when leadership changes occur in the administration as well as at the agency level. Establishing a CFO structure would help give financial management the prominence, permanence, and continuity necessary to achieve reform and enable the government to better manage its financial affairs, save billions of dollars, and help restore the accountability of managers and the credibility of government.

The report to the President and the Congress would include (1) the annual financial statements, (2) the audit report on those financial statements, (3) a summary of the Financial Integrity Act reports on the systems of internal control, (4) a report summarizing the corrective actions taken with respect to the material weaknesses identified in the Financial Integrity Act reports, and (5) other information the agency head considers appropriate to fully inform the President and the Congress concerning the agency's financial management.

The preparation of audited financial statements is an essential part of the solution. It is critical because it demonstrates whether an organization's financial systems and personnel are capable of accumulating, analyzing, summarizing, and reporting on its financial condition and operating results. Preparing the statements also forces agencies to acknowledge their systems problems.

For years, the federal government has insisted that publicly traded companies, as well as state and local governments, submit their financial statements to the scrutiny of an independent audit. The federal government should do no less. Annual audits promote discipline in the recording and processing of data simply because people know that the information is subject to review. Further, the improved quality of the financial information that can be obtained when accurate financial statements can be prepared enables agencies to place greater reliance upon this information in making decisions and monitoring program implementation. Hopefully, until legislation is passed, the administration will continue to work with GAO to expand the number of agencies and departments preparing financial statements and submitting them for audit.

Our recent financial audit of the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) is a good example of why accurate and audited financial statements are needed. FHA's financial reports, which identified losses of $858 million for fiscal year 1988, were misleading in the extreme. In fact, after making the required adjustments identified during the audit, the losses were $4.2 billion, or almost five times greater than management's best information showed them to be.

Our initial financial audits throughout government have revealed problems with financial systems. Frequently they are so severe that information needed to manage agency operations, as well as to prepare agency financial statements, is unreliable and seriously deficient. Generally, these problems are more serious and deep-seated than either we or agency managers realized before our audits. Subsequent audits of the same agencies show improvements, but also show that systems cannot be fixed overnight. Many times, it takes 2 or 3 years to cure some of these situations. Subsequent audits serve to monitor the improvement effort, give guidance, and keep the pressure on. We believe that the preparation of audited financial statements has had a major positive impact on the improvement of systems and, correspondingly, the reduction in the government's exposure to fraud, waste, and abuse.

HUD'S LEADERSHIP HAS RECOGNIZED THE DEPARTMENT'S FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT NEEDS

For its part, HUD's leadership has recognized the need for central direction and qualified leadership in the financial management of its programs. HUD reported in its 1989 Financial Integrity Act report and the Secretary has publicly announced, that in order to bring financial integrity to agency programs, it had established a special task force on Program Financial Management headed by an under secretary to strengthen financial management in 26 program activities; would soon appoint a chief financial officer for the Department who will be responsible for overhauling accounting and financial reporting policies, ensuring the development and operation of a sound financial management system, and establishing comptrollers for the major HUD activities such as FHA; and would prepare annual financial statements and have them audited by an independent accounting firm beginning with fiscal year 1990.

Further, in December 1989, the Congress passed legislation that, among other things, created a CFO position in HUD, created comptrollers in each of HUD's major programs, and required annual audited financial statements for each of HUD's major programs. Legislation such as this should have a very positive effect on HUD and is needed across the government.

IMPROVEMENTS WILL REQUIRE MONETARY INVESTMENT

One final point needs to be stressed: It will take substantial monetary investment across the government to acquire the financial management systems that are needed and to attract and train personnel to operate them. In an era of severe budget restraint, there may be a temptation to take shortcuts to hold down these costs. I strongly believe, however, that new systems will ultimately pay for themselves. The payoff will come not only in terms of better efficiency and prevention of loss from fraud, waste, abuse, and mismanagement, but also in greater confidence in the integrity of government operations and program decisions.

GAO'S "HIGH RISK" PROGRAM

Are there other HUDs today? Unfortunately, I believe there are. To what extent, we are not quite sure, but there are unexploded bombs out there that need to be defused before they explode. We have developed a "high risk" program that focuses on what we think are some of the more vulnerable areas in the government today. Under the program, we have identified 14 major areas (see attachment I) we believe to be highly vulnerable; are focusing, in conjunction with efforts of agency management and the inspectors general, on the root causes of serious long-standing weaknesses to develop approaches to solve the problems associated with these programs; are monitoring agency corrective actions and reporting the results to the appropriate congressional committees; and will recommend legislative actions necessary to ensure that corrective measures are implemented.

Mr. Chairman, the active involvement of the Congress and hearings such as this one, directed at improving HUD's programs, are critical to correcting the internal control and financial management systems problems facing the government today. Without strong congressional oversight, the changes needed to safeguard federal assets and ensure the efficient and economical operation of federal programs will not occur. I look forward to working with you and other interested members of the Congress to achieve the internal control and financial management improvement initiatives discussed today.

This concludes my formal statement. I will be happy to answer any questions you or members of the Subcommittee may have.

ATTACHMENT I

INITIAL AREAS SELECTED FOR SPECIAL GAO AUDIT OR REVIEW

Resolution Trust Corporation—The management and disposal of approximately $200 to $300 billion of thrift assets will pose unprecedented management problems. A sale of this magnitude is unparalleled in history. The desire and potential to acquire these assets at bargain basement prices will make this area highly susceptible to fraud, waste, and abuse.

Internal Revenue Service Receivables—The existence of accounts receivable in excess of $60 billion which have grown about 300 percent since 1980 places this issue in the significant potential loss area. In light of the budget deficit, the potential for reducing or stabilizing the growth rate offers major dollar savings and thus warrants special review and oversight.

Management of Seized and Forfeited Assets—This issue has been characterized by mismanagement which has been the subject of considerable press attention. Responsibility for managing the program rests with the Customs Service and the U.S. Marshall's Service. Both organizations have been identified by their respective departments as having significant internal control weaknesses. Improvements in the management and control of this program will lend support to the war on drugs and increase public and congressional confidence in the program.

Medicare Questionable Claims—The tens of billions of program dollars coupled with considerable potential for fraud and abuse indicates a high potential for financial savings from our efforts. Identified payments of $527 million by Medicare in 1985 that should have been paid by private insurance carriers illustrate the magnitude of potential savings.

ERISA/PBGC.—The Department of Labor's and IRS's enforcement of ERISA has a significant impact on ensuring that employee benefit plans are free of mismanagement, fraud and abuse that place plan assets at risk and threaten the benefits of plan participants. The adequacy of their oversight has a direct financial effect on the potential for loss by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, an organization that has been unauditable in the past. The underfunding of approximately 20 percent of the plans insured by PBGC is estimated at $20 to $30 billion but is concentrated in particular industries where downturns could have a significant impact. The potential $2.2 billion impact on the fund of one company's bankruptcy, LTV Corporation, demonstrates the vulnerability of this program, and thus the taxpayers' exposure to potential losses.

Guaranteed Student Loans—The large number of banks, state agencies, and schools participating in guaranteed student loan programs coupled with poor systems to protect the federal government's financial interest creates the potential for significant abuses and losses. A high proportion of defaults and publicized abuse by certain proprietary schools suggest the need for improved program controls.

State Department Real Property Management Overseas—There is adequate evidence of waste, mismanagement, and poor controls in this area as illustrated by the construction fiasco at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow. There is high potential for financial savings through better property management. Corrective action over the years has been minimal, but recently State has begun to show an interest in addressing these issues.

DOD Inventory Management Systems—Department of Defense inventories exceed $100 billion of which unneeded or excess inventory exceeds $30 billion.The excess inventory along with numerous other indicators (e.g., the failure to cancel orders where excess stock is already on hand) reflect financial management problems. Management incentives focus on filling orders and obligating funds. There is no corresponding focus on reducing costs or controlling or securing stock, i.e., economy and efficiency. The current pressure to reduce the DOD budget in response to recent world events provides additional incentives to make major improvements in the supply system.

DOD Major Systems Acquisition—The total estimated cost of major systems currently being developed or produced exceeds $900 billion. Following established management controls to deliver capable and supportable weapons to the user when and where needed, and at reasonable cost, has been the exception rather than the rule. As a result, DOD continually buys higher cost systems which substantially exceed original estimates, are delivered much later than originally scheduled, and do not meet the capabilities advertised. GAO will review the effectiveness of management initiatives to address these long-term problems and their means of achieving savings.

NASA Contract Management—NASA will spend $11 billion in 1990 on contracts and has a very decentralized contract administration process. In this environment, there is considerable potential for mismanagement, fraud, and abuse. The potential for large savings exists if better contract controls and oversight can be achieved.

Farmers Home Administration Loan Programs—FmHA has made billions of dollars of credit available to the nation's farmers. Delinquent farm loan borrowers held $11.1 billion, or 48 percent, of the agency's $23.3 billion in outstanding loans as of September 30, 1989. FmHA is responsible for protecting the government's interest, as well as helping farmers who cannot get help elsewhere. Recognizing congressional concern to reduce the deficit, any potential for controlling loan losses warrants added review and oversight.

Superfund Enforcement and Contractor Oversight—The Congress has authorized $10 billion for the Superfund program but estimates of federal funds needed to complete the cleanups are many times that amount. To avoid wasting federal resources, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) needs to (1) ensure that parties who contaminate sites pay their fair share of the clean-up costs and (2) effectively manage clean-up contractors who get over 75 percent of Superfunds's outlays. GAO will explore cost and conflict of interest control and whether EPA uses its full authority to compel private party cleanup.

Urban Mass Transportation Administration Grants—UMTA currently manages active grants totalling $30 billion with over $3 billion in new grants each year. The number of staff available to UMTA for project oversight is limited. Based on recent GAO survey work, increased oversight of the grant application review process and adherence to grant provisions is needed. The criteria for deciding what projects get funded and in what amounts is limited, and, in some cases, projects are funded at the sole discretion of the Administrator.

Department of Energy Contractor Oversight—DOE relies on contractors and consultants for most of the needed to fulfill its mission. For example, DOE obligated about $15 billion for procurement in 1988. The Department has had a history of inadequate contractor oversight and bonus awards to contractors in situations that would appear to be highly questionable. While this may be due in part to lack of expertise or inadequate staffing, it also may be due to DOE's philosophy of "least interference" with its operating contractors. GAO will examine DOE's potential for improvements in control, accountability, and efficiency.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I say to the senior Senator from Florida, I apologize when I almost interrupted the Senator. I did not know he was retaining the floor. I did not intend to interrupt. I am sincerely sorry.

Mr. President, I will only speak for 5 minutes at the most. There is one thing that is certain: This amendment is subject to a point of order because it has not been reported out by the Budget Committee. So when the distinguished Senator makes the point of order, a point of order will be granted.

The Senator from New Mexico joined the chairman of the Budget Committee and a number of Senators, including the chairman and ranking member of the Banking Committee and others, who proposed this amendment. It will fail. There have been some very good discussions today about our fiscal problems, many of which I concur with. There have been some very good discussions about Social Security, some of which I agree with and some of which the Senator from New Mexico does not agree with. On the other hand, we are going to debate those issues one of these days. It is predicted we will debate the Social Security issue before the year is out. I hope so.

I do not intend to argue the Social Security trust fund issue. The distinguished Senator from Florida raises some very good issues about contingent liabilities of this national Government. Clearly, my silence on that score should not indicate that I do not agree with him; I do. There are some very serious problems about not having an appropriate law or an accounting system with reference to the contingent liabilities.

Aside from that, let me just make the point on this amendment—and I do not want to appear to be one who is predicting as if I know more than anyone else; I do not—but let me just say there is no doubt in this Senator's mind, there is no doubt in my mind that before this year is out, just as we have said we are going to debate Social Security, there is no doubt that the change that is recommended in the accounting system for the working capital of the Resolution Trust Corporation will become law, or we will waive the effect of the technical way of accounting one of the two.

We will do that with all of the discussions about fiscal responsibility because the amendment that we are talking about here essentially has nothing whatsoever to do with fiscal responsibility, with the economic state of affairs, with the ultimate cost of the bailout of the savings and loan system—nothing whatsoever to do with it.

The Congressional Budget Office was cited by my good friend from South Carolina. I will not put the long dissertation by the Director in the RECORD. I will merely tell the Senate that in a letter dated April 27, page 2, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office essentially says that what we are talking about here ought to be done because it really has no effect on fiscal policy but an awful lot of effect on the annual balanced Budget Act calculations.

So we came here saying why not be realistic. We made a mistake in including the working capital expenditures as part of the Gramm-Rudman calculations.

Now, I thought someone would ask the question, how are you sure that this comes out neutral, that the expenditure, which I explained a while ago for the acquisition of assets, which you will get charged with in the year of the expenditure because of technicalities of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings accounting, how are you sure that over the period of time the sale of the assets will be neutral?

I merely remind Senators that we are talking about RTC working capital. The Resolution Trust Corp. must borrow money to make those expenditures, and they are bound under law to borrow no more than 85 percent of the value of their assets. And that is audited every 3 months by the General Accounting Office, so that if there are losses, they have to borrow less, so they always have no more than 85 percent borrowed out of that already established fund. We may engage in an argument for 2 weeks on whether it was properly accounted for or not.

But that has nothing to do with how we currently treat the expenditure of working capital in the budget. When as a matter of fact, in the same accounting system on an annual basis, the entire expenditure for acquiring assets would be part of increasing the Gramm-Rudman deficit for, which you would either have to raise taxes or cut expenditures. When in the very next year, the assets which are being held, are sold, we do not count asset sales toward lowering the deficit.

So we thought it would be helpful to correct this for working capital. Some think it will not. So when the point of order is made we ought to pull the amendment, and in the next 3 or 4 months when we get to deciding what is the deficit against which we are going to sequester, sometime or another, sooner or later, we will decide that this method of accounting under the balanced Budget Act is absolutely irrelevant and all it does is charge you out of a pot of money that is already there and accounted for, charging you the expenditures when you buy assets but does not give you credit when you sell the assets. And I do not believe the Congress is going to leave that accounting system under anyone's notion of fiscal responsibility because it is fiscally insane to do it otherwise, so we will fix it—not today because the point of order will win.

I do not intend to have the Senate vote on that point of order, so the amendment will go. I repeat, it will be back and it will get passed because when it is understood, it will, indeed, be an amendment and it will not affect our fiscal policy over the long term—exactly as the Director of the Congressional Budget Office says, no effect whatsoever, on the internal operations of the working account, says he, which is all we are trying to fix.

I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, going immediately to the discourse of my distinguished colleague from New Mexico, I would ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD at this point a letter from the Congressional Budget Office, Robert D. Reischauer, dated April 27, and a letter also from Robert D. Reischauer dated April 27, to Honorable JAIME L. WHITTEN, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee. This is the letter in full that I think we ought to include in the RECORD and I am going to quote just a couple parts from it.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, April 27, 1990.

Hon. ERNEST HOLLINGS,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: This letter responds to the two questions we discussed in our phone conversation earlier today.

First, Section 320 of H.R. 4402, the Dire Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for 1990, as reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations would represent an amendment to the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act).

Second, under current law and accounting procedures the net expenditures of the Resolution Trust Corporation, including those financed by working capital borrowed from the Federal Financing Bank, will be included in CBO's sequestration calculations under the Balanced Budget Act.

I am enclosing a copy of the letter to Chairman Whitten that I mentioned in our conversation. It notes that the Office of Management and Budget has not yet indicated how it will handle receipts and RTC asset sales in its sequestration calculations.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, April 27, 1990.

Hon. JAMIE L. WHITTEN,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This letter is in response to a request by your Committee for our interpretation and the budget impact of Section 320 of H.R. 4404, the Dire Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for 1990, as reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Section 320 would amend the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (the so-called Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act) to effectively exclude the activities of the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) from sequestration calculations and from the Congressional budget resolution procedures. Two new sections would be added to Section 251(a)(6) of the Balanced Budget Act, which govern the calculation of the budget baseline and the need for deficit reductions. The first new section, subparagraph L, would exclude from the budget baseline and deficit calculations the RTC use and repayment of loans from the Federal Financing Bank (FFB) that are used for working capital requirements in resolving the savings and loan problem. The second new section, subparagraph M, would require that all other offsetting collections and disbursements of the RTC be assumed to net to zero in calculating the budget baseline and the budget deficit, beginning with the 1991 budget. The combined effect of the two sections is to remove effectively any budget impact of the RTC from the Balanced Budget Act calculations and also from the Congressional budget resolutions estimates.

Section 320 would have no effect on the Congressional budget scoring for the current fiscal year because the 1990 budget resolution made no assumption for RTC working capital needs, and because subparagraph M would not apply to 1990. The budget effect for 1991 depends upon whose estimate is used for the RTC activities. In CBO's analysis of the President's proposal for 1991, we estimated that the RTC would have net outlays of $31 billion in fiscal year 1991 and net receipts of $13 billion in fiscal year 1992. The President's January budget, in contrast, estimated $7.3 billion in net outlays by the RTC in 1991. A detailed discussion of our baseline projections of RTC spending is contained in Appendix A to our March 1990 report, An Analysis of the President's Budgetary Proposals for Fiscal Year 1991. I am enclosing a copy of this discussion for your information.

The budgetary impact of RTC activities is highly uncertain, both with respect to the ultimate cost of resolving the savings and loan problem as well as the year-to-year cash flows. Closing or selling hundreds of insolvent thrifts may involve potential swings of tens of billions of dollars from year to year. For example, the CBO baseline estimates for 1991 and 1992 show a swing of $44 billion for RTC net spending.

CBO's baseline estimates were made in late February when there was very little information available from the Administration about the RTC spending plans. Therefore, we had to make a number of critical assumptions that are subject to change as more information becomes available. One assumption, for example, was that the RTC would borrow $24 billion from the FFB in 1990, and another $31 billion in 1991. Recently, the RTC Oversight Board approved plans to borrow $45.3 billion from the FFB during the current calendar year quarter, which ends June 30. If the RTC were to borrow this amount and spend it before September 30, our current deficit estimate for 1990 of $159 billion would be too low by $21 billion. It would also lower our baseline deficit estimate for 1991 by a corresponding amount. This is another illustration of the potential volatile impact of RTC activities for the federal budget.

CBO has argued for some time that RTC spending should be included in the budget totals but largely excluded from the Balanced Budget Act calculations. The rationale for the exclusion is that such spending does not affect national saving in the way that most federal spending does. Unlike most recurrent federal expenditures, RTC spending for thrift resolution involves only an exchange of one asset or liability for another. These transfers of assets leave private income and wealth unchanged, and thus do not affect saving or consumption.

Excluding most RTC activities from the deficit calculations in the Balanced Budget Act would also be consistent with the current treatment of asset sales under the act. The act excludes nonroutine asset sales from the budget baseline used to compute the spending cuts under the automatic deficit reduction provisions. It is unclear whether RTC asset sales under current law are covered by this exclusion. Unless a statutory change is made, the Office of Management and Budget would have to make its own interpretation. If OMB were not to count RTC asset sales as receipts, it would certainly make sense for the Congress also to exclude RTC's expenditures of working capital to acquire these assets. Counting asset acquisitions but not sales against budget targets would overstate outlays over time and needlessly and inconsistently bias budget policy toward fiscal constraint.

CBO's argument for excluding RTC activities from the Balanced Budget Act does not apply to its interest expenses. RTC's interest outlays for its working capital borrowing from the FFB are not merely an exchange of assets but represent a true increase in the government's cost. Section 320 of H.R. 4404 would exclude these interest costs as well as all other RTC activities. CBO's baseline estimates of RTC's interest payments to the FFB are $3 billion for 1991 and $4 billion for 1992.

I hope that this information meets your needs.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Director.

CBO'S BASELINE PROJECTIONS OF RTC SPENDING

The Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA), enacted in August 1989, established the mechanisms for dealing with the savings and loan crisis. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), through the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC) Resolution Fund, is to complete the resolution of institutions sold before March 1989. The Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) is to close or sell savings and loan institutions that are currently insolvent or expected to fail through August 1992, and the new Savings Association Insurance Fund (SAIF) is responsible for dealing with problem thrifts after that date.

The legislation provided the RTC with $50 billion to close or subsidize the sale of hundreds of insolvent thrift institutions—$18.8 billion from the Treasury, $1.2 billion from the Federal Home Loan Banks, and another $30 billion to be borrowed through the off-budget Resolution Funding Corporation (REFCORP) starting in 1990. The $50 billion was intended to pay for insurance losses that could never be recovered. In the process of resolving the problem thrifts, however, the RTC will need cash far in excess of the $50 billion authorized by FIRREA to finance the purchase of assets that will subsequently be sold. For example, if an institution has assets with a book value of $100 million and insured liabilities of $130 million, a liquidation could require the RTC to spend $130 million, a liquidation could require the RTC to spend $130 million immediately in cash to pay off creditors. It is further possible that an amount less than the book value would be recovered in future years as assets were sold, say $70 million. In this example, up-front cash of $130 million would be necessary, even though the ultimate loss would be only $60 million. Theoretically, the use of working capital is temporary. But if recoveries from asset sales are less than initially estimated, some of the working capital may not be repaid and the government's ultimate losses will increase.

The need for working capital appears to be substantial. The Administration has indicated a range of $40 billion to $100 billion—because the least costly method of resolving many institutions is believed to be through liquidations or "clean-bank" transactions, which require the RTC to strip out bad assets and sell them separately. Such transactions require much more up-front cash than selling or merging the entire institution. RTC's authority to borrow working capital for this purpose is not unlimited, however. FIRREA effectively caps RTC's obligations so that its liabilities may not exceed its assets, with assets in receivership valued at 85 percent of their net realized value, an amount that cannot be known at the time and would have to be estimated. FIRREA does not specify the source of working capital or the form that the borrowing could take.

The Department of Justice recently clarified the legal authority of the RTC to raise working capital by borrowing from the Federal Financing Bank (FFB), and the RTC Oversight Board has announced that the RTC will begin borrowing from the FFB very soon. Funds borrowed from the FFB will add to the federal deficit when spent. Another potential source of working capital is the RTC's $5 billion line of credit with the Treasury, although the RTC expects to use this source of funds primarily for emergency purposes. In addition, the RTC could use private markets to raise off-budget funding for insolvent thrifts to supplement its FFB borrowing, but this form of financing would be more costly and has limited usefulness.

BASELINE PROJECTIONS FOR THE RTC

The budgetary impact of spending by the RTC is still highly uncertain, even for 1990 and 1991. Closing or selling hunderds of insolvent thrifts may involve potential swings of tens of billions of dollars from year to year, depending on a host of interrelated factors that are extremely difficult to predict, including:

The number of institutions that the Office of Thrift Supervision will identify for the RTC caseload;

The form of the resolutions, with liquidations requiring much larger cash expenditures up front than assisted acquisitions, but resulting in more cash income in subsequent years;

The order in which cases are resolved: if institutions with larger losses are resolved first, there will be greater spending in initial year;

The pace of resolutions, which has been slow to date;

The form and timing of borrowing of working capital; and

The timing and value of asset sales.

Also, the RTC could take steps that would increase or accelerate its use of working capital and affect the budget as well. For example, it could delay some or all of the REFCORP borrowing, thus shifting outlays from 1991 to 1990. Such a delay would also allow the RTC to borrow working capital equal to 100 percent of the unused REFCORP borrowing authority, whereas if the REFCORP funds were used to purchase assets, borrowing for working capital would be limited to 85 percent of the value of the assets acquired. Also, it could overvalue some of its assets, thus allowing additional borrowing, and could seek Congressional approval, without statutory changes required, to make use of its legal authority to incur net obligations beyond $50 billion. (FIRREA technically allows the RTC to spend a net of $68.8 billion, though the higher figure was apparently unintended.)

Given these uncertainties and the volatile nature of spending for this purpose, a number of assumptions had to be made in updating the CBO baseline to include the RTC's use of working capital. The baseline assumes that $24 billion will be borrowed from the FFB in 1990, and another $31 billion in 1991. Other critical assumptions are spelled out below. The net result is to increase CBO baseline projections for RTC outlays by $19 billion in 1990 and by $26 billion in 1991 from the January baseline levels (see Table A-3). Because this additional spending in 1990 and 1991 would permit the acquisition and subsequent sale of more assets, baseline outlays in later years are negative, and below previous estimates by a total of almost $25 billion over the 1992-1995 period.

THE BASELINE COMPARED WITH THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

The President's budget provides few details about the assumptions used to estimate spending for the RTC over the next five years, and several financial statements normally included are missing. In the President's 1991 budget request, the RTC uses only limited working capital, largely by spending previous appropriations and REFCORP funds for temporary lending to thrifts to replace funds borrowed at high interest rates. These loans are technically repaid and that cash is reused when the institution is finally closed. Proceeds from asset sales are also used for working capital.

The CBO reestimate of the President's budget is identical to the baseline, because no legislation is proposed in the budget. Thus, CBO's estimate of RTC outlays exceeds the estimates in the President's budget by about $31 billion in 1990 and $24 billion in 1991, but is lower by $13 billion in 1992 and 1993, $10 billion in 1994, and $7 billion by 1995 (see Table A-3). A more detailed discussion of the assumptions underlying the CBO baseline follows.

BASELINE ASSUMPTIONS

The CBO baseline assumes that the RTC will borrow from the FFB until it reaches the statutory cap on its outstanding obligations. However, there is some uncertainty about the amount of this cap. While it appears that the intent of the Congress was to limit the RTC to net spending of no more than $50 billion, the formula limiting RTC's obligations in FIRREA failed to include Treasury appropriations of $18.8 billion in 1989. Thus, FIRREA technically allows the RTC to spend a net of $68.8 billion. The Administration has indicated that it will honor the $50 billion ceiling, and the General Accounting Office, when calculating RTC's net cumulative losses, will assume that the $50 billion limitation applies. Consistent with this treatment, the CBO baseline assumes that the RTC will borrow as much as it can pay back from liquidating assets, while realizing net losses of no more than $50 billion over time.

A key to determining the amounts the RTC is likely to borrow are the expected proceeds from the sale of assets, which represent the second largest source of cash to the RTC. Estimating the pace and size of sale proceeds realized by the RTC is highly speculative, given that there is little historical precedent for sales of this magnitude, and given the competing goals of minimizing the losses to the federal government, minimizing the effects of disposal of assets on local economies, and generating sufficient cash for case resolutions. CBO's estimates assume that the RTC will recover an average of about 70 percent of the estimated value of assets at the time they are acquired. Collections are expected over an eight-year period after the assets are placed in receivership; more than 75 percent of the collections is expected in the first four years. CBO's caseload projections are based on RTC's priorities for selecting cases for resolution.

CBO estimates that the RTC could borrow about $55 billion in working capital and pay it back from asset sales over the next 10 years. During the 1990-1992 period, cash raised by the Resolution Funding Corporation ($30 billion), remaining 1989 Treasury contributions ($9 billion), asset sales ($37 billion), repayments of advances ($11 billion net), and FFB borrowing ($55 billion) would allow the RTC to spend about $120 billion on case assistance, and make interest ($8 billion) and principal ($13 billion) payments to the FFB (see Table A-4).

RTC'S ADDITIONAL FUNDING NEEDS

The $120 billion included in the baseline for RTC case resolutions for 1990 through 1992 is probably sufficient to resolve 250 to 350 insolvent institutions, but is almost certainly not enough to resolve the 500 to 600 institutions now in the RTC caseload or expected to join it during the next three years. Almost all of that spending is expected to occur before the end of 1991, when the RTC would run out of cash—both for insurance losses and for working capital. CBO now estimates that by 1992 the RTC will need at least an additional $25 billion to $30 billion for net losses, plus working capital of at least the same amount, in order to resolve the entire inventory of 500 to 600 insolvent thrifts. This estimate does not include costs for additional thrifts that are likely to become insolvent in the next few years. Under current law, SAIF would have to handle cases that remain after the RTC authority to resolve cases ends in 1992.

THE BUDGET TREATMENT OF RTC SPENDING

The President's budget distinguishes between two types of working capital: "normal," which is repaid from asset sales within months, and "extraordinary," which is repaid from asset sales over a long period of time. The normal working capital, which is included in the President's budget, is paid off within a fiscal year and has little impact on the deficit.

The President's budget makes a case for excluding the "extraordinary" working capital from the budget calculations used to determine sequestration amounts under the Balanced Budget Act. CBO agrees that such spending has no real economic effect. Moreover, the case-based budget is ill suited for measuring the long-term impact on taxpayers of RTC's activities, which increases the deficit in early years while lowering it in later years when the proceeds from asset sales off-set other government spending.

The Balanced Budget Act excludes asset sales from both the budget baseline and the calculation of budgetary savings—except for "routine, ongoing" asset sales or sales previously mandated by law. It is not clear whether RTC asset sales are covered by the exclusion; if they are, so that asset sales would not count as receipts, it would also make sense not to count RTC's expenditures of working capital to acquire the assets. Counting asset acquisitions but not sales against budget targets would overstate outlays over time and needlessly and inconsistently bias budget policy toward fiscal constraint. Nonetheless, the act contains no provision that would allow this difficulty to be resolved, and CBO believes that a statutory change would be required to exclude the spending of working capital from the deficit totals used for the Balanced Budget Act.

Indeed, a clear economic case exists for excluding from the act's baseline deficit calculation all of RTC's net expenditures except payment of interest on RTC's debt to the FFB. (Repayment of principal does not count as an outlay in any event.) This case is based on the fact that such spending does not change the government's balance sheet and does not affect national saving in the way that most federal spending does. The same case cannot be made for the interest on government borrowing, whether through the FFB, REFCORP, or the Treasury. (Table I-5 shows CBO's deficit estimates excluding noninterest outlays of the RTC.)

Mr. HOLLINGS. The Senator is saying that the Congressional Budget Office recommends this. You can tell what a soup we are really in when the doctor comes along and says you better watch out; you might get well.

First, he is quoting the Resolution Trust Corporation Act. He says on page 2, "It is unclear whether RTC asset sales under current law are covered by this exclusion."

Mr. President, it is not unclear at all. Section 251, subsection 6(i) of the Congressional Budget Act annotated on page 399, if you look at it, it says,

Assuming for the purposes of this paragraph and subparagraph (a)(i), paragraph 3 that the sale of an asset or prepayment of a loan shall not alter the deficit or produce any net deficit reduction in the budget baseline except that the budget baseline estimate shall include asset sales, mandated by law before September 18, 1987, and routine ongoing asset sales and loan prepayments at levels consistent with agency operations in fiscal year 1986.

Now, apparently our distinguished Congressional Budget Office Director is saying he does not know whether this is routine. Unfortunately, it is going to be all too routine. It has been going on for 30 years. I do not know of anything more routine than that.

Then he goes on, Mr. President, since our distinguished friend from New Mexico quoted that letter, and says—listen to this—

Counting asset acquisitions but not sales against budget targets would overstate outlays over time and needlessly and inconsistently bias budget policy toward fiscal constraint.

The congressional budget officer says you better watch out; we might attain fiscal constraint. Can you imagine that?

When the cancer comes and we are trying to get rid of the cancer, he says if you do that, get rid of it, then we are really in the soup. That is what dismays me. Of course, the distinguished congressional budget officer said, I quote again from that first letter, RTC working capital would be "included in CBO's sequestration calculations."

Enough said. No use to get into that complicated miasma to which the Senator from New Mexico would lead us. The truth is that we have more important things to talk about.

No. 1, I am prepared to make the point of order. I am not delaying the Senate. I want to salute the very erudite and cogent statement made on this particular score by the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM]. I think the U.S. Senate is fortunate to have him on our Banking Committee watching these matters more closely than this Senator and many others. He emphasizes the debate last year where we wasted $5 billion to $10 billion by putting it off budget. How much we waste again by putting last year off. All we put off budget was the $20 billion. Last year all we put off budget was $20 billion for the year 1990. Now we are discussing the year 1991. We already excluded $10 billion in 1991. This section 320 of the urgent supplemental would exclude another $33 billion for a total of $43 billion. Then we have the OMB plug of $58.9 billion. Then we hide another $136 billion by robbing the trust funds and now we are ready for the summit.

That is why this discourse this morning is so important. We do not want to air these issues. They have sold the media on the idea, and they really do not even cover this as a story, because it is a nonstory. You will hear charge and countercharge. But wait until they get to the summit, and when the President and the Congress sit down you will get the real news.

There is a tremendous need to cover this right now because you are going to see the common ground—the deal—on which they will meet. That is why it is just political posturing in Washington to get the Democrats blaming the Republicans and the Republicans blaming the Democrats.

They do not think about that grandchild that the Senator from Florida is going to have. I am going to have one, my eighth one, next month. In fact, I feel very good about this. I have followed my distinguished senior colleague and he has done everything. I try to catch up with him. The only thing I have been able to do that he has not been able to do so far is have grandchildren. He is catching up with me on that particular score.

In any event, I will have my eighth. That poor child will be indentured as it comes into this world.

I do appreciate what Senator GRAHAM has done for the entire Senate on this score because he brings into focus what we ought to be talking about. But let me say a word first about Social Security and Senator MOYNIHAN before I make the point of order.

Certainly with the greatest sense of history, the Senator from New York always rivets me to his comments. I try to read everything he puts out, and he is a prolific writer. He is tremendously talented, and right on target when he uses that one word "trust." It always was intended that the Social Security moneys would be trust funds and not for general spending purposes.

I wanted it to be understood by the Senator from New York that I would bring this matter up in the Budget Committee. We heard the same arguments in Budget that you are now hearing on the floor of the U.S. Senate.

Several said the Moynihan plan would increase the deficit, and the media so casually reported that it really was not binding at all. That is why the Senators did not vote for it, because what we would do was just hortatory, aimed at the Finance Committee. Well, all budget directions in a concurrent resolution of the budget implore the committees to that particular amount but do not instruct the committee. It has to be done with Social Security the same as with income tax or with a special excise tax or value added tax or whatever.

Yes. It was affecting the deficit, but we waited an hour in committee; no one appeared. Just like this morning. We waited an hour. No one appeared. Then when they finally came in, they said, "Vote, vote, vote." We were not able to make our case.

I think the Senate should be put on notice that, this year, we have worked ourselves into the imperative of making a choice of which deficit and which tax we prefer. In other words, you can stand for the Social Security deficit by spending trust fund money to the tune of $500 billion over 5 years. That was the trouble with the Rostenkowski initiative. Rostenkowski said freeze COLA's and continue to spend Social Security surpluses. Sure, his plan would balance the budget, but it would do so by spending a half a trillion dollars of Social Security money.

So you can choose to have a budget deficit or a Social Security deficit, one or the other. You cannot avoid it. And thereby you are brought to the necessity of a tax, either a value added tax or some other.

All the same time, if you stand for the Social Security tax increase of January 1, then say so. And let the RECORD show that President Bush, for one, supports the January 1 Social Security tax increase.

We will have a summit. The media just do not want to cover the truth of the matter. We are bogged down in all of this maneuver and minutia when the truth of the matter is that we ought to put our fiscal house in order decisively so we can deal with the challenges and tasks of the day, both here and abroad.

We want to spend more money for education. We are going to spend more money on the environment. We are going to spend more money on nuclear cleanup. We are going to spend more money on research. We are going to spend more money on child care. We will have to spend more money on RTC, on HUD, and now the Pentagon.

So we are going to be spending more money. It is pure folly to think we can get by with a little excise tax here, and a little enhancement there, or whatever. It has to be a traumatic discipline. They have shown the discipline in Europe. That is why they have won their freedom. We can continue to lead economically, and win our economic freedom if only we show the same kind of courage and discipline at this time.

With that in mind, Mr. President, I raise the point of order that section 320 of the Dire Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act is out of order and in violation of section 306 of the Congressional Budget Act annotated in that it has not been referred to the Budget Committee and reported thereupon by that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment before the body does contain matters within the jurisdiction of the Budget Committee, and as it was not reported by that committee, the point of order under section 306 of the Budget Act is well taken.

Mr. HOLLINGS. That rules out section 320.

Mr HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, now that the third committee amendment has been set aside by the ruling of the Chair, that leaves us, pursuant to a unanimous-consent agreement reached last night, with approximately a dozen amendments left for this supplemental appropriations bill.

Assuming that each of these amendments will be raised, I only want to put the Senate on notice that when we reconvene following our luncheon period, Senator BUMPERS of Arkansas will be prepared to take up the first on the list of this group of amendments on food safety; and I would like the other Members of the Senate to be aware that, following that, we expect to move a number of these amendments in rather rapid order, because I think a goodly number are not controversial, or we do not expect to have a great deal of debate.

There may be one out of a dozen that will probably elicit some debate, but the others should move rather rapidly. So I hope Senators who are interested in these amendments that they suggested during this unanimous-consent agreement will be on the floor ready to offer those amendments. Senator BYRD, our chairman, and I, will be here promptly at that hour and be ready to complete this bill this afternoon.

I assure the majority leader that that is our commitment to him, to finish this bill, and with the cooperation of our colleagues, I believe we can do so.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues very much. The Senator from Oregon and the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, have worked very diligently and with great patience on this bill, and I appreciate the effort they are making to complete action on this bill today.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I now be allowed to address the Senate as in morning business, and that upon the completion of my remarks, the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 2:15 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A SOVIET COMPROMISE WITH LITHUANIA

Mr. MITCHELL, I am heartened by indications that the Soviet Union may be seeking a formula for compromise with Lithuania regarding the acceptance of Lithuanian independence. There is reasons for hope that the political confrontation will be resolved by negotiation.

I believe that a peaceful diplomatic solution to the crisis can and must be found.

We in Congress have joined the President urging the Soviet Union not simply to acknowledge the necessity of negotiations, as President Gorbachev has agreed in word, but to take concrete steps toward a peaceful resolution of the dispute.

Sadly, President Gorbachev has done just the opposite. The economic coercion, while it is not military force, was instituted to intimidate Lithuanian leaders to accede to Moscow's terms. Even as there are reports of a new willingness to compromise, Soviet leaders reportedly suspended some coal shipments to Lithuania.

Clearly such action does not represent a good faith effort to facilitate fair and meaningful negotiations.

I believe that the United States should not only condemn such actions, but should concretely demonstrate our objections to the coercive course the Soviet Union has pursued.

The United States should act not only to express our disapproval of the measures already taken, but also to make clear our view that further Soviet sanctions would make a mockery of President Gorbachev's commitment to a peaceful resolution of the dispute.

Negotiations cannot be conducted on a fair or reasonable basis if one party attempts to impose its terms by pressuring the other. It is impossible to have a meaningful dialog, let alone negotiations, if one side holds the other by the throat.

A negotiated settlement is predicated upon a free and fair exchange of views and an atmosphere of mutual respect. Notwithstanding Moscow's stated support for negotiations, Soviet actions have undermined the basis for such free discussions and a solution based on equity and compromise.

The United States seeks a peaceful resolution of the current situation. But we must not leave the impression that we believe a negotiated solution can be born of economic sanctions.

We should not lead President Gorbachev to infer that the United States condones his decisions to cut off supplies of vital raw materials to Lithuania. Yet I fear that the United States, by failing to take concrete steps to express our opposition, may be leading Gorbachev to precisely this conclusion.

I hope that President Bush will give careful thought to the gravity of this potential misunderstanding.

We in America support Lithuanian independence. We have done so for 50 years. I fully agree that we should not take any action that would result in forestalling the realization of the Lithuanian people's desire for freedom.

But it is of critical importance that the United States be consistent and clear. If we do not believe Moscow's approach is correct, and if we believe economic coercion is incompatible with meaningful negotiations, we should demonstrate our position through tangible measures.

I have already expressed my belief that the United States should take action regarding some of the pending subjects of negotiation with the Soviet Union. I believe that the decision regarding a specific American response appropriately belongs to the President. I believe there would be broad bipartisan support for such measures if decided upon by President Bush, and have so advised the President.

The summit is still a month away. I sincerely hope that by then a fair and equitable process of negotiation between the Soviet Union and Lithuania will have begun.

The United States should do everything possible to encourage that result.

I urge President Bush to clearly demonstrate that the United States supports a free and independent Lithuania and that the United States also believes that economic coercion is incompatible with meaningful negotiations. It would be unfortunate for all if the United States fails to make its position clear.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECESS UNTIL 2:15 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will stand in recess until 2:15.

Whereupon, at 12:38 p.m., the Senate recessed until the hour of 2:15 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. SANFORD].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

CAMPAIGN FINANCING REFORM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I wanted to indicate for the record that at noon today this Senator and a number of other Republican Senators announced their campaign reform package and I would underscore, as I did at the press conference, that we are serious about this. We believe it represents a big step in the right direction. We also believe that it presents sort of a moment of truth for some in the press who continue to distort the Republican position and do not fully explain the Republican position.

So I would just say that anyone who objectively studies our proposal I think will find it has a great deal of merit. It may not be perfect in the eyes of some because some have different views on what they would like to do. Some would like to perpetuate one party in power.

We would like to make politics more competitive, eliminate PAC's, eliminate for the most part any so-called soft money, close the millionaires' loophole so it would be more difficult for people with lot of money, millions and millions of dollars, to spend in campaigns, and a number of other things that in my view are really campaign reform.

So I would just challenge some of those who hold different views and who also are members of the press to take a look at the Republican proposal, try to report it objectively, just once. It will not hurt anything. You will get over it and you can go back to your ways later. But take a look at the Republican proposal because in my view it does reflect a step in the right direction.

I am hoping the Democratic proposal will also be a step in the right direction.

I said at the press conference that I am eager to work with the distinguished majority leader at the appropriate time after we have had the bills up for a while, after we had our debate, after we talked about provisions in the Republican proposal and provisions in the Democratic proposal because it seems to me the American people, those who understand the campaign financing or the financing of campaigns, believe that we should make some changes.

So, we have taken the first step. We have 34 cosponsors. We have others who will be joining as cosponsors on the Republican side. We believe we have a pretty good consensus on our side. We hope that is a pretty good consensus on the Democratic side and in the final analysis we will have bipartisan campaign reform leaving the Senate, say, within the next 30 days.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 1565

(Purpose: To provide additional funds to the Food Safety Inspection Service)

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], for himself, Mr. HARKIN, and Mr. PRYOR, proposes an amendment numbered 1565.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

FOOD SAFETY AND INSPECTION SERVICE

For an additional amount for necessary expenses to carry on services authorized by the Federal Meat Inspection Act, as amended, and the Poultry Products Inspection Act, as amended, $6,884,000: Provided, That none of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by the Rural Development, Agriculture, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1990, Public Law 101-161, shall be used to pay the salaries of personnel who carry out an export enhancement program if the aggregate amount of funds and/or commodities under such program exceeds $556,000,000.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, today, I am offering an amendment, along with my colleagues, Senators HARKIN and PRYOR, to provide an additional $6,884,000 for the Food Safety and Inspection Service of the USDA. This amendment is very straightforward. We are requesting the additional moneys to help overcome the $10.2 million shortfall in funding for FSIS, largely caused by the decision not to implement the improved processing inspection [IPI] less-than-continuous inspection process and Gramm-Rudman. We are attempting to get our offset from the Export Enhancement Program [EEP], which currently has $566,000,000. Because CBO has projected a 70-percent spendout of EEP funds, we are requesting a reduction in funds of $10 million in order to raise the necessary funds.

The choice of EEP funds for an offset was a tough call, but we face a very difficult situation in the meat and poultry industry if adequate funds are not made available. Under a proposal adopted by the FSIS internally to absorb the shortfall, the most striking recommendation was to furlough all FSIS employees for a period of 4 days at the end of September, followed by a partial freeze on hiring. The furlough would help raise $4.4 million, and would be the quickest way to cover most of the shortfall since 86 percent of the FSIS budget is for salaries and expenses. The partial hiring freeze saves an additional $2.5 million.

Of course, a 4-day furlough corresponds into a 4-day shutdown of the meat and poultry processing industry. Over 240,000 hourly workers in the red and white meat industry will be out of work in 6,578 plants throughout the United States. In my State of Arkansas, 46 meatpacking, 35 poultry processing, and 62 combined plants will be out of business.

The ripple effect throughout the country of this shutdown will be the loss of $700 million per day. This includes the loss of hourly wages, the loss of livestock and poultry purchases, and the loss of all wholesale and retail sales. This is a staggering loss to the economy, and it does not even include the losses attributable to the 9,800 FSIS employees who will lose 4 days of pay and benefits.

Mr. President, I think the necessity of our action speaks for itself. Let me again state that seeking offset funds from the EEP was a tough call, but the loss to the agricultural export trade will be made up many times over in the agricultural economy by preventing losses in the meat and poultry industry.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor this amendment. The amendment provides $6.884 million for the USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service. The Department of Agriculture has indicated that without additional funds, it will have to lay off all of the meat inspectors across the country for the final 4 days of the fiscal year. This amendment addresses that concern and provides additional resources to cover training and other costs that the Department desires.

If the furloughs were to occur, about 6,600 meat and poultry plants would have to close for those days causing great disruption to the entire industry. I have seen estimates that this would idle about 220,000 workers and would cost the industry about $700 million for every day that the plants were closed—a most unreasonable price to pay for a relatively small shortfall in the FSIS account.

Senators HEFLIN and CONRAD and I wrote to Secretary Yeutter in February to inquire about the availability of FSIS funds. In Secretary Yeutter's response on April 2, he indicated that the FSIS was under considerable budget pressures for a number of reasons including the 1.4 percent sequester, the absorption of increased employee health benefit costs and cost of living increases. A very large portion of the FSIS budget is dedicated to salary and salary-related costs making absorption of these added expenses difficult.

In his letter, the Secretary did confirm the possibility of a 4-day furlough in the last 4 days of the fiscal year.

I would thank Senator BUMPERS for all of his work on this amendment.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] has submitted an amendment which we have reviewed and are prepared to recommend its acceptance by the Senate. The Food Safety and Inspection Service is an agency, as the Senate knows, that has the responsibility for inspecting every food animal or bird at the time of its slaughter. The agency also inspects almost all meat and poultry food processing plants on a daily basis. In all, over 7,000 establishments receive food inspection services from the Food Safety and Inspection Service. It is also responsible for the inspection of imported food containing meat and poultry and for the monitoring of meat and poultry products as they move through distribution and storage systems.

I am advised that this office projected some time ago that it was going to have a shortfall in its appropriation for this fiscal year, and it submitted a request through the regular channels. But in the Office of Management and Budget, it encountered some difficulty and was not included in the request submitted by the President formally to the Congress. It is obvious, on a review of the amount of money available to that agency from the appropriation that was made available to it, that it could be short over $4 million by the end of the fiscal year. It could be as high as $6.9 million, which is the amount included in the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

What we hope to do is to look at the exact funding needs of FSIS before we complete action in the conference on this appropriations bill. We will try to make a determination of exactly how much is needed, whether it is $6.9 million or maybe only $4.6 million, and come back with a report to the Senate of an amount that will ensure that there will not be a furlough of employees, as the Senator correctly states could result from a shortfall of funding.

We do not want FSIS to have to furlough employees. It is a labor-intensive agency. Over 86 percent of the agency's funds are spent on paying employees and benefits. If the Agency is going to have the people to carry out its responsibilities it is important that they have the money to pay them and keep them on the job. If they are not on the job, the plants shut down. That would be terrible. It would be devastating, as pointed out by the Senator, to the economy of the country.

Therefore, we recommend to the Senate that this amendment be accepted.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Mississippi for his cooperation and for his comments. I urge the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Office of Management and Budget regretfully did not approve the supplemental request of $6,884,000 submitted by the Department of Agriculture on behalf of the Food Safety Inspection Service.

The Food Safety Inspection Service is responsible for ensuring the safety, wholesomeness, and accurate labeling of meat and poultry products, whether produced and processed domestically or internationally.

In this role, FSIS employs about 7,500 full-time inspectors, veterinarians, food technologists, and compliance officers nationwide. Over the past few years, meat and poultry production has increased dramatically, placing greater demands on a shrinking agency work force.

Regulations proposed last year to reduce the intensity of inspections at meat and poultry processing plants were heartily opposed through public comment. Even though never implemented, the approved agency budget assumes savings from the proposed regulation of $4,610,000 in salaries and expenses.

Other demands on the agencies have required the absorption of pay increases, retirement benefits, and workmen's compensation costs. Freezes have been imposed on hiring and training while laboratory tests and travel restrictions have been enforced. Further cutbacks imposed through sequestration have only exacerbated an already critical situation for food safety.

Today we are faced with a serious problem. If the Food Safety Inspection Service is denied supplemental funds for 1990, its last resort will be to furlough employees for at least 4 days. The impact on the meat and poultry industry will affect sales, production, processing, and employment.

Without the presence of FSIS inspectors and technicians, the meat and poultry industries will shut down. Each day of a shutdown will cost the red meat industry up to $700 million and will lay off over 220,000 employees. More than 100,000 poultry plant employees will also be laid off.

To ignore the needs of the Food Safety Inspection Service for supplemental funding of $6,884,000 would be fiscally irresponsible. I am disappointed the administration would force the agency to furlough inspectors, forcing the shutdown of both the meat and poultry industry, by ignoring its request for a supplemental.

I compliment the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] on calling up this amendment. Weighing the importance of his amendment to the American public, I recommend support for the amendment that has been proposed. I congratulate him, and I thank him.

I have quite a growing poultry industry in West Virginia, and I think the distinguished Senator from Arkansas has done the American people not a favor, but a service today.

I personally thank him on behalf of my own State and its people, and recommend the Senate adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment (No. 1565) was agreed to.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1566

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senators PELL and HELMS, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for Mr. PELL, for himself, and Mr. HELMS, proposes an amendment numbered 1566.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 25, line 17, insert before the colon ", and the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs in accordance with the procedures contained in section 634A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended".

On page 26, Line 20, after the word "Appropriations" insert ", the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs".

On page 27, Line 2, after the word "Appropriations" insert ", the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs".

On page 27, Line 5, after the word "Appropriations" insert ", the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs".

On page 29, line 15, insert before the period ", and the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs in accordance with the procedures contained in section 634A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended".

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment simply provides that reports required in this bill relating to foreign aid matters go to the Foreign Relations Committee as well as the Appropriations Committee. I have no objection to the amendment. I understand that it is acceptable to the minority manager.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, the amendment has been reviewed on this side of the aisle. There is no objection to its being included in the bill and approved by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1566) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1567

(Purpose: To provide for the lease of Marine Corps helicopters to Colombia)

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator HATCH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN], for Mr. HATCH, proposes an amendment numbered 1567.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

SEC. . LEASE OF MARINE CORPS HELICOPTERS.

(a) Upon entry into force of any lease agreement with the Government of Colombia which is consistent with the authorities of chapter 6 of the Arms Export Control Act, the President shall exercise his authority under section 61 of that Act—

(1) to lease to the Government of Colombia four AH-.1J Cobra helicopters from the current stocks of the Marine Corps for use by the Colombian National Police in carrying out anti-drug interdiction operations in Colombia; and

(2) to provide training of Colombian personnel by Department of Defense personnel (before transfer of the helicopters is made) in the operation, maintenance, logistics support, and deployment of such helicopters, such training to be carried out in consultation with the Director of National Drug Control Policy.

(b) For purposes of this section, the determinations required by paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 61(a) of that Act shall be deemed to have been made as of the entry into force of the lease agreement described in subsection (a) of this section.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, my amendment addresses the urgent situation facing our Andean neighbors in their efforts to battle the drug cartels and rid their countries of the scourge of drugs. During the February meeting in Cartagena, Colombia, President Bush pledged to supply the Andean countries with United States economic, military, and law enforcement assistance in return for continued counternarcotic efforts and sound economic policies. Such a program is necessary, but it does not address the emergency situation that has arisen in the Andeas.

My amendment offers increased military support for the courageous law enforcement efforts being waged by President Virgilio Barco and the Colombian people against the drug trafficking cartels, and it offers increased protection for the law enforcement personnel and equipment the United States has sent to assist the Colombians.

Last August, President Barco put the drug trafficking cartels and the rest of the world on notice—Colombia and the Colombian people will not tolerate drugs, and they are serious in their efforts to wage all-out war against the cartels. More important, President Barco has vowed to uphold the Constitution and the rule of law, pledging that his government will "not tolerate human rights abuses by any group."

Yet in the face of this courageous commitment by President Barco and the Colombian people, the drug trafficking cartels have responded with increased terrorism. They have resorted to indiscriminate bombings and targeted assassinations in the hope of building a public consensus against the counternarcotic efforts of the Colombian Government.

Following a self-declared truce in January, cartel assassins brutally gunned down presidential candidate Bernardo Jaramillo Ossa as he was attempting to board a plane in March. As if that was not enough, 2 weeks ago a bomb exploded on a highway crowded with Easter holiday travelers, indiscriminately killing over 20 people and wounding over 100, many of them children. And just last week, a drug cartel assassin brutally murdered presidential candidate Carlos Pizarro Leon Gomez. Pizarro, a former guerrilla commander often spoke of the dangers of his campaign. But he remarked "we cannot allow death to keep us from doing what must be done for the good of democracy and the country."

Since last August, three presidential candidates have been assassinated. Think what kind of a reaction this would envoke in this country. Such actions are an outrage and serve to highlight the daily bombings and murder waged against all aspects of Colombian society.

In an effort to assist President Barco and the Colombian people, the United States has supplied law enforcement assistance in the form of military equipment and personnel to assist in training and investigations. Operating in this hostile environment is extremely dangerous, and our Drug Enforcement Administration [DEA] personnel and our unarmed military helicopter assets, which the United States has provided to Colombia to transport apprehension teams in country, are constantly exposed to hostile gunfire. These unarmed helicopters are transporting United States agents and are potential targets for automatic weapon fire and surface-to-air missiles that may have fallen into the hands of drug traffickers in Colombia.

My amendment calls for the President to exercise his authority under chapter 6 of the Arms Export Control Act to lease four AH-1J Cobra gunships from the U.S. Marine Corps inventory, to the Colombian National Police. The "J" model is a fine, twin engine aircraft. It is easily maintained, carries all the requisite ordinance for drug operations, and are used by the Marines to train their own helicopter pilots.

The AH-1J, following a period of training by United States Marines, would be flown by Colombian military personnel and provide a significant defensive deterrent against lethal action by the smugglers and would allow the Colombians to effectively dismantle known cocaine laboratories in the remote locations in the mountains and valleys of Colombia. Again, the purpose of these helicopters would be to provide armed escort to the United States and Colombian transport traffickers; and to launch targeted attacks against known, identified drug smuggler cocaine laboratories in Colombia. No U.S. troops would be used to fly these antidrug missions.

This part of my amendment sends the right signal to the Colombian people and our brave DEA personnel in Colombia. We will be protecting the transport of our people into dangerous parts of the Colombian jungle, and we will be giving the Colombians an asset to overmatch the drug smugglers. In short, we will be providing a tool to Colombia that will allow them to eliminate the cocaine business from their country.

Mr. President, my amendment addresses the urgent and dire needs of our Andean neighbors and is consistent with the President's commitment. The situation and the timing are critical; the time to act is now. I believe the United States has an obligation to take advantage of the environment we have helped create. This is the opportunity the American public has invested in and opportunity we cannot afford to waste.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, this amendment would permit the lease of four Marine Corps helicopters to the Colombia National Police to use in antinarcotics operations. The amendment has been cleared, as I understand it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on this side, I am prepared to recommend adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is an agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1567) was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there are only half a dozen names—actually, there are nine names—on the list of amendments that are entitled to be called up—some of these depending upon whether or not some of the others on the list are called up. Therefore, looking at it in that regard, instead of nine amendments on the list there are probably about four, and perhaps not even four, that would be called up. I urge Senators who intend to call up their amendments on that list, please come to the floor and call them up.

The managers are here. We will be very glad to discuss those amendments. Some of them we can accept, perhaps; some we would not.

I suggest the absence of a quorum

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask uanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1564

(Purpose: To provide up to $5,000,000 through international relief agencies to children within Cambodia)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have a slot on the list. I shall not use it. I send an amendment to the desk in behalf of Senator CRANSTON and Senator KERREY of Nebraska, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report:

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for Mr. CRANSTON, for himself and Mr. KERREY, proposes an amendment numbered 1564.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, up to $5,000,000 of the total amount of funds available to carry out chapter 1 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (relating to development assistance), which funds were—

(1) appropriated by the Foreign Operations. Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1990 (Public Law 101-167), or

(2) otherwise made available through the exercise of the authority contained in section 515 of that Act, may be made available to the President to provide emergency assistance through international relief agencies to children with Cambodia.

(b) None of the funds made available pursuant to subsection (a) may be made available, directly or indirectly, for the Khmer Rouge.

Mr. BYRD. This amendment provides that up to $5 million of development assistance may be made available through international relief agencies to help children in Cambodia so long as no funds go directly or indirectly to the Khmer Rouge. There is no new budget authority and no offset required.

This amendment is acceptable on this side.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the amendment has been cleared on the Republican side. I urge its adoption.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, last week ABC aired a Peter Jennings' special documenting the devastating effects of current United States policy on Cambodia.

In this program, the plight of millions of Cambodian children was brought to light: desperately sick children covered with flies, unable to receive medicine; children without school supplies; children without hope; children kept in darkness and despair in part because United States policy prohibits aid to Cambodia.

Our policymakers see in Cambodia a nation of pawns, not people, in some regional power game.

It is on behalf of the people, Cambodia's future, its children, that I offer an amendment. This amendment will allow up to $5 million to be spent for humanitarian aid to the children of Cambodia, channeled through international relief agencies.

There are already many such international aid organizations operating in isolation in Cambodia: the International Red Cross, Oxfam, the American Friends, the Lutheran World Service, the Mennonites, Church World Service, UNICEF, are just a few. They need more resources: medicines, even pencils and schoolbooks. I hope with this amendment that we can begin to put both politics and policy differences aside and reach out to the children of Cambodia, addressing what is truly an international tragedy.

Today we are considering a dire emergency supplemental bill that provides $300 million in aid to Nicaragua and $420 million to Panama. This aid is premised on humanitarian concerns and on the assumption that the United States has an obligation to assist those countries that have been damaged directly or indirectly by U.S. policies. By both these standards the children of Cambodia must surely be judged deserving.

American policy has undeniably contributed to the Cambodian tragedy. We invaded the country in 1971 and continued to bomb it for another 2 years. Since 1978, following the Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia that revealed for the first time the full horror of Khmer Rouge rule, American policy has been to isolate and destroy the Vietnamese-backed government in Phnom Penh. Now, in 1990, we continue to support a non-Communist resistance who work in coalition with the Khmer Rouge to overthrow that government.

But I am not here today to debate what our policy goals in Cambodia should be. It is not the time to do so.

I am here to rectify in one small measure the lack of morality in our policy. We speak of "comprehensive settlements," of "quadripartite coalitions," of "United Nations trusteeship." This is the jargon of diplomacy, of a cold and calculating policy that provides assistance to the non-Communist resistance in their border war while keeping the rest of Cambodia in an aid and trade embargo.

Let us today, with this $5 million in assistance to the children in Cambodia, separate the "real politik" of our policy from the real people of Cambodia. In our political dispute with the Phnom Penh government, let us not punish the people. They have suffered enough.

Let us not condemn Cambodia's future because we are still fighting over Cambodia's past.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I would like make a few comments about an amendment offered by myself and the Senator from California, Senator CRANSTON, earlier today. The amendment is straight forward. It simply makes available $5 million for humanitarian aid for children in Cambodia to be provided through international relief agencies operating in Cambodia.

It is the intent of the sponsors that funds be made available to international relief agencies for health, education, shelter, and other emergency needs. It is our intent that the aid be made available quickly, for humanitarian purposes, and without waiting for a resolution of the political issues which surround United States policy toward Cambodia.

Mr. President, I recently visited Cambodia. I was there but 3 short days. I do not profess to be an expert on Cambodia, but several things stand out clearly. One is that there are thousands of children in great need of basic medical care, shelter, clothing, and similar necessities of life. Another is that there is a group of nongovernmental organizations, some from the United States, some from other countries, working in Cambodia to help people at the most basic level. For many Cambodians these people are their only source of assistance on these issues. They turn to nongovernmental organizations rather than their government for assistance. These relief organizations know the situation in Cambodia and the people. They can put to very good use the funds provided by this amendment.

There are many policy issues facing us with regard to Cambodia. They will not be quickly resolved. This amendment does not address those, except to the extent that it restates what we are told U.S. policy is—and what I believe it should be—that no funds are to be made available directly or indirectly to the Khmer Rouge.

Cambodia stands almost unique among 20th century nations. Its needs, while not unusual in developmental terms, nevertheless exist in an unusual context—a context for which we in this country bear at least some responsibility. Consequently, I urge that we provide this aid as quickly as possible, that we provide it for the basic needs of Cambodian children, and that we provide it through the mechanisms which have already laid the groundwork for helping the Cambodian people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment (No. 1564) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1568

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN], for himself and Mr. DECONCINI, proposes an amendment numbered 1568.

On page 28, line 9, after the word "Namibia" insert the following: ": Provided, That funds made available for Namibia under this heading may not be obligated or expended unless the President determines and reports to the Congress that it is not the policy of the Government of Namibia to intervene militarily in Angola or to support military intervention from its territory into Angola.".

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I did not cut off the clerk. I wanted the amendment read in full because it is a very straightforward amendment. We simply are talking about an amendment with respect to the assistance that we recommend for the new Government in Namibia. While the new independent Government in Namibia was inaugurated within this month there remains some concern about the military activity in Angola, and whether or not the new Government of Namibia supports that action.

This amendment has the effect of conditioning our aid on the President's certifications that this new Government has a policy of military nonintervention in Angola, and it does not provide assistance to individuals or to groups for the purposes of intervening militarily in Angola.

Mr. President, I would like to say that Senator LEAHY, the chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, has cleared this amendment. So as far as our Foreign Operations Subcommittee is concerned, it is not an amendment in dispute.

My understanding is the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON] has some concern about the amendment, although he may not require a record vote. So what I would like to do is suggest the absence of a quorum, in the hope that we can expedite the process by which this amendment can be agreed to.

I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I understand that my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin has introduced an amendment on Namibia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SIMON. I rise in opposition to this amendment. I am not going to ask for a rollcall, because I am a political realist in terms of what I think would happen on such a rollcall. But first of all, the United States is among the family of nations in supporting Jonas Savimbi, and I think we cannot expect—I see my colleague coming on the floor now—other African nations to be joining us in this regard. Namibia is brand new among the nations of Africa. It is the last colony that is now a free and independent nation, and it looks like it is off to a good healthy start. It is a multiparty nation, which is granting basic liberties to its people in much the same way Botswana is doing.

I think it is a great mistake, and I hope it will be considered carefully when this bill goes to conference, for us to condition our aid to Namibia with this kind of a stipulation. I think it sends precisely the wrong message. I certainly favor the aid to Namibia, and Namibia is in the kind of a situation where they have no ability to get involved in a meaningful way in the Angolan conflict anyway.

I think we have to recognize that our position of eminent loneliness in supporting Jonas Savimbi is not a position that any African country, with a possible exception of the one, joins us in. And I think we would be much better off not having this amendment.

But again, having said that, I am not asking for a rollcall, because I recognize what would happen in a rollcall. But I think it is unwise, and I hope my colleague from Wisconsin and others will consider it carefully when we go to conference.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, let me just respond very briefly.

First of all, I think that all of us, by having the bill coming forward with $10 billion for Namibia, are making a very strong statement in providing them with money. I think that that shows the support. I, working along with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] and others, have worked with a number of people, both on the Foreign Relations Committee, as well as some people at the State Department, to moderate the language in this amendment. It was written exactly as it is now. I thought we had reached a position where it had been moderated adequately.

I thank the Senator from Illinois for his comments. We will work carefully together in following the situation, a brand new situation, and I hope very much the outcome will be what both he and I could agree with.

Mr. SIMON. If my colleague will yield, I want to again commend him for having this money in here for Namibia. My hope is that we can work out some language that would be mutually satisfactory. I think it is desirable both from our perspective and from the perspective of Namibia.

Mr. KASTEN. I agree, and I thank the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. President, I do not believe there is further debate on the amendment. I ask that we proceed.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I want to express my full support for Namibia amendment being offered by my colleague, Senator KASTEN. I believe that if we are to provide $10 million to the new Namibian Government, we ought to seek assurances that the money is not expended contrary to our interests.

Namibia has hopeful prospects for economic growth and development, with rich natural resources, a multiparty coalition government and a democratic constitution But there are valid concerns about the new Namibian Government, largely because of SWAPO's previous role in Angola and their indebtedness to the Angolan Communist government which provided them safe harbor and bases from which to infiltrate neighboring Namibia.

Reports from Namibia state that Sam Nujoma, once SWAPO's leader in exile and the newly elected President of Namibia, is bringing to Namibia from Angola massive amounts of weaponry for use by the Namibian Army. Last week, at a private reception, a member of my staff addressed this issue with the new Namibian Foreign Minister, a former SWAPO official. The Foreign Minister expressed surprise at the reports, and professed that Namibia was not interested in intervening in Angola's war.

Now personal assurances are fine, but I have a problem with SWAPO because they also pledged to abide by the tripartite agreement. However, on April 1 of last year, several hundred SWAPO guerrillas were caught redhanded invading Namibia and were apprehended by the U.N. peacekeeping forces. SWAPO has several other blemishes on their record, including the missing detainees, many of whom were tortured and died in SWAPO camps in Angola, devoted to guerrillas to fight against UNITA, and Nujoma just admitted to a new violation of the tripartite accord by announcing that nearly 700 guerrillas are to be returned to Namibia with a billion dollars' worth of arms—those same guerrillas were supposed to have been repatriated as voters last year under the terms of the 1988 agreement. In short, there is ample cause for watchfulness on the part of the United States regarding Namibia.

If the new Namibian Government, as the Foreign Minister has suggested, has no wish to become involved in Angola's war, then it should not hesitate to grant the United States Government assurances to that effect. To support this amendment simply reinforces the United States view that the Namibian Government should focus on economic growth and stability rather than the Angolan conflict. To not support the amendment would give a green light to SWAPO to reengage its forces against UNITA and could provoke the SWAPO-dominated government into escalating the war regionwide. This could only undermine the delicate peace process underway in both Angola and South Africa, since Namibia rests at the strategic position in between those two countries.

President Savimibi has already warned SWAPO against hostile maneuvers to his south. He could not sit idly by should SWAPO consider joint operations in northern Namibia. We should take this first step toward ensuring that the Angolan war does not spill across the border by passing this amendment and conditioning the release of $10 million to aid to assurances that Namibia will not intervene in the fighting between UNITA and the Communist MPLA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Hearing none, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment (No. 1568) was agreed to.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY].

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I was about to bring up an amendment on behalf of another Senator, but I understand it is already taken care of.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. LIEBERMAN]. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1569

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, this morning, I spoke to President Landsbergis, the President of Lithuania, by telephone. As a matter of fact, the conversation started at about 20 minutes to 10, and we spoke until 5 minutes to 10.

I asked the President of Lithuania whether or not the Soviet embargo, as it related to natural gas, was continuing; whether or not the press accounts that we had received that the Soviets had indicated that they were willing to negotiate—indeed, had that taken place? Had they received any assurances from the Soviets as to when and where? And, more particularly, I asked questions related to the media reports that supplies of natural gas would be doubled.

As a matter of fact, the President said to me that the blockade was even more encompassing. He indicated that the Soviet stranglehold continues unabated, notwithstanding the reports to the contrary.

He told me that his country desperately needed medical supplies and food processing supplies—citrus—for much of its food. And he said that unemployment was a growing problem and they had a real concern that many others who were now working would be unemployed due to no energy.

On the lighter side—and he was not light when he said they desperately need help, and would need foreign credits to make possible the purchase of supplies that he said are still coming by way of truck that they send out—he said one of the other things that they could utilize were bicycles, as increasing numbers of his people are turning to this form of transportation.

Mr. President, I understand the necessity of fostering relations with the Soviets that are in the interests, not only of the United States, but of all the nations and peoples of the world. But I think we are embarked upon a course of action which necessitates our turning away from the truth and the facts as they are, not as we would like them to be; that the Soviets are, indeed, violating those standards which they have set forth, those standards that they talk about in perestroika and glasnost, and that they are ready to just put this aside, set up a propaganda smokescreen and say, "We are willing to negotiate," when indeed they are not. They are using raw aggression. They are pressing and attempting to stifle the call for freedom from the people of Lithuania.

I think President Landsbergis was, unfortunately, maybe more accurate than some would like us to believe when he said last week that this was Munich revisited. I believe that as the free nations of the world turned their heads aside to what was really taking place at that point in history, that that is exactly what is taking place today.

While the aggression may not be as open and as naked, it is, nevertheless, undeniable. On the altar of world political expedience, on the altar of the publicity and the polls, which govern so many, just as it did Prime Minister Baldwin in his days when he was Prime Minister of England, so, too, are many of us being cowards. Somehow we have come to the defense of Mr. Gorbachev and his use of force, undeniable, whether it is the borders which have been closed down, whether it has been the removal of the media, whether it has been now the cutoff of essential supplies to the people of Lithuania. How dare we acquiesce, and acquiesce we do, and more than that, by saying that we are prepared to go forward?

Mr. President, we, the United States of America, have achieved great comity and accommodation, if you wish to call it, by the Soviets as a result of a policy that said steadfastly that unless you recognize the human rights of not only our people but others, unless you begin to live within the so-called common house that recognizes individual rights and freedoms, we will not make available most-favored-nation status to you for trade purposes; we will not make available to you the technological achievements that we have achieved under our free and democratic system; they will be denied to you.

Indeed, it is not out of the sense of generosity that the Soviets now come to us, but rather out of a sense of need. The nations of Eastern Europe that now have a taste and breath of freedom have so because we had the courage to stand and we had a policy that said we will deny you the kinds of economic opportunities unless and until you come into the house of nations and respect—yes, respect—and give legitimacy to the fact that each person has inalienable rights, and freedom is one of those. Freedom cannot be bartered.

Now we are bartering. And here we have great strength. We possess the ability by what? By saying to the Soviets, "If you want most-favored-nation status, if you want to trade, if you want the doors of technology to open to you, if you want all that flows as it relates to the nations of the world who work together and recognize and respect individual rights, why, then certainly the people of Lithuania should be accorded those rights."

Mr. President, I am not suggesting to you that there are not very important and legitimate needs of the Soviets that have to be met as it relates to Lithuania. Obviously, they have their own security and their national security interests. Obviously, they have bases which are important to them. Obviously, they need access to ports. Obviously, there are economic situations that should be negotiated, and President Landsbergis understands that and his Foreign Minister, who I spent 2 days with, told me that and said we are ready to negotiate but we cannot and will not negotiate for one principle which is undeniable and that is the principle of freedom and independence; that is their right.

When Mr. Gorbachev says on the one hand, "I am ready to negotiate," he throws in a string which brings back independence and talks about a timetable as it relates to independence, a timetable as it relates to withdrawal of troops, a timetable as it relates to military installations, the manner by which economic vital considerations should be undertaken. Certainly, those are things that can and should be negotiated where timetables may be essential for both sides, but not the underlying issue of freedom and independence.

I find it very difficult for us to say there has been a policy that has achieved and has helped bring us to the point we have attained today and yet not be able to apply that principle. Even at the 11th hour, more so now, what a terrible singal we send out to the world, what a terrible signal we send to the Soviets. Notwithstanding the Soviet's protestations—and I brought this up with Secretary Baker today—how is it that we can say do not use force, negotiate, and then stand by as force is applied and say, notwithstanding what is taking place, the use of economic aggression—and that is force—we are ready, willing, and able to proceed as it relates to conferring on the Soviet's most-favored-nation status. I think it would be a terrible error, while we are saying one thing, to undertake this agreement with the other hand. What are the Soviets to believe? Are we not sending mixed signals? Are we not really saying we are saying these things to appease the American public but you just continue? We are saying you should not use force, you should negotiate, on the one hand, while we see the Soviets tightening the screws, tightening the lasso around the necks of those who cry out for independence, in this case, the Lithuanians.

It is with that in mind that I am prepared to offer an amendment which says, if I might be permitted:

It is the Sense of the Senate to urge the President not to submit any U.S.-Soviet trade agreement or enabling legislation thereto to the Senate for approval until at least:

(1) the Soviet Union has lifted its economic embargo against Lithuania, and

(2) the Soviet Union has entered into negotiations with the duly elected representatives of the Lithuanian people, with the intended result the Soviet recognition of the independence of the government of the Republic of Lithuania in an orderly and expeditious manner.

Mr. President, I believe that it is absolutely essential the Soviets understand that there will be no most-favored-nation status, as badly as we want to continue the road toward peaceful coexistence, an end to the madness of a nuclear arms race, toward opening borders, the democratic process coming to more and more nations. We cannot sit by while, undeniably, the rights and the freedoms of the people of Lithuania are transgressed. It is Lithuania today. Who will it be tomorrow?

It is at a time when the Soviets need our help and cooperation more than at any other time, that we are not willing to stand for the basic principles that have brought us to the tables so that we enjoy the position which we have, which is not one just of strength, but of strength built upon a moral certainty that what we have represented not only is good for the United States but what is basic and undeniable to every single human being, every individual—the right of freedom.

AMENDMENT NO. 1569

(Purpose: Relating to the President's announced intention to submit to the Senate a trade agreement with the Soviet Union after the Summit)

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I submit this amendment on behalf of myself, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. HELMS, Mr. SPECTER, and others immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO], for himself, Mr. DECONCINI, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. HELMS, Mr. MURKOWKSI, Mr. SPECTER, and Mr. DIXON, proposes an amendment numbered 1569.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place insert the following:

The Senate finds that:

On March 11, 1990, the Supreme Council of the Republic of Lithuania declared the resumption of the independence it enjoyed from 1918 until its forcible occupation by the Soviet Union in 1940;

In response to that action, on April 17, the Soviet Union imposed economic sanctions against Lithuania by cutting back on the delivery of oil and natural gas;

The Soviet Union's economic sanctions have caused a great hardship on the people of Lithuania;

The Deputy United States Trade Representative on April 26 announced substantial agreement on a trade pact between the United States and the Soviet Union that would grant most-favored-nation status to the Soviet Union;

Such trade agreement and any implementing legislation must be approved by the Congress; and Implementation of such a package while the Soviets continue their economic sanctions against Lithuania would constitute implicit support for Soviet activities in Lithuania;

It is the sense of the Senate to urge the President not to submit any United States-Soviet trade agreement or enabling legislation thereto to the Senate for approval until at least:

(1) the Soviet Union has lifted its economic embargo against Lithuania, and

(2) the Soviet Union has entered into negotiations with the duly elected representatives of the Lithuanian people, with the intended result the Soviet recognition of the independence of the government of the Republic of Lithuania in an orderly and expeditious manner.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, why do I offer this amendment? I offer this amendment to send a signal to the Soviets that the Congress of the United States, and the Senate in particular, because it will call for Senate ratification as it relates to most-favored-nation status, that we are serious. And, secondly, to also indicate, hopefully to the administration, that they tell the Soviets that they will not be able to even submit this, that the Senate is very strong in its position. I would not like to see a situation where our President went down the line so far that he felt compelled to go forward, and then we had a situation where the President would actually submit the trade package, the most-favored-nation status, to this body and then put us in the position of whether or not we are going to turn our back on our leader. That is something I hope will never be the case.

I would like to see us act with one voice, in a uniform manner.

I hope that by adopting this amendment overwhelmingly, we would send a signal not only to the administration but to strengthen the administration in dealing with the Soviets, in letting them know that this is not just rhetoric, that we are serious, that there will be no most-favored-nation status conveyed upon them unless they follow the basic conditions which have been laid out in this amendment.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from New York for his initiative on this issue.

Mr. President, there is no doubt that President Bush is in a tough spot. He must show somehow United States support for Lithuania without contributing to the tension and ultimately diminishing the chances for independence. But there is a point when caution turns to acquiescence and American silence is interpreted as a green light for repression. President Bush said recently that he did not "want to make the wrong mistake." But inaction can be just as big a mistake as overreaction. As President Landsbergis pointed out, it was excessive caution at Munich that gave us the disastrous policy of appeasement in the 1930's.

The United States loudly proclaims its support for self-determination in Poland, Hungary, and the rest of Eastern Europe. But that is easy. After years of struggle, those countries have thrown off tyranny and are on the road to freedom. Lithuania's struggle is just beginning. Do we remain silent because the Baltic question poses a problem for Gorbachev? Are we afraid to slow down progress in some other area of United States-Soviet relations? Mr. President, we must stand for freedom always, not just when it is convenient.

Some may argue that Gorbachev has done so many good things that we can afford to wink at his intransigence in the Baltics and hope that he will come around later. What they overlook is that Mr. Gorbachev does not act because of a desire to accommodate the West. He acts in the best interests of the Soviet Union, and in many cases he has simply recognized reality. Reducing defense expenditures, negotiating arms control agreements, restructuring the Soviet economy, and pushing for a more open society are all things that serve the Soviet Union. Relinquishing control of Eastern Europe was a recognition of reality; the Soviet Union could no longer afford to maintain its hegemonic influence there.

Now I am hopeful that President Gorbachev will be convinced that Baltic independence, though it may be difficult, will also be beneficial to the Soviet Union in the long term. Benefits will accrue through better relations with the West and increased access to our markets and technology. The Soviet Union wants and needs increased trade with the United States and the rest of the industrialized West. It should be made clear to Gorbachev that improvement in our bilateral trade relationship is unlikely, given the present situation. This is where America has leverage.

Mr. President, U.S. policy cannot hinge on the political fortunes of a foreign leader, no matter how much we hope for his success. If we start down that path, we give Gorbachev veto power over our foreign policy. We cannot abandon our half-century commitments to our old friends, the Baltic nations, because it is inconvenient for our new found friend, President Gorbachev. Regardless of our actions, who knows he may not survive this crisis. If he does, he may not survive some future crisis, and if we sell out Lithuania now they may never get another chance. Our only option is to continue to insist on Baltic self-determination, and to make that position clear to the world.

Just as Gorbachev's Soviet policies will reflect Soviet goals and national interests, so must our decisions be based on what we view as best for America's national interest. We do not frame our arms control position or our stand in trade negotiations around what will help Gorbachev. We make the decisions we think will yield the outcome we desire. In this case our goal has long been self-determination for the subjugated peoples of the Baltic nations. Our decisions should reflect that goal.

A Washington Post editorial on April 25, 1990, correctly pointed out that the "danger in the United States' muted response so far is that it is susceptible to being interpreted as acquiescence, encouraging the Soviets to go farther." We must consider the effect of our being too mute on the Lithuanians. They must be reminded that we support their cause, freedom and independence, and will say so, and the Soviet leadership must be reminded that we will take appropriate steps to reinforce that cause as the situation evolves, and so we ought not be overly timid in saying so.

Mr. President, I support the amendment of the Senator and hope that it will be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, the President pro tempore, for his support. I know of his deep interest in this fight for freedom and his sending the kind of signal that I believe the free world must hear and the people of Lithuania particularly. They are wondering where we are. Where is our moral leadership? Have we abandoned them in their hour of need?

That is what they are wondering. They have not lost heart. I have asked President Landsbergis and he said the peoples' will is strong. But I think they have to share a question that many of us have asked: Why is it that we have not taken a more aggressive position as the United States?

Mr. President, I am pleased to add two original cosponsors, the Presiding Officer, Senator LIEBERMAN, and Senator KASTEN. I ask unanimous consent that their names be added as original cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. D'AMATO. There are some who asked me whether or not I would be willing to submit this amendment as it is to a voice vote. I think it is important that we have a rollcall vote on this amendment. I think it is important that we be recorded. I do not think we can be saying two things; that quietly we are saying we should or should not. I think people have to stand up, and I think it is important that in this country, in the United States of America, in this body, in the Senate of the United States, we be prepared to make our views known.

It would seem to me that if anything, we send a powerful message on behalf of freedom and we strengthen the administration's hand so that they can say—because Secretary Baker will be meeting with Mr. Shevardnadze in a matter of hours—look, you cannot continue this business. And if you continue the economic embargo, if you continue your aggressive tactics, then all that we have worked for—yes, the United States and the Soviets—will be lost. And it should be forfeited because we do not have the right to deny freedom to anyone, any country at any time.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second. There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, the suppression of Lithuania's long-held aspirations for self-determination and independence is a lost opportunity for President Gorbachev and President Bush alike. It's a lost opportunity for President Gorbachev to make progress on his commitment to radical reform. And it is a lost opportunity for President Bush to demonstrate where the United States stands on an issue of fundamental principle.

The Soviet Union is an economic basket case. Radical economic reform is essential to its long-term survival. But radical economic reform cannot be imposed from Moscow. It has to come from the people. Yet Gorbachev cannot mobilize grassroots support for painful measures like higher prices, bankruptcies, and unemployment by suppressing legitimate desires for greater autonomy. On the contrary, the tighter Moscow squeezes, the greater the alienation on the part of the Soviet peoples. That is the difference between Poland and the U.S.S.R. Poland has a political consensus on what kind of future the people want and the necessary steps to get there. The people support the government and endure hardship because they believe it will lead to a better life.

The Soviet people don't have this belief. Many of them believe Gorbachev is more interested in recentralizing control than in dispersing power to the people and winning the trust and consent to the governed. His embargo of Lithuania and his refusal to negotiate with the freely elected representatives of the Lithuanian people confirm this view. As one astute observer of the Soviet scene, Dimitri Simes, recently put it:

> The preservation of the empire through force is incompatible with perestroika. And that is what the Lithuanian crisis is all about: Gorbachev may temporarily succeed against the Lansbergis government, but other republics are waiting in line to demand their sovereignty. And it is easy to imagine a Moscow caught up with false hopes of empire at the expense of democratic reforms.

Gorbachev and his advisors may believe that forcing Lithuania to its knees is necessary to teach other republics a lesson. The problem is that from the standpoint of progress, it is the wrong lesson. It is a lesson from the Communist past that bodes ill for the prospect of a democratic future.

It is a lost opportunity for George Bush as well. We are entering an era where American influence will increasingly depend on economic power and moral persuasion, not military might. President Bush up to this date has lost an important opportunity both to uphold American principles such as democracy and self-determination and to promote Soviet progress.

To again quote Simes:

> In the end it is not up to us to save the Soviet Union in spite of itself. But neither is it in the American interest to make it easier for the Kremlin to suppress those very trends that could make the USSR a benign member of the international community. The real choice is not between perestroika and Lithuanian independence. Rather it is between the cause of Soviet democratization and saving the empire. On this issue, both Gorbachev and Bush find themselves on the wrong side of history.

It may not be too late to revive the opportunity. Hopefully, this expression of the Senate's views on where America should stand will both educate and embolden President Bush. The times demand leadership, and we must not be found wanting.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, several weeks ago the minority leader of the Senate, Senator DOLE, made a thoughtful statement about the way we sometimes do business around here.

Rather than spend time facing the tough issues, he said, we fall back on the last resort of the armchair lawmaker: sense-of-the-Senate resolutions.

Sometimes these resolutions are innocuous. Other times they are pernicious.

The amendment offered by my friend from New York is politically appealing. It is also pernicious.

Who wants to stand down here and vote against the freedom-loving people of Lithuania? Not me.

Who wants to stand down here and vote against a resolution that will undoubtedly be read as a green light to the heavy-handed policies of Mr. Gorbachev? Not me.

But I will oppose this amendment.

There are encouraging signs of progress between the Soviets and the Lithuanians. The intervention by the Germans and the French has lead both sides to hold out hope for compromise on Lithuanian independence.

If we are going to pass any sense-of-the-Senate resolutions, it should be to encourage these negotiations now underway.

This is the wrong time for the United States Senate to storm in and sacrifice the recently concluded United States-Soviet trade agreement to score domestic political points.

We need to be encouraging trade with the Soviet Union and other countries. We need to expand our markets and help the Soviet Union develop into a more reliable trading partner.

This is not some favor we are granting the Soviets. We are the world's largest debtor Nation. This will not be turned around by sense-of-the-Senate resolutions.

Let us vote on this resolution, if we must. But let the Senate be guided by common sense—and defeat this amendment.

WHY LITHUANIA NEEDS OUR HELP

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, it will not harm the United States relationship with the Soviet Union to pass this amendment; in fact, it will strengthen that relationship and put us in a stronger position to deal for peace.

The United States stands firm on the principle of freedom. For more than 40 years, we have never recognized the incorporation of the Baltic States into the territory of the Soviet Union. We still do not recognize the incorporation of the Baltic States into Soviet territory.

This amendment is precisely in accord with that policy. The people of Lithuania have voted in democratic elections to elect a free Parliament. That body, the first representative body in Lithuania in more than 40 years, voted to proclaim independence, and then sought negotiation to arrange a peaceful transfer of interests on both sides.

If we had recognized the new government of President Landsbergis immediately, it would not have changed that policy, nor would it have increased the possibility that the Soviet Union would take violent and bloody measures. It would simply have given United States approval to an honorable, decent, and just action by the Lithuanian people.

In recent days, I have noticed an attempt by some to blame the victim. How dare Lithuania state its legal position? How dare Lithuania insist that the seizure of its country by the Soviet Union had no legal basis? How dare Lithuanian be so rash as to demand its freedom at a time when the Western World has decided that Gorbachev is a nice man?

But why should we blame the victim? Why should the oppressed be blamed simply for the assertion of its rights? Doesn't Gorbachev's attempt to hold on to the ill-gotten gains of the Soviet Union demonstrate to us that the West holds less in common with him than some thought?

Mr. President, another accusation I have heard was that if we gave Lithuania any legal encouragement, we would tempt the Lithuanians to take rash actions that would give the Soviet Union the excuse for violent oppression.

Mr. President, that accusation is absurd. No one who has observed the statesmanlike, judicious, and nonviolent policy of President Landsbergis and his associates could honestly come to that conclusion. The simple assertion of just and proper rights could never, by itself, become the pretext for violent action by the Soviets. If any violence were to occur in Lithuania, the violence would have to be instigated and initiated by the Soviet Union itself.

In fact, just the opposite would occur. The Soviet Union would have been encouraged to negotiate peacefully. If the United States had immediately used its prestige to uphold the justice and reasonableness of the Lithuanian action, and encouraged our allies to concur, the Soviet Union would stand isolated in its brutal and unjust policy. The fact that the United States and the free world failed to stand up for the principles of freedom simply encouraged the Soviet Union to be intransigent and refuse to negotiate.

We should remember that Lithuania has not refused to negotiate. It has refused to negotiate only about the central question, its independence. Everything else appears to be negotiable. The Lithuanians realize that it may take years to make the transition, given the links between the Soviet economy and Lithuania. But sovereignty should not and cannot be negotiable.

And now we see what is happening. The laws that Gorbachev wants enforced were not even in force when Lithuania took its action. The Soviet Union passed an ex post facto law demanding new terms and conditions for independence. And now it is taking actions to strangle the hope for independence, and force the Lithuanians to abrogate their act of independence. The policy of going slow and doing nothing—even in principle—will result in further repressive measures that can only make our relationship with the Soviet Union more difficult.

No nation that bases its policy on principle should have cause to regret that action. It is entirely false to maintain that the choice is between freedom in Lithuania and an improved relationship with the Soviet Union. That is a false division. The truth is that there can be no relationship with the Soviet Union that is based on reality unless Lithuania obtains its freedom.

The measure proposed here today does not give diplomatic recognition to the Landsbergis government. It simply puts the Senate on record as opposing the proposed United States-Soviet Trade Agreement at least until the Kremlin terminates its economic embargo of Lithuania. It is a measure that is in the great tradition of the American people. And it may even give the Lithuanians a breathing space to negotiate for practical independence on free and equal terms.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE ON D'AMATO AMENDMENT

Mr. SANFORD. I think this is the worst kind of legislation, a "Sense of the Senate" resolution that illustrates a meddlesome involvement in foreign policy with no hearing and no thoughtful consideration, offering gratuitous advice on a delicate diplomatic subject. This kind of resolution has no force of law, but it has the capability of creating great mischief.

There have been suggestions that this kind of off-the-cuff resolution be restricted by requiring a substantial number of cosponsors, or the approval by the appropriate committee. This resolution is another reminder that such a rule change is needed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it seems to me it might save time, if it would be agreed to by all Senators and the leadership, if we could postpone this vote temporarily. There is, I believe, one more amendment that is going to be called up. May I ask the distinguished Senator from Colorado, Mr. WIRTH, if it is his feeling that there will be a rollcall vote on his amendment?

Mr. WIRTH. I do not at this point know. I think we should just play it out and see where that goes. I think we are at this time pretty close to getting to that point.

I wonder if the distinguished Senator, the leader, and other Senators would agree to postponing this rollcall vote until immediately following the rollcall vote on final passage so they can be back to back.

Mr. D'AMATO. Certainly.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I ask that the pending amendment be temporarily laid aside, and the two leaders can determine the cycle of when they want to have this rollcall vote. It seems to me it would be well if it could be immediately before the final passage so that they can be back to back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage so that will be understood as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senate Republican leader, Mr. DOLE.

HOUSING GUARANTEES FOR SOVIET JEWS IN ISRAEL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to take a few moments to discuss one important provision in the bill, dealing with housing and infrastructure guarantees for Soviet Jews resettling in Israel.

I have studied this problem and this provision. I believe that, on balance, it is in the United States interest to approve these housing guarantees.

I was in Israel 2 weeks ago. My visit there, and my talks with israel's leaders, reflect the very special relationship we have with Israel. We provide a great deal of support to Israel—as we should.

It is in our interest—by fostering stability in the vital Middle East region. It is in our interest, too—because Israel remains the region's principal democracy. As leader of the free world, America must always stand clearly and unequivocally beside any free nation threatened, as Israel is, by outside hostile forces.

Nonetheless, there are serious questions that should be raised about our overall aid relationship with Israel. I have spoken about some of those questions previously.

One key question is whether Israel has in place the right kind of market-based economic policies to make the most effective use of our aid—whether that aid is direct, or, like these housing guarantees, indirect.

Around the world we are pushing nations that receive our aid to practice austerity, to rely on free market mechanisms, to do away with practices such as irrational subsidies of industry and wage indexing.

It is reasonable to ask whether Israel is moving in the directions that we would like to see it move in economic policy. Senator BOSCHWITZ, for one, has pressed the Israeli Government hard on the need for reform of its overall economic policies. In the course of debate on this bill, Senators BOSCHWITZ and HUMPHREY have raised specific questions about Israeli policy in the housing field, which would impact on the effectiveness of the guarantees.

I think it is worthwhile putting in the RECORD—and I ask unanimous consent to do so—the executive summary of a study done at the Hoover Institution at Stanford University. It was done by a prominent economist named Alvin Rabushka. This study was brought to my attention by Senator SYMMS.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SCORECARD ON THE ISRAELI ECONOMY: A REVIEW OF 1989

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE SCOREBOARD

Before rating the making of economic policy in Israel in 1989 and summarizing the performance of the Israeli economy, it is important to describe the entity that we call the Government of Israel. A pile of disconnected parts does not make a machine. Similarly the various units of the Government of Israel do not constitute a coherent political system. The Government of Israel consists of several parts that often work at longgerheads with each other: the cabinet, with its various ministries and minions of bureaucrats controlled alternately by leaders from the Likud and Labor Parties; the key committees in the Knesset (Israel's legislature), especially the Finance committee; and the Bank of Israel, indirectly controlled by the Ministry of Finance and the cabinet. For example, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir heads the Likud Party, but he has little influence on econonic policy. Economic issues fall to his colleagues in the Ministries of Economic Planning, Industry and Trade, and Housing, among others. Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance Shimon Peres, head of the Labor party, is the key player in Israel's economic policy-making theater. A source of high drama is the recurrent feuding between himself and Likud Minister of Industry and Trade Ariel Sharon. It is no surprise that Israel's highly fragmented government makes haphazard, uncoordinated, and often-times contradictory economic policy decisions. The "system" is not really capable of making comprehensive, coordinated policy and then systematically implementing it.

In addition to the formal institutions of government, indirect participants in the decision-making process include the General Federation of Labor (Histadrut), which, despite its close association with the Labor Party, often resists fellow Laborite Shimon Peres's Finance Ministry measures, the Manufacturers' Association, the Chamber of Commerce, and Labor and Likud Party rank-and-file. The economic interest groups frequently tug and pull in opposite directions. On some issues, the Minister of Finance may win the day; on others, the Minister of Industry and Trade; and so on for the Bank of Israel and other units of Government. From time to time the Knesset Finance Committee will reject proposals submitted by the ten-member Ministers Committee on Economic Affairs. Therefore, rating the performance of the Government of Israel becomes an exercise in evaluating the decisions made by the relevant piece of the decision-making puzzle in what passes for the economic policy-making process. In the academic spirit, we assign letter grades of A, B, C, D, and F for superior, good, satisfactory, poor, and unsatisfactory on each dimension of economic policy.

BUDGETARY POLICY

Budgetary Policy receives a letter grade of "D−," which is on the borderline between poor and unsatisfactory. The Government failed to attain its minor policy initiatives of introducing user charges for secondary school tuition and health services. (It will doubtless try again in 1990.) To its credit, the Finance Ministry managed to keep actual outlays closely in line with budgetary estimates, no small feat. However, the forecast deficit of NIS 1.66 billion set forth in the January budget statement ended the year with estimates ranging as high NIS 6 billion, equal to 8-9 percent of GNP. This deficit should be set in the context of a budget surplus equivalent to 4 percent of GDP in fiscal year 1986/1987, a modest surplus valued at 0.4 percent of GDP in fiscal year 1987/1988, and a total deficit of 3 percent in fiscal year 1988/1989. Overall, the Government made little progress in using its spending authority to introduce growth-oriented reforms into the economy.

TAX POLICY

Tax policy receives a letter grade of "D," for poor performance. The low grade of "D" signifies the Government's confusion over the concept of "net taxation," which subtracts transfers from gross taxes to arrive at a peculiar measure of the tax burden that completely fails to take into account individual incentives to work, save and invest. (Chapter 2 on taxation explains the faulty reasoning that underpins this concept.) The low grade also criticizes the Government's anti-growth decision to impose a 3 percent surcharge on upper-income Israelis, thereby increasing the top marginal rate of income tax from 48 to 51 percent on annual taxable income over $48,000. The increase in the top marginal rate puts Israel in direct opposition to a global trend that has seen marginal rates come down sharply in the United States, the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, and more than 50 countries in every corner of the globe during the latter years of the 1980s. By raising the top rate from 48 to 51 percent, Israel sent the world a signal that it was not serious about encouraging work, saving or investment, because it planned to tax away a higher share of each individual's earnings. The surcharge also reversed course from the important tax reform of 1987 in which Minister of Finance Moshe Nissim pushed through a reduction in the top marginal rate of tax from 60 to 48 percent, a genuine tax-rate cut.

Several positive measures kept Israel from an unsatisfactory grade in tax policy. First, the 15 percent levy on imported services was cut in half in April and phased out altogether later in the year. Second, the Ministry of Finance proposed to reduce corporate taxation from a combined 45 percent rate to an overall 40 percent rate by 1992. Third, customs duties were lowered, but rate reductions were required by the terms of the U.S.-Israel Free Trade Agreement and the Israeli accord with the European Community.

In aggregate terms, tax revenues fell short of the January budget estimates by about NIS 2.5 billion. The shortfall was due primarily to reduced economic activity, which diminished both income tax and customs collections.

MONEY AND CAPITAL MARKETS

Money and capital markets receives a grade of "C−," largely on the basis of the Bank of Israel's success in carrying out further liberalization of the country's capital markets. Its conduct of monetary policy, consisting largely of targeting interest rates either to influence the level of economic activity and real wage rates, or preserve foreign exchange, was unsatisfactory. In the face of sharply rising unemployment, the Bank of Israel failed to arrest the rate of inflation, which increased from 16.4 percent in 1988 to surpass 20 percent in 1989. It watched the Minister of Finance implement currency devaluations in January and June. It allowed the banks to charge borrowers usurious rates of interest as high as 60 percent during early 1989 and succeeded only in forcing the rates down to about 30 percent, still usurious, during the latter half of the year. Depositors received negative interest on shekel accounts.

No progress was made during the year in selling the banks to private investors. The Government of Israel is the majority shareholder of all the country's domestic banks, but was unwilling or unable to persuade the banks' controlling shareholders to agree to equalize voting rights, which is a necessary precondition for privatization. Throughout the year it threatened legislation but the cabinet only approved a bill to be sent to the Knesset in late November after a year of unnecessary wrangling.

The bright spot was the progress made in further deregulating the capital markets. Retirement funds were accorded greater freedom in their investments away from compulsory holding of government bonds. Mutual funds were given permission to make partial allocations in foreign equities. Restrictions on the size of mortgage loans were eliminated. New foreign currency accounts were established which carry interest in the currency of the depositor's choice. Israelis were permitted to pay for small amounts of imported goods and services with a local international credit card. Finally, the compulsory purchase of government bonds by retirement funds was reduced from 75 percent to 72 percent. The funds were authorized to invest the remaining 28 percent in corporate bonds, equities, real estate, and banks deposits, which broadened the choices available in 1988.

BUSINESS

Grading business activity requires computing an average that takes into account policy developments that affected the privatization of state-owned enterprises (SOEs), the Histadrut sector, monopolies, and general business regulation. Overall, business receives a gradfe of "B−," which is largely derived from the successful privatization of the Jerusalem Economic Corporation, the progress made in taking Israel Chemicals Ltd. to final sale, assuming that the opposition of some members of the Knesset Finance Committee can be overcome, and the steady progress achieved in preparing nearly a dozen more SOEs for sale, either to private investors or offered to the public through the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange. Also, the relatively high grade of B− reflects partial deregulation of the gas and oil markets, achieved by the Minister of Energy over the extant oil and gas cartels.

Dragging down what might have been an even higher grade was the deepening crisis of the Histadrut sector, typified in the enormous operating losses and huge internal and external debts of its major industrial flagship, Koor Industries, Ltd., a conglomerate consisting of hundreds of firms and thousands of employees. Koor began the year in financial trouble and ended the year on the verge of foreclosure. So long as the Histadrut is both employer and employee at Koor, there seems little likelihood that Koor or any other part of its industrial empire will ever become profitable enterprises, able to stand on their own feet without government subsidies, bailouts or protection from competition.

Finally, the Government of Israel did little in 1989 to improve the plight of the small businessman or entrepreneur by eliminating the impediments, discriminatory treatment and bureaucratic obstacles that frustrate new business and job creation.

PRICE CONTROLS

Price controls receive a letter grade of 'D−", signifying a barely passing mark. The year began with the likely prospects of a letter grade of "F," because in the wake of the devaluations of the shekel on December 27, 1988, and January 3, 1989, the Government imposed price controls in January on a list of products that extended government price supervision from 20 percent of products within Israel at the end of December 1988 to approximately 50 percent of products within Israel. The saving grace of the extension of price controls was that the ordinance expired on April 30, 1989, leaving price supervision on the list of products that was under price control the previous December.

In general, the "D−" grade is also assigned to the view held by government officials that prices of numerous products and services have to be controlled because Israel is a small country and monopolies would take a advantage of consumers without government regulation. However, this is true only because Israel imposes numerous tariff and non-tariff barriers to the free import of goods and services. In free-trading Singapore, with a population of only 2.65 million, virtually all prices are free to reflect least-cost world levels. The application of free-trade principles to Israel would eliminate the requirement and justification for virtually all price controls. Until Israel moves significantly in the direction of free trade in goods, services, and money, the area of price controls will continue to receive a very low grade.

The year's only positive note was the adoption of an administrative measure to facilitate the process of price increases for some 18–20 categories of goods. Manufacturers would no longer require advance approval to raise prices effective September 29, 1989. Instead, they could post notice of prospective price increases, which would automatically take effect within a designated period of time unless vetoed by the interministerial price committee.

LABOR MARKETS

Labor market policy receives the grade of "F", which stems from the country's continued domination by a single labor union, the General Federation of Workers, or Histadrut. Strikes and threatened strikes throughout the year disrupted economic activity and interfered with the Government's ability to make major strides in putting progrowth policies into place. Histadrut bears full responsibility for compelling Minister of Finance Shimon Peres to raise the top marginal rate of income tax from 48 to 51 percent as part of the package deal negotiated between Histadrut and the Treasury in February, in which Histadrut agreed to accept a cut in real wages for its members. But Histadrut also forced the Government to issue special government bonds to Histadrut's pension funds that yielded a rate of return of 6.2 percent, compared with a market rate of 2–2.5 percent by year's end. Histadrut extorted other benefits for its members as part of the wage accord. It successfully resisted the imposition of user charges for secondary school tuition and health services, even for very wealthy people, as the Knesset refused the Treasury's policy requests in these areas. Meanwhile, Histadrut's own business sector continued to weaken as its flagship Koor Industries disclosed staggering losses.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

International trade receives a grade of "C−", which is due primarily to lower tax and tariff barriers to the import of goods and services. Partially offsetting those improvements and their potential benefit to Israeli consumers was the application of a wider range of nontariff barriers.

A correctly-valued exchange rate is also critical to international trade. Given that Israel's inflation rates exceed those of its main trading partners, the devaluations of the shekel restored the competitiveness of Israeli exports, which means that the tax on exports due to an overvalued currency was reduced. Ideally, the Government should strive to maintain stable internal prices that would allow it to maintain a stable exchange rate and vice-versa. But unless the Government makes an unshakable, ironclad commitment to price and exchange-rate stability, it will be forced periodically to devalue the shekel to prevent currency overvaluation. Finally, the Government was unable to attract significant foreign direct investment.

On balance, 1989 was a dismal year for the Israeli economy. Most economic indicators signalled a steadily weakening economy throughout the course of the year. Nor did the Government make truly substantial progress in adopting economic policies to lay the foundation for a renewal of long-run growth.

A STATISTICAL SUMMARY OF ISRAEL'S ECONOMIC PERFORMANCE IN 1989

The highlights of the economy's performance during 1989 appear below:

Real gross domestic product (GDP) grew in the range of 1.1 percent.

Private consumption per capita fell 3.5 percent.

Fixed investment declined 3 percent. Investment in machinery and equipment fell 2.9 percent.

Industrial output fell 4.8 percent during the first three quarters.

Consumer prices increased from a rate of 16.4 percent in calendar 1988 to a rate exceeding 20 percent in 1989.

Unemployment rose from the 1988 average of 6.5 percent to an average rate of unemployment over the second and third quarters of 1989 exceeding 9 percent.

The balance-of-payments current account registered a surplus of $1 billion due to falling imports and strong export performance beginning with the second quarter. Exports rose at 10.6 percent while imports remained stable in dollar terms (declining 7 percent in volume terms), thus reducing the trade deficit from $5.3 billion in 1988 to $3.9 billion in 1989. The dark side is that the failure of capital imports to rise bodes ill for future growth and also reduces customs revenue.

Domestic defense spending declined 2.6 percent, despite expenditures necessitated by the intifada. Defense imports fell 30 percent.

Industrial profitability declined from an average return on equity as a percentage of industrial output of 3.6 percent during 1986–1988 to 2 percent during 1989.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the study represents a report card on Israeli economic policies, from a free market perspective. As Senators who read this summary, or get the original study, will see—Israel does not get very high grades from Professor Rabushka: Budget, D−; taxation, D; price controls, D−; labor, F; and so forth.

I commend this study to the attention of all Senators, as we consider this and all other aid to Israel.

In any case, for very good reason, we do provide Israel nearly $4 billion—not the $3+ billion usually cited—in aid every year. That includes direct aid and side benefits. Some of those side benefits are not widely understood by the American public—perhaps not even by some Members of Congress. So I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD two studies done by the Congressional Research Service [CRS] on this issue. They give a good rundown on our total aid to Israel, direct and indirect.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 8, 1988.

(Updated March 8, 1989.)

To: ——— ———.

From: Clyde R. Mark, specialist in Middle Eastern Affairs, Foreign Affairs and National Defense Division.

Subject: U.S. Laws that Benefit Israel.

In your letter of January 19, 1988, you requested a list of economic and financial benefits Israel enjoys from the United States, the legislation authorizing those benefits, and the value, if available, of the benefits. The following list is divided into three parts: I. Foreign Assistance: Economic Support Fund, Foreign Military Sales, Other Programs, Other General Assistance; II. Economic; and III. Military/Political

Not every passage in law benefiting Israel is included in the list. Some have been repealed and others are no longer relevant. For example, the statement that the United States should be responsive to Israel's defense needs (Sec. 28 of P.L. 95–384 (92 Stat 730), September 26, 1978), was overtaken by the supplemental assistance in 1979, or in another example, the ban on aid to Egypt (Section 620(p) of the Foreign Assistance Act) was dropped in 1974 after Egypt cooperated with the Kissinger "shuttle diplomacy."

I. FOREIGN ASSISTANCE

Economic Support Fund

Cash Transfer.—Economic Support Fund (ESF) assistance is given to Israel as a government-to-government cash transfer not tied to any particular program, with no A.I.D. accounting as to how the money is used. Israel established a separate bank account for ESF funds in accordance with Title II of P.L. 99–591, and does provide A.I.D. with specific requests for expenditures from the account. Israel provides an annual letter to A.I.D. with assurances that Israel will import from the United States non-defense goods valued at an amount at least equal to the ESF assistance for that year.

Legislation.—Sec. 532(b)(2) of P.L. 95–384 (92 Stat 734) September 26, 1978; repeated in subsequent years.

Value.—$1.2 billion in FY 1987, $1.2 billion in FY 1988, and $1.2 billion in FY 1989: from 1979 through 1989, Israel received $12.3 billion in ESF cash transfers.

Early Transfer.—In 1982, Israel requested that U.S. aid for FY 1984 be made available within the first quarter of the fiscal year (since changed to the first 30 days of the fiscal year) to allow Israel to meet immediate budgetary needs.

Legislation.—Title II of P.L. 98–473 (98 Stat 1890), October 12, 1984, stated that ESF should be made available before January 1, 1985; Sec. 202(a)(2) of P.L. 99–83 (99 Stat 211), August 8, 1985, said the aid should be transferred within the first 30 days of the fiscal year; repeated in subsequent years.

Value.—According to A.I.D. testimony submitted to the House Appropriations Committee in 1988, Israel invests the lump-sum payment in U.S. Treasury bonds to earn interest on the funds until they are used. (See testimony before the Foreign Operations Subcommittee on March 17, 1988, in U.S. Congress. House of Representatives. Committee on Appropriations. Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations for 1989. Hearings, Part 3, 100th Congress, 2nd session. Washington, U.S. Gov't. Print. Off., 1988. p. 404-405.) In addition, if one assumes that the United States borrows funds for the lumpsum transfer, the early payment costs the United States between $40 and $60 million per year in interest. According to testimony submitted to the House Foreign Affairs Committee in 1985, the cost for FY 1986 and FY 1987 was expected to be $66 million per year. (See U.S. Congress. House of Representatives. Committee on Foreign Affairs. Foreign Assistance Legislation for Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987. Hearings and Markup, Part 3. 99th Congress, 1st session. Washington, U.S. Gov't. Print. Off., 1985. p. 437-438.)

ESF Linked to Debt Repayment.—Israel's ESF assistance from the United States should equal or exceed the amount Israel owes to the United States in repayment for past debts.

Legislation.—Sec. 534 of P.L. 98-473 (98 Stat 1902), October 12, 1984, repeated in subsequent years.

Value.—Israel received $1.2 billion in ESF for each FY 1988 and 1989, and owed the United States $1.18 billion for FY 1988, and $1.26 billion for FY 1989, according to the Israeli government request for assistance submitted to the United States in January 1988. The annual amount Israel owes to the United States will decrease following a refinancing of the debt. See Debt Refinancing below.

Foreign Military Sales

Loan Repayment Waiver.—Repayment for all or part of the Foreign Military Sales (FMS) loans to Israel is waived, meaning the loans are grants.

Legislation.—Sec. 4 of P.L. 93-199, December 26, 1973; repeated in subsequent years.

Value.—Israel received $1.8 billion in military grants in FY 1987, $1.8 billion in military grants in FY 1988, and $1.8 billion in military grants for FY 1989: from 1974 through 1989, Israel received $16.4 billion in military loans that do not have to be repaid.

FMS Drawdown.—Under an Office of Management and Budget policy, FMS loans and grants (foreign loans) available to a country are drawn down in equal amounts. Israel has been granted a waiver to the practice, allowing it to draw down the grants before the loans.

Legislation.—Sec. 531 of P.L. 98-473 (98 Stat 1901), October 12, 1984; repeated in subsequent years.

Value.—Unknown; saved Israel principal and interest payments by delaying loans until grants were depleted, or until interest rates declined.

FMS for Research and Development in the United States.—Under existing practice, FMS funds are used for purchase of goods and services in the United States, and are not used to finance research and development (R&D). Israel is allowed to finance R&D in the United States with FMS funds. The waiver originated with Israel's development of the Lavi aircraft. The Lavi was canceled in September 1987, but the waiver was continued in FY 1989.

Legislation.—Sec. 101(b)(3) of P.L. 98-151 (97 Stat. 969), November 14, 1983; repeated in subsequent years.

Value.—Congress earmarked $150 million for FY 1987 and $150 million for FY 1988: from FY 1984 through FY 1988, Congress earmarked a total of $900 million in FMS funds for Lavi R&D in the United States. The Foreign Assistance Appropriations for FY 1989, P.L. 100-461, signed October 1, 1988, earmarked $150 million of the FMS grants for R&D for advanced fighter aircraft.

FMS for R&D and Procurement in Israel.—Section 42 of the Arms Export Control Act states that FMS funds should be used for procurement in the United States. In 1983, Israel requested that FMS funds be transferred to Israel for procurement for the Lavi and other military purchases. The Lavi was canceled in September 1987.

Legislation.—Sec. 101(b)(3) of P.L. 98-151 (97 Stat. 969), November 14, 1983; repeated in subsequent years.

Value.—Congress earmarked $300 million for FY 1987, and $400 million for FY 1988: from FY 1984 through FY 1988, Congress earmarked $1.5 billion in FMS funds for Lavi and other procurement in Israel. Following cancellation of the Lavi in September 1987, Congress continued to earmark funds for procurement in Israel. P.L. 100-461 of October 1, 1988, set aside $400 million of FMS grants for defense procurement in Israel.

Cash Flow Financing.—Beginning in 1974, the U.S. allowed a few countries making multiyear purchases of defense articles and services from the United States with FMS to commit only that portion of their FMS loans that was required to pay the amount due in the current year rather than set aside the full amount of the purchase. Israel applies cash flow financing to its FMS purchases in the U.S.

Legislation.—None.

Value.—Israel can buy other equipment with the FMS funds that would have been committed to pay for multiyear purchases. Cash flow financing implies that the U.S. will guarantee future FMS levels to pay for the deferred payments.

FMS Extended Amortization.—In practice, most countries have 12 years in which to repay FMS loans. Israel and a few other countries were granted a 10-year grace period, during which only a reduced interest payment was made, followed by a 20-year repayment period.

Legislation.—None.

Value.—Delayed repayment allowed Israel to utilize its funds for other purposes during the grace period, and then repay loans in deflated dollars.

FMS Credits for Sophisticated Weapons.—Israel is excluded from a ban on underdeveloped countries using FMS credits to purchase sophisticated weapons systems, such as missile systems and jet aircraft.

Legislation.—Sec. 4 of P.L. 90-629 (82 Stat 1322), October 22, 1968. (See 22 U.S.C. 2754.)

Other Programs

Refugee Resettlement.—Congress earmarked funds from the Migration and Refugee Assistance account for resettling Soviet and East European Jewish refugees. Later, the refugee definition was expanded to include Ethiopian and other Jews, and the use of the funds limited to Israel because many of the Jewish refugees preferred to migrate to other countries.

Legislation.—Sec. 101(b) of P.L. 92-352 (86 Stat 489), July 13, 1972, repeated in subsequent years.

Value.—Israel received $25 million resettling Jewish refugees in FY 1987, $25 million in FY 1988, and $28 million in FY 1989: from FY 1973 through FY 1989, Israel received $394.5 million for Jewish refugee resettlement.

American Schools and Hospitals Abroad.—In 1969, Congress named 6 Israeli institutions that were to receive ASHA funds. Previously, selection of recipients was left to the Department of State. The practice of naming the institutions was dropped after a few years, but Israeli institutions continue to receive ASHA funding.

Legislation.—P.L. 91-175 (83 Stat 805), December 20, 1969, earmarked funds for Israeli institutions listed in Senate Report 91-603.

Value.—Israeli institutions have received over $80 million in grants through the ASHA program from 1967 to 1988.

Energy and Selected Development.—Section 106 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, provides funds for energy resource and other selected development. Section 106(f) provides funds for cooperative projects among Israel, the United States, and developing countries; in effect, supporting Israel's foreign aid program.

Legislation.—Sec. 101 of P.L. 98-473 (98 Stat 1888), October 12, 1984, repeated in subsequent years. (See 22 U.S.C. 2151d.)

Value.—Israel received $5 million in FY 1987, $5 million in FY 1988, and $5 million in FY 1989: Israel has received $22 million in grants from FY 1985 through FY 1989, for selected development projects in third countries.

Desalting Plant.—The United States and Israel shared the cost of a prototype seawater desalting plant to produce fresh water and electrical power, (Section 219 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended).

Legislation.—Sec. 104 of P.L. 91-175 (83 Stat 806), December 30, 1969. (See 22 U.S.C. 2179.)

Value.—Israel received $20 million in grants.

Air Base Construction.—To facilitate Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula following the Camp David agreements, the United States agreed to assist in constructing two air bases in Israel to replace two air bases left behind in Sinai.

Legislation.—Sec. 3 of P.L. 96-35 (93 Stat 89), July 30, 1979. (See 22 U.S.C. 2349, 2349a, 2349b, 3401.)

Value.—$800 million in grants.

Housing Guarantees.—Section 221 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, provides U.S. funds for loan guarantees for investors constructing new housing in foreign countries.

Legislation.—Sec. 105 of P.L. 91-175 (83 Stat 805), December 30, 1969. (See 22 U.S.C. 2183, which earmarks $25 million for Israel for FY 1982.)

Value.—Israel received $200 million in housing guarantees between 1972 and 1980.

Regional Cooperation.—Section 202(c) of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985 (P.L. 99-83), states that it is the policy of the United States to support Middle East peace by financing scientific and technical cooperative development projects among Israel, Egypt, and other nations.

Legislation.—Sec. 8 of P.L. 96-35 (93 Stat 92), July 20, 1979, stated that it was the sense of Congress to create the program, and Sec. 8(c) of P.L. 96-92 (93 Stat 701), October 29, 1979, created the regional cooperation section; funding repeated in subsequent years. (See 22 U.S.C. 3406.)

Value.—From 1979 through 1989, about $42 million has been obligated or requested to fund the regional cooperation. Israel's share of the $42 million is not known.

Regional Cooperation Scholarships.—Part of the funds earmarked for Regional Cooperation (See above) were set aside to finance scholarships for Arab students studying in Israel and Israeli students studying in Arab countries (also called Arab-Israeli Peace Scholarships). The earmark was established in 1987 and repealed in 1988.

Legislation.—Sec. 564 of P.L. 100-202, December 22, 1987; Section 564 was repealed by Section 558 of P.L. 100-461 of October 1, 1988.

Value.—$500,000 for Israeli students studying in Arab countries and $500,000 for Arab students studying in Israel.

Binational Foundations.—The purpose of the four U.S.-Israel binational foundations—agriculture, industrial development, science, and education—is to foster cooperation between Israelis and Americans. Israel and the United States contribute equal amounts to fund the programs.

Legislation.—None.

Value.—U.S. contributions to the foundations: $1.5 million to the U.S.-Israel Education Foundation in 1956, and an additional $5 million in 1985; $30 million to the U.S.-Israel Binational Science Foundation in 1972, and an additional $20 million in 1985; $30 million to the U.S.-Israel Binational Industrial Research and Development Foundation in 1977, and an additional $25 million in 1984; and $40 million to the U.S.-Israel Binational Agricultural Research and Development Fund in 1977, and an additional $15 million in 1985.

Other General Assistance

Open-Ended Authorization.—The President was authorized to transfer to Israel aircraft and equipment to maintain and protect the aircraft as may be necessary.

Legislation.—Sec. 501 of P.L. 91-441 (84 Stat 909), October 7, 1970; extended by Sec. 807 of P.L. 95-79 (91 Stat 323), July 30, 1977; expired 1979.

Supplemental Assistance.—Israel received supplmental assistance after the 1973 war, after signing the 1979 peace treaty with Egypt, and for economic reforms in 1985.

Legislation.—P.L. 93-199 (87 Stat 836), December 26, 1973; P.L. 96-35 (93 Stat 90), July 20, 1979; Sec. 208 of P.L. 99-83 (99 Stat 213), August 8, 1985.

Value.—$2.2 billion in 1973, $3 billion in 1979, and $1.5 billion in 1985.

Multiyear Assistance Commitment.—According to press reports, Israel has sought commitments from the United States for future aid levels. Officials at the Israeli embassy confirm that such requests have been made and state that Israel has received U.S. assurances of minimum aid levels for future years. U.S. Office of Management and Budget officials state that no multi-year aid commitments are made, but that aid levels may be "straightlined" (projected at the same rate as the current year) for planning purposes and that some people may misconstrue the straightlining as a commitment.

Legislation.—None.

Assistance Conditions.—There are few conditions placed on U.S. aid to Israel, but other nations do have conditions attached to their U.S. aid. For example, aid to Egypt is conditioned on continued Egyptian adherence to the Camp David Agreements and on implementing economic reforms.

Legislation.—Sec. 1206 of P.L. 99-83 (99 Stat 190), August 8, 1985, includes the peace effort condition, and Sec. 202(b)(3) of P.L. 99-83 includes the economic reforms provision.

II. ECONOMIC

Debt Reform.—The United States will guarantee loans from private institutions to be used to refinance U.S. Government military loans made at 10 percent or more interest. Israel owes the United States about $10 billion, of which about $8 billion were military loans. Of the $8 billion in military loans, about $6 billion were made at rates of 10 percent or more. According to press accounts, Israel refinanced about $5 billion of its military loans in 1988.

Legislation.—Foreign Military Sales Debt Reform section of P.L. 100-202, December 22, 1987.

Value.—According to press accounts, Israel will save about $150 million per year in debt service payments by refinancing its military loans.

Free Trade Area.—In 1981, Israel requested negotiations with the United States to eliminate trade barriers between the two countries. In 1983, Israel and the United States agreed to establish a Free Trade Area to eliminate trade barriers over a ten year period. Congress passed implementing legislation to allow the agreement to enter into force.

Legislation.—Title IV of P.L. 98-573 (98 Stat 2948), October 30, 1984, authorized the President to negotiate the agreement, and P.L. 99-47 (99 Stat 82), June 11, 1985, implemented the agreement. (See 19 U.S.C. 2112, and 19 U.S.C. 2518.)

Value: Unknown.

Non-NATO Ally.—The Defense Authorization bill of 1987 added Section 27(j)(1) to the Arms Export Control Act to give the President authority to enter into agreements with non-NATO countries on the same basis as NATO countries for cooperative development of defense weapons. The Conference Report (House Report 99-1001) accompanying the bill stated that the Congress intended for Israel to be one of the non-NATO countries eligible for cooperative development projects. Non-NATO status also will benefit Israel in bidding for U.S. defense contracts and in buying U.S. defense equipment and services.

Legislation: Sec. 1103(a)(2)(D) of P.L. 99-661 (100 Stat 3816), November 14, 1986, added subsection (j)(1) to Section 27 of the AECA: Section 1105(f) of P.L. 99-661 called for an annual report from the Secretaries of State and Defense naming Non-NATO allies; on February 2, 1987, the Secretary of State informed the House Foreign Affairs Committee by letter that Israel was designated a non-NATO ally.

Value.—Unknown.

Strategic Defense Initiative.—Israel and the United States signed a Memorandum of Understanding on May 6, 1986, providing for Israeli involvement in SDI. According to the Washington Jewish Week of November 13, 1986, Israel and the United States signed contracts in November 1986, providing for Israeli research on an anti-tactical ballistic missile (ATBM) as part of the SDI research. Israel seeks U.S. cooperation in developing the "Arrow" missile as an ATBM to counter Soviet-built SS-21 missiles reported to be in Syria and Soviet-built Frog and Scud missiles in several Arab arsenals.

Legislation.—Sec. 212 of P.L. 99-661 (100 Stat 3816), November 14, 1986, earmarks $50 million of the $3.2 billion SDI research, development, test, and evaluation funds for ATBM R&D.

Value.—According to Defense News of December 21, 1987, "Arrow" development will cost $200 million per year for the next 3 years, and the U.S. will pay 80% of the cost and Israel will pay 20% (or $40 million per year). Defense News also said that the U.S.-Israel ATBM agreement allowed Israel to pay 10% (or $4 million per year) of its share with FMS funds.

Arab Boycott.—U.S. law forbids U.S. companies or individuals from complying with the Arab boycott of Israel.

Legislation.—Section 8 of the Export Administration Act of 1979, P.L. 96-72 (93 Stat 503), September 29, 1979.

Value.—Unknown.

Alaskan Oil.—Section 28(u) of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 prohibits the export of Alaskan oil. An exception to the prohibition is contained in Section 7(d)(3) of the Export Administration Act of 1979, which states that countries signing bilateral oil supply agreements with the United States before June 25, 1979, may purchase Alaskan oil. Israel signed a bilateral oil supply agreement with the United States on June 21, 1979. The agreement, the only U.S. bilateral oil supply agreement, states that Israel may buy U.S. domestically produced oil if Israel cannot get oil from other sources. Thus far, Israel has been able to get oil on the international market, and has not implemented the agreement.

Legislation.—Sec. 7(d)(3) of P.L. 96-72 (93 Stat 503), September 29, 1979.

Value.—Unknown.

FMS Offsets.—Foreign countries "offset" the cost of military equipment purchased from the United States by selling component parts to the United States for final assembly in the equipment. For example, Israel produces the rudder for F-16 aircraft purchased from the United States with FMS funds.

Legislation.—None.

Value.—According to press accounts, Israel receives about $150 million per year in offsets.

FMS Third Country Sales.—Israel has requested, but not yet received, permission to sell Israeli-made military equipment to third countries that would pay Israel with U.S. contributed FMS funds. Section 42 of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2791) states that FMS funds should be spent in the U.S. for U.S.-produced defense articles and services. A third country would seek a waiver from the Section 42 restriction that would allow it to use FMS funds to pay Israel for Israeli produced weapons.

Legislation.—None.

Value.—None.

Agricultural Materials Research and Development.—The Secretary of Agriculture is encouraged to enter into cooperative development projects for agricultural products, in particular latex. Israel was added to the list of countries in 1984.

Legislation.—Sec. 7 of P.L. 98-284 (98 Stat 183), May 16, 1984. (See 7 U.S.C. 178e.)

Value.—Unknown.

Israel Bonds.—Israel Bonds were excluded from the tax provision that treated income from low interest rate bonds as interest rather than capital gains. The exclusion made Israel Bonds more attractive to U.S. investors.

Legislation.—Sec. 1812(b)(5) of P.L. 99-514 (100 Stat 2834), October 22, 1986. (See 26 U.S.C. 7872.)

III. MILITARY/POLITICAL

Pre-Positioning.—The United States prepositions U.S. military equipment and supplies in Israel for use in emergencies. According to reports, Israel requested that it have access to pre-positioned supplies in case Israel were attacked, but Israel embassy officials deny that such a "two-key" arrangement exists.

Legislation.—None.

Value.—Unknown.

U.S. Weapons.—Section 3 and 4 of the Arms Export Control Act describe conditions placed on the use of U.S.-supplied military equipment. Violation of the conditions could result in a country being denied access to military credits, guarantees, or sales. The conditions include transferring U.S.-supplied weapons without the permission of the President and using military equipment for purposes other than self defense. All military supply contracts between the United States and recipient countries contain the same conditions. On one occasion, after the July 1976 Israeli attack on the Entebbe, Uganda, airport, the Department of State determined that Israeli use of U.S. weapons was legitimate self defense. On three occasions, in April 1978, following the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, in August 1979, following an Israeli attack in Lebanon, and in June 1981, following the Israeli bombing of the Iraqi nuclear reactor, the Department of State notified Congress that Israel "may have violated" the AECA and the 1952 U.S.-Israel agreement (TIAS 2675), but no further action was taken and Israel continued to receive U.S. weapons (although aircraft deliveries were delayed in 1981). On another occasion, in the summer of 1982, following the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, the Department of State notified Congress (in a classified letter) that Israel misused cluster bombs and cut off further supply of cluster bombs to Israel. Also, Israeli officials have admitted that U.S. weapons were supplied to Iran and militia forces in southern Lebanon without the President's permission.

Legislation: Sec. 3 (22 U.S.C. 2752) and Sec. 4 (22 U.S.C. 2754) of P.L. 90-629, as amended.

Value.—Unknown.

Palestine Liberation Organization Negotiations.—On September 1, 1975, Secretary of State Kissinger signed an assurance to Israel stating the United States would not negotiate with, or recognize, the PLO unless and until the PLO recognized Israel and accepted U.N. Resolutions 242 and 338. Congress incorporated the policy statement in law in 1984, and added an additional condition that the PLO must renounce terrorist. The ban on negotiating with the PLO covers all U.S. Government employees or individuals acting on behalf of the United States. The Secretary of State announced on December 14, 1988, that the PLO had met the conditions and that a United States representative would meet with a PLO official.

Legislation.—Sec. 535 of P.L. 98-473 (98 Stat 1902), October 12, 1984, repeated in subsequent years.

U.N. Support for the PLO.—The United States will reduce its contributions to United Nations organization if they offer financial support for the PLO.

Legislation.—Sec. 614 of P.L. 95-426 (92 Stat 963), October 7, 1978, repeated in subsequent years; also Sec. 114 of P.L. 98-164 (97 Stat 1020), November 22, 1983, reduced U.S. contributions to the U.N. Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the U.N. Special Unit on Palestinian Rights, repeated in subsequent years; and Sec. 705 of P.L. 100-204 (101 Stat 1390), December 22, 1987, added the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories.

U.S. Quit the U.N. if Israel is Expelled.—The United States will suspend its participation in the U.N. and reduce its contribution to U.N. activities if Israel is expelled.

Legislation.—Sec. 115 of P.L. 98-164 (97 Stat 1021), November 22, 1983, repeated in subsequent years.

PLO Membership in IMF.—If the PLO is admitted to membership or observer status in the International Monetary Fund, the United States might reduce its support for the IMF. U.S. representatives to the IMF were told to convey U.S. intentions to the IMF.

Legislation.—Sec. 37 of P.L. 79-171, added by Sec. 7 of P.L. 96-389 (94 Stat 1554), October 7, 1980.

Close PIO/PLO Offices.—Title X, Section 1003 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1988 and 1989, states that it is illegal for the PLO to maintain an office in the United States. The Washington, D.C. Palestine Information Office, which received its funding from the PLO, was designated a foreign mission and closed by the State Department on December 3, 1987. A Palestine Affairs Center, under the auspices of the Arab League, opened in Washington in April 1988. The Department of Justice directed the PLO office in New York, housing the PLO observer mission to the United Nations, to close by March 21, 1988, in compliance with the law. A U.S. District Court ruled in August 1988 that the United States was bound by the U.N. Headquarters Agreement to allow the PLO to maintain an office in New York. The Justice Department did not appeal the decision.

Legislation.—Sec. 1003(3) of P.L. 100-204 (101 Stat 1407) December 22, 1987.

U.S. Embassy in Israel.—The United States, citing U.N. resolutions, does not recognize Israel's annexation of Jerusalem or the designation of Jerusalem as its capital. The United States embassy in Israel is in Tel Aviv. Israel wants the United States to move its embassy to Jerusalem to legitimize the Israeli claim to the city. Some Members of Congress, in support of the Israeli position, proposed banning the expenditure of funds for a new embassy any where except Jerusalem, but the legislation bans funds for a new U.S. embassy any where in Israel, Jerusalem, or the occupied West Bank.

Legislation.—Sec. 130 of P.L. 100-204 (101 Stat 1344), December 22, 1987. (See 22 U.S.C. 4862.)

U.S. Funds for the United Nations Relief and Works Agency.—No U.S. funds may go to UNRWA, the organization providing food, shelter, medical treatment, and other services for Palestine refugees, unless UNRWA takes all possible measures to ensure that no military training is provided to refugees in UNRWA facilities.

Legislation.—Sec. 301(c) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, added by Sec. 108(a) of P.L. 91-175 (83 Stat 805), December 30, 1969.

Israeli Participation in the International Atomic Energy Agency.—U.S. contributions to the IAEA are conditioned on Israel's right to participate in the Agency. The IAEA voted to suspend Israel's membership after the 1981 Israeli attack on Iraq's nuclear facility.

Legislation.—Sec. 195 of P.L. 97-377 (96 Stat 1830) December 21, 1982. (see 22 U.S.C. 2222.).

[CRS Issue Brief]

ISRAEL: U.S. FOREIGN ASSISTANCE FACTS

(By Clyde R. Mark, Foreign Affairs and National Defense Division)

SUMMARY

Israel is not economically self-sufficient, and relies upon foreign assistance and borrowing to maintain its economy. For the past five years, the United States has provided $3 billion in grants annually to Israel. Since 1976, Israel has been the largest annual recipient of U.S. foreign assistance, and is the largest cumulative recipient. In addition to U.S. assistance, Israel receives about $1 billion annually through philanthropy, an equal amount through short- and long-term loans, and about $500 million or more in Israel Bonds proceeds.

Should the United States set conditions on its aid to Israel to extract political or economic concessions? Does the special treatment granted to Israel set precedents for other U.S. recipients? Are the charges that Israel has misused U.S. aid valid, and if so, what should the United States do about it? Should the United States increase aid to Israel to help resettle Jews emigrating from the Soviet Union?

The United States provided $1.2 billion in Economic Support Fund grants, $1.8 billion in Foreign Military Sales grants, $25 million in refugee resettlement grants, and $7.5 million in cooperative development grants for Israel for FY 1990.

ISSUE DEFINITION

For most Members of Congress, the issue is not if Israel should receive U.S. foreign assistance, but under what conditions Israel should receive the aid. Should the United States attach conditions to the aid in order to get Israel to cooperate with the peace process or to stop building settlements in the occupied territories? Should the United States increase aid to Israel for resettling Jewish refugees? Does Israel receive preferential treatment?

PROGRAM BACKGROUND

Since 1976, Israel has been the largest annual recipient of U.S. aid and is the largest recipient of cumulative U.S. assistance. From 1949 through 1965, U.S. aid to Israel averaged about $63 million per year, over 95% of which was economic development assistance and food aid. A modest military loan program began in 1959. From 1966 through 1970, average aid per year increased to about $102 million, but military loans increased to about 47% of the total. From 1971 to the present, U.S. aid to Israel has averaged over $2 billion per year, two-thirds of which has been military assistance. In 1971, economic assistance changed from specific programs, such as agricultural development, to the Commodity Import Program (CIP) for purchase of U.S. goods. CIP ended in 1979, replaced by largely unconditional direct transfers for budgetary support. The 1974 emergency aid for Israel, following the 1973 war, included the first military grant aid. Economic aid became all grant cash transfer in 1981, and military aid became all grant in 1985.

The FY1989 U.S. aid of $3.0 billion in grants was made available to Israel in October 1988; $1.2 billion in Economic Support Funds (ESF) grants, and $1.8 billion in Foreign Military Sales (FMS) grants, of which $150 million is to be spent in the United States for research and development (R&D) for advanced aircraft and $400 million is to be spent in Israel for defense procurement. Israel received a grant of $5 million for its foreign assistance program, a $28 million grant for refugee resettlement, and shares a $5 million program with Egypt for cooperative development programs to promote the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Beginning in the mid-1970's, Israel could no longer meet its balance of payments and government deficits with imported capital (gifts from overseas Jews, West German reparations, U.S. aid) and began to rely more on borrowed capital. Growing debt servicing costs, mounting government social services expenditures, perennial high defense spending levels, and a stagnant domestic economy combined with worldwide inflation and declining foreign markets for Israeli goods pushed the Israeli economy into a near crisis situation. The "unity" government, which took office in September 1984, instituted a series of "preliminary steps" intended to resolve some of the economic problems and "emergency" measures in July 1985, to cut government subsidies, freeze wages and prices, raise taxes, and other measures. Inflation was cut from the high of 445% in 1984 to an annual level of 20% for 1986 and 1987. Unemployment settled down to 5.5% for the second quarter of 1987, after a high of 7.8% for the same period in 1985. Israel still runs government deficits and balance of trade and payments deficits, although the gaps have been reduced.

The Administration requested $1.2 billion in economic grants and $1.8 billion in military grants for FY1990.

KEY ISSUES

(1) Should Israel's aid be cut to allow the United States to provide assistance to the newly emerging democracies of Eastern Europe or Central America?

One congressional proposal suggested that Israel and several other countries should have their U.S. aid reduced by 5% (for Israel, a $150 million cut) with the proceeds used to finance aid programs in Poland, Panama, Hungary, Nicaragua, or other countries. Proponents of the proposal point out that a few countries—Israel, Egypt, Philippines, Pakistan, Turkey, Greece, and others—receive the greatest proportion of U.S. aid, and can afford to take a reduction to allow other nations to receive aid. Opponents state that Israel cannot afford to have its aid cut, and that Israel is a strategic ally of the United States.

(2) Should the United States provide supplemental aid to Israel to resettle Soviet Jews?

Recent press reports suggest Israel has requested $400 million in housing guarantees and $500 million in ESF grants over a 3-year period to help resettle Soviet Jews in Israel.

(3) Should the United States use aid to extract political or foreign policy concessions from Israel?

It has been suggested that the United States should provide aid to Israel only if Israel takes actions or meets conditions in keeping with U.S. policies. For example, the United States might withhold assistance unless Israel stopped establishing settlements in the occupied territories, or unless Israel reversed its annexation of the Golan Heights and east Jerusalem. U.S. Presidents and Secretaries of State have rejected applying such conditions to U.S. aid to Israel, and Israeli leaders reject such conditions as a violation of their sovereignty. (In 1953, the United States withheld an aid payment to Israel until Israel stopped a water diversion project which violated a U.N. demilitarized zone.)

(4) Should the United States attach economic conditions on aid to Israel?

Opponents of attaching economic conditions suggest that Israeli officials are capable of making the changes needed to restore the economy, and that any such outside interference is a violation of Israeli sovereignty. Proponents of conditions suggest that Israel should demonstrate its capability to implement austerity measures before aid is given to Israel.

(5) Does special treatment granted to Israel set precedents for other countries?

As pointed out in the June 25, 1983, General Accounting Office (GAO) report, U.S., Assistance to the State of Israel (GAO/ID-83-51), favorable treatment given to Israel may establish precedents for other U.S. aid recipients and may be detrimental to the United States. Israel's supporters justify the unusual treatment accorded to Israel because of the special relationship between the United States and Israel and because of Israel's unique economic and political status. The GAO list of precedents includes:

Cash flow financing: Israel is allowed to set aside FMS funds for current year payments only, rather than set aside the full amount needed to meet the full cost of multi-year purchases. GAO believes that cash flow financing creates a commitment to furnish aid in future years at a level sufficient to meet the future payments. Egypt and Turkey now use cash flow financing.

FMS loan repayment waiver: In 1974, President Nixon suggested that loan repayments be waived for Israel. From 1974 until 1984, the United States waived repayment of part of Israel's annual FMS, and since 1985, has waived repayment of the total FMS. The waiver avoids establishing a program and personnel to oversee the program if the same amount were given as a Military Assistance Program grant. Egypt and Sudan also have received loan repayment waivers.

ESF cash transfer: The United States gives all ESF funds directly to the Government of Israel rather than under a specific program. There is no accounting of how the funds are used. (Israel does send an annual letter describing U.S. exports to Israel compared to the ESF amounts.) A number of other nations receive part of their ESF as cash transfers, but not under such flexible conditions.

FMS offsets: Israel receives offsets on FMS purchases (contractors agree to offset some of the cost by buying components or materials for Israel). Although offsets are a common practice in commercial contracts (countries dealing directly with U.S. firms), GAO said offsets on FMS sales were "unusual" because FMS is intended to sell U.S. goods and services.

Early transfers: In 1982, Israel asked that the ESF funds be transferred in one lump sum early in the fiscal year rather than in four quarterly installments, as is the usual practice with other countries. The United States pays more in interest for the money it borrows to make lump sum payments. In March 1985, an A.I.D. official estimated that it cost the United States between $50 million and $60 million to borrow funds for the early, lump-sum payment. In addition, the U.S. Government pays Israel interest on the ESF funds invested in U.S. Treasury notes, according to A.I.D. officials in March 1988.

FMS drawdown: Israel is permitted to draw down the grant (waived) portion of its FMS credits before the loan portion, thus delaying paying interest on the loans. Usually, loans and grants are drawn down at an equal rate. (As of Dec. 31, 1987, Israel had about $156 million in "unexpended" funds in its FMS account.)

Apart from the precedents cited by GAO, there are other unusual features of the Israel aid program.

ESF, loan payment linkage: The Continuing Appropriation for FY 1985 (P.L. 98-453) stated that annual ESF aid to Israel be at least equal to the annual amount Israel owes the United States in payments on past loans.

FMS for R&D: Israel asked for and received permission for a "one-time-only" use of $107 million in FY77 FMS funds to be spent in Israel to develop the Merkava tank (prototype completed 1975, Merkava added to Israeli arsenal 1979). Israel asked for a similar waiver to develop the Lavi ground-attack aircraft. In November 1983, Congress added an amendment to the FY 1984 Continuing Appropriation (P.L. 98-151) that allowed Israel to spend $300 million of FMS funds in the United States and $250 million of FMS in Israel to develop the Lavi. Between 1983 and 1988, Congress earmarked a total of $1.8 billion (through FY1987) for the Lavi. GAO reported in January 1987 that the United States provided $1.3 billion of 41.5 billion Lavi development costs between 1980 and 1986. On Aug. 30, 1987, the Israeli cabinet voted to cancel the Lavi project, but asked the United States for $450 million to pay for cancelled contracts. The State Department agreed to raise the FMS earmark for procurement in Israel from $300 million to $400 million to pay Lavi cancellation costs. For each fiscal year 1988 and 1989, Israel received $150 million for U.S. and $400 million for Israeli procurement of "advanced aircraft."

FMS third-country sales: FMS funds are intended to be used to purchase U.S.-made weapons and equipment. Israel has requested, according to press reports, that the United States permit countries to use U.S.-furnished FMS funds to purchase weapons and equipment from Israel. Proponents of the proposal say the third-country sales would help Israel's arms industry and benefit U.S. companies providing components to Israel. Opponents say the sales would hurt U.S. arms industries competing with Israeli industries and that the United States would lose control over the kinds of weapons provided, the use of the weapons (for defensive purposes only), and the transfer of weapons to other countries.

FMS for in-country purchase: According to reports, Israel has requested that part of the FMS funds (in addition to the Lavi funds) be transferred to Israel for Israeli defense expenditures and purchases from Israeli arms industries. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee set aside $250 million of the $1.8 billion FMS grant for defense procurement in Israel in the FY1986 foreign aid bill. The $300 million set aside in the FY1986 continuing resolution may be used for the Lavi or for other activities. Since the Lavi was cancelled on Aug. 30, 1987, the Israelis have asked that FMS funds for in-country purchases continue. Israel received $400 million of the $1.8 billion FMS for use in Israel in FY1988, $400 million in FY1989, and $400 million in FY1990.

Multi-year commitment: Press reports say Israel has requested a multi-year aid commitment rather than a single-year program. On Feb. 17, 1985, the Israeli newspaper Haaretz reported that the United States and Israel signed an agreement which guaranteed Israel $1.8 billion in FMS grants for the next three years, FY1986, FY1987, and FY1988. According to Haaretz, a clause in the agreement allowed Israel to increase its requests if the need arises. Israeli officials confirmed that a "concurrence" letter in January 1985 set the FMS levels at $1.8 billion for FY1986, FY1987, and FY1988, but said that DOD suggested that Israel agree to the levels.

Camp David aid parity: Egypt claims that it was promised approximate parity with Israel in U.S. aid. If such a promise were made and if the United States keeps the promise, it is conceivable that Egypt will request an increase in aid comparable to Israel's request and may ask for additional benefits, such as third-country FMS sales, FMS funds for R&D, FMS in-country purchases, ESF loan payment linkage, or multi-year commitments.

(6) Are the charges that Israel has misused U.S. aid valid?

The United States stipulates that U.S. aid funds cannot be used in the occupied territories. In January 1985, U.S. officials questioned Israel about reports that U.S. refugee resettlement assistance was being used to settle Ethiopian Jews near Hebron, on the West Bank. According to the New York Times (Jan. 18, 1985), Israeli officials responded that the Hebron processing center would not necessarily be the permanent home for the Ethiopians. A Jersalem Post report (Mar. 12, 1985) said the Ethiopians in Hebron were not recent immigrants. Over the years, a few Members of Congress have suggested that Israel may be using U.S. assistance to establish Jewish settlements in the occupied territories, but because the U.S. aid is given as budgetary support without any specific project accounting there is no way to tell how Israel uses U.S. aid.

Also, the United States stipulates that U.S. military equipment provided through the FMS program can be used only for internal security or defensive purposes, and that U.S. weapons and equipment cannot be transferred to a third country without U.S. approval. In 1978, 1979, and 1981, the executive branch notified Congress that Israel "may have violated" U.S.-Israeli agreements by using U.S. weapons for non-defensive purposes, and in 1982, the United States suspended shipments of so-called cluster bombs after allegations that Israel violated an agreement on the use of the bombs. Israel maintains that the weapons were used for defensive purposes. In 1982 testimony before Congress, executive branch officials said Israel transferred U.S. arms to Iran and the "South Lebanon Army" without U.S. permission.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

FY 1986

The FY 1986 foreign assistance authorization bill (P.L. 99-83, Aug. 8, 1985) provided a 2-year authorization earmarked for Israel: $1.2 billion in ESF grants and $1.8 billion in FMS grants per each of the fiscal years 1986 and 1987. In addition, Israel received $750 million in ESF grant supplemental aid from FY 1985. Israel's aid for FY 1986 was appropriated through the continuing resolution, P.L. 99-190 of Dec. 19, 1985. Of the military aid, $150 million was earmarked for Lavi R&D in the United States and $300 million was earmarked for the Lavi or other activities in Israel.

Effect of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings: Under the authority of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, P.L. 99-177 signed on Dec. 12, 1985

(Gramm-Rudman-Hollings or GRH), and according to the Sequestration Report for FY 1986 (Federal Register, vol. 51, no. 10, Jan. 15, 1986, or the Jan. 21, 1986, GAO report to the President (GAO/OLG 86-1)), FY 1986 foreign assistance was reduced by 4.3%. GRH cuts affected Israel as follows:

[In millions of dollars]

	Fiscal year 1986 scheduled	GRH 4.3-percent cut	Total after GRH
Economic support fund	$1,200	$51.6	$1,148.4
Foreign military sales	1,800	77.4	1,722.6
Fiscal year 1985 supplemental ESF	750	0	750
Total	3,750	129	3,621

The $750 million supplemental ESF was authorized and appropriated in FY1985 and was not affected by GRH. The $1.2 billion EST was paid to Israel on Oct. 30, 1985 (in accordance with law, see Section 202(a)(2) of P.L. 99-83). Israel returned $51.6 million.

FY 1987

The Administration requested $1.2 billion in ESF grants and $1.8 billion in FMS grants for Israel for FY1987, the same amounts authorized under the 2-year authorization in P.L. 99-83. The House Appropriations Committee reported out (H.Rept. 99-747) an appropriations bill (H.R. 5339) for FY1987 on Aug. 5, 1986, which included $1.2 billion in ESF grants and $1.8 billion in FMS grants for FY1987 for Israel. Of the $1.8 billion in FMS grants, $150 million may be used by Lavi research and development in the United States and $300 million may be used for Lavi or other defense procurement, including R&D in Israel. The House Appropriations Committee's bill protected the Israeli earmarked funds from any Administration cuts, but stated that the Israeli funds would be subject to Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cuts if GRH sequestration became necessary.

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported an appropriation bill (S. 2824, S. Rept. 99-443) on Sept. 16, 1986, which earmarked $1.2 billion in Economic Support Fund (ESF) grants and $1.8 billion in Foreign Military Sales (FMS) grants for Israel. Of the $1.8 billion in FMS grants, $300 million was earmarked for procurement in Israel, and $150 million was earmarked for Lavi procurement in the United States. The bill also earmarked $5 million for Israel for cooperative development projects and $25 million for the resettlement of Jewish refugees in Israel.

Neither the House nor the Senate passed foreign assistance appropriations bills. On Sept. 25, 1986, the House passed (201-200) a continuing resolution, H.J. Res. 738; the continuing resolution contained the language of H.R. 5339. The Senate passed H.J. Res. 738 on October 3 (82-13), but with amendments. The two Houses finally agreed to amendments on October 17 (H. Rept. 99-1005), and the continuing resolution was signed into law, P.L. 99-591, on Oct. 18, 1986.

The continuing resolution, P.L. 99-591, provided $1.2 billion in ESF grants, all as direct transfer to be paid within 30 days from October 18, $5 million in U.S.-Israel cooperative development funds, $25 million for refugee resettlement in Israel, and $1.8 billion in FMS grants, of which $150 million was earmarked for Lavi expenditures in the United States and $300 million for Lavi or other expenditures in Israel. As in previous years, the continuing resolution allowed Israel to draw its grant FMS before drawing loans, stated that Israel's ESF assistance should not be less than the amount Israel owed the United States for past loan repayments, and protected the Israeli ESF and FMS funds from foreign assistance cuts but not from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings sequestration.

FY 1988

For FY 1988, Israel requested $1.2 billion in Economic Support Fund grants, to be made available in the first quarter of the fiscal year, and $2.42 billion in Foreign Military Sales grants, $300 million of which would be for procurement in Israel.

The Administration requested $1.2 billion in ESF grants and $1.8 billion in FMS grants for FY 1988.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee reported an authorization bill (S. 1274, S. Rept. 100-60) on May 22, 1987, that provides $1.2 billion in ESF grant, and $1.8 billion in FMS grant for Israel. Of the $1.8 billion in FMS, $150 million is for Lavi R&D in the United States and $300 million is for military procurement in Israel. There was no further action on S. 1274. The House Foreign Affairs Committee reported H.R. 3100 (H. Rept. 100-294) on Aug. 26, 1987, which would authorize the same amounts for Israel. H.R. 3100 passed the House (286-122) on Dec. 10, 1987.

The House Appropriations Committee reported H.R. 3186 (H. Rept. 100-283) on Aug. 6, 1987, which provides $1.2 billion in ESF grants, $1.8 billion in FMS grants, of which $150 million if for Lavi R&D in the United States and $300 million is for military procurement in Israel, $25 million for refugee resettlement in Israel, and $5 million for cooperative development.

The continuing resolution, H.J. Res. 395 (P.L. 100-202), signed by the President on Dec. 22, 1987, appropriated $1.2 billion in ESF grants for Israel and $1.8 billion in FMS grants for FY 1988. Of the FMS grants, $150 million may be used on advanced aircraft research and development in the United States and $400 million may be used for defense procurement in Israel. Israel also received $5 million for cooperative aid projects and $25 million for refugee resettlement.

FY 1989

In November 1987, Israel and the United States reached an agreement to keep FY 1989 aid at the FY 1988 levels, $1.2 billion in ESF grants and $1.8 billion in FMS grants.

The House amended the full text of H.R. 3100 (passed by the House on Dec. 10, 1987) to H.R. 4471, a bill to amend the Foreign Assistance Act with respect to activities of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation. Apparently the House was attempting to force the Senate to consider H.R. 3100, the 2-year authorization bill, because the Senate did not complete action on S. 1274, the authorization bill for FY 1988 and FY1989. H.R. 4471 (with H.R. 3100 attached) passed the House (267-112) on May 12, 1988

The House Appropriations Committeee reported H.R. 4637 (H. Rept. 100-641) on May 19, 1988. H.R. 4637 passed the House (328-90) on May 25. H.R. 4637 appropriated $1.2 billion in ESF, $1.8 billion in FMS, $27.5 million in refugee assistance, and $5 million in cooperative development assistance for Israel for FY1989.

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported H.R. 4637 on June 22, 1987 (S. Rept. 100-395), with amendments. The Senate version provided $1.2 billion in ESF, $1.8 billion in FMS, and $5 million in cooperative development funds, but raised the refugee assistance to $28 million. H.R. 4637 passed the Senate (76-15) on July 7, 1988. The House agreed (327-92) to the conference report (H. Rept. 100-983) on September 28, and the Senate agreed (voice vote) to the conference on September 30. The President signed the bill (P.L. 100-461) on Oct. 1, 1988.

FY 1990

Authorization: The Administration requested $1.2 billion in ESF grants and $1.8 billion in FMS grants for Israel for FY1990. The Foreign Relations Authorization Act, FY1990 and FY1991 (H.R. 1487), reported on Apr. 6, 1989 (H.Rept. 101-17), provided $25 million for each fiscal year for refugees settling in Israel. H.R. 1487 passed the House on Apr. 12, 1989, by a vote of 338-87. S. 1160, which included $25 million for Israeli refugees was reported to the Senate on June 12, 1989 (S. Rept. 101-46). On July 21, the Senate passed H.R. 1487, in lieu of S. 1160. The House agreed to the conference report on Nov. 15, and the Senate agreed to the conference report on Nov. 16, 1989.

H.R. 2655, the foreign aid bill, included $1.2 billion in ESF and $1.8 billion in FMS grants for Israel. H.R. 2655 was reported on June 16 (H. Rept. 101-90) and passed the House on June 29, 1989, by a vote of 314-101. H.R. 2655 was sent to the Senate, where it was referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. S. 1347, a foreign aid authorization bill, was reported out of committee on July 18, 1989 (S. Rept. 101-80), and included $1.2 billion in ESF and $1.8 billion in FMS grants for Israel. Neither H.R. 2655 nor S. 1347 were brought to the Senate floor for a vote.

Appropriation: H.R. 2939, a foreign aid appropriations bill that included $1.2 billion in ESF grants and $1.8 billion in FMS grants for Israel, was reported to the House on July 19, 1989 (H. Rept. 101-165), and passed the House on July 21, 1989, by a vote of 329-69. H.R. 2939 was reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee (H. Rept. 101-131) on Sept. 14, 1989, and passed the Senate on Sept. 26, 1989, by a vote of 89-11. The conference report was filed on Nov. 11. The House passed the conference report on Nov. 14, and the Senate passed the conference report on Nov. 15. The President vetoed H.R. 2939 on Nov. 19, 1990 (H. Doc. 101-113).

Meanwhile the House Appropriations Committee reported (H. Rept. 101-249) H.J. Res. 407, a continuing resolution that included $1.2 billion in ESF grants and $1.8 billion in FMS grants for Israel, on Sept. 26, 1989, and the House passed the continuing resolution on the same day by a vote of 274-152. The Senate passed H.J. Res. 407 on Sept. 28, 1989, by a vote of 100-0. The President signed the bill into law on Sept. 29, 1989 (P.L. 101-100).

H.R. 3743, an appropriations bill introduced on Nov. 20, 1989, to replace vetoed H.R. 2939, passed the House by a vote of 310-107 on Nov. 20, 1989. The Senate passed H.R. 3743 by voice vote on Nov. 20, 1989. The bill was signed into law on Nov. 21, 1989 (P.L. 101-167). The act provided $1.2 billion in ESF and $1.8 billion in FMS for Israel.

Sequestration. The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Gramm-Rudman-Hollings) was implemented on Oct. 16. Under GRH, Israel's aid was reduced by 5.3%. Also, Congress agreed to a .43% across-the-board cut in foreign aid to pay for narcotics control programs, and the Senate agreed to a .133% across-the-board cut to pay for expanded Peace Corps programs. With the 3 cuts totaling $175.89 million, Israel received $2,824.11 million on Oct. 31, 1989, $1,129.644 million in ESF paid directly to Israel and $1,694.466 million in FMS made available for Israel in its FMS account.

ISRAEL'S AID FISCAL YEAR 1990: PRELIMINARY

[In millions of dollars]

Program	Fiscal year 1990 scheduled	GRH 5.3 percent cut	Narc control 0.43 percent cut	Peace Corps 0.133 percent cut	Fiscal year 1990 adjusted
ESF	1,200	63.6	5.16	1.596	1,129.644
FMS	1,800	95.4	7.74	2.394	1,694.466
Total	3,000	159.0	12.9	3.99	2,824.11

But with passage of the appropriation bill and the budget reconciliation bill, Israel's aid picture changed. The Senate Peace Corps funding was dropped, so Israel will have the $3.99 million in aid restored. The narcotics control funding remained, so the .43% or $12.9 million cut in Israel's aid will remain. The Congress and the Administration agreed in the reconciliation bill that the deficit could be met by sequestering funds for 130 days rather than the full year, and that not all accounts would be cut, ESF and FMS among them. The $159 million will be restored to Israel. After the adjustments, U.S. aid to Israel for FY1990 is as follows:

ISRAEL'S AID FOR FISCAL YEAR 1990: AFTER SEQUESTRATION

[In millions of dollars]

Program	Fiscal year 1990 scheduled	GRH 1.4 percent cut	Narc. control 0.43 percent cut	Fiscal year 1990 adjusted

FMS	1,800.0	No	7.74	1,792.3
Refugee	25.0	No	.1075	24.9
United States-Israel Coop	7.5	.105	.0323	7.4
Total	3,032.5	.105	13.0398	3,019.4

H.R. 4404, a supplemental appropriations bill introduced on Mar. 27, 1990, included $400 million in housing loan guarantees for Israel for fiscal year 1991, and an additional $5 million in refugee and migration funds for Israel for fiscal year 1990 (H.Rept. 101-434). The housing guarantees and the refugee resettlement grants are for resettling Soviet Jews in Israel. H.R. 4404 passed the House on April 3 by a vote of 362-59.

FY1991

The Administration requested $1.2 billion in ESF grants and $1.8 billion in FMS grants for Israel for FY1991.

Mr. DOLE. As I said, this AID relationship reflects our special bilateral relationship. I have not gone through the record in great detail, but I am virtually certain that I have supported every one of the AID programs and side benefit programs described in these documents. Probably most Members of the Senate have a similar record of support.

So we do have this important relationship, including this very special AID relationship. That is the backdrop for our consideration of housing guarantees—which, if enacted, will expand one of the present side benefits.

During my visit to Israel, I did discuss the issue of the influx of Soviet Jews at some length with Israeli officials. I was deeply impresssed both by the magnitude of the task, and the commitment not only of the government but of the Israeli public—to do whatever is necessary to provide a new life for these people.

Right now it is housing but I would say I think in the future it is probably going to be jobs too, because they are highly skilled people in nearly every case. Jobs were going to be very difficult to come by.

I visited a so-called absorption center where newly arriving Soviet Jews are processed, and provided support for their transition to life in Israeli society. There I learned of the enormous monetary costs involved, and of the challenge of providing housing and jobs for what most expect to be a total of 1 million or more immigrants.

To experience the human dimension of the problems involved, I met with several families in the initial stages of their resettlement. It was a touching experience. These people obviously feel they have truly come home.

Ultimately, they will make an enormous contribution to their adopted country, Israel. Right now, though, they do require a lot of support—and it costs a lot of money.

Jews around the world are responding generously to the enormous need. I understand that American Jews, operating through a variety of private organizations, are pledged to provide $500 million. That is on top of the several hundreds of millions of dollars they already provide in voluntary support for humanitarian projects in Israel.

It is right that the U.S. Government should help, too. The issue of Soviet Jewry has been very high on the United States agenda for many years. The issue has been on the agenda of every United States-U.S.S.R summit, of every Congress, of every encounter between senior United States and Soviet leaders.

One of the happiest results of the ERA of glasnost in the Soviet Union is that there has now been a major breakthrough on this issue. Basically, with some still important exceptions, the Soviets are permitting Jews to emigrate. Hundreds of thousands of them are lined up to do so, and most will end up in Israel.

We have worked hard to achieve this end, and we have a responsibility to assist in this very positive end-game operation.

So, in sum, I support U.S. involvement, and I support the concept of housing guarantees.

On this bill, I will offer no amendments dealing with this matter.

I do want to make some comments on the program as it has been structured, though, and raise a few questions that I think deserve careful consideration by the administration, the Congress and—most important—the American taxpayer, who will underwrite this program.

As has been obvious in the media, one important area of concern to the administration and to many Americans is Israeli settlement policy, as it relates to Jerusalem and the occupied territories.

The administration has made absolutely clear that it will seek commitments from the Israeli Government that United States-provided guarantees will not support housing in the occupied territories. At the same time, the administration strongly hopes that the issue is not specifically addressed through legislative language.

In other words, we have been advised they would rather not have specific legislative language.

The administration feels, rightly, that it should have maximum freedom of action in negotiating the required commitments from the Israeli Government.

I do not want to spend a lot of time on this particular aspect of the broader immigration issue, but I do think it is important to note that this is a serious concern.

The recent revelation that the Shamir government underwrote the cost of acquiring property in old town Jerusalem—property which appears to actually be owned by the Greek Orthodox Church—has focused new attention on the sensitivity of the whole issue of new settlers and settlements.

That incident happened to explode while I was in Israel, so I saw firsthand how volatile the whole matter was, to all of the ethnic and religious groups represented in Jerusalem.

I note that even the American-Israel, Public Affairs Committee [AIPAC], certainly the foremost lobbying organization on issues involving Israel, has issued a rare criticism of the Shamir government on that particular issue. I ask unanimous consent to include a New York Times article on the AIPAC statement in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JEWS IN U.S. TERM ISRAEL INSENSITIVE IN AIDING SETTLERS—STEP CALLED PROVOCATIVE—MOVE INTO CHRISTIAN QUARTER OF JERUSALEM COULD HURT RELATIONS, GROUP SAYS

(By Thomas L. Friedman)

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The leading pro-Israeli lobby in the United States told the Israeli Government today that its covert sponsorship of a Jewish settlement in the Christian Quarter of Jerusalem could seriously damage the relationship between the two countries.

The American Israel Public Affairs Committee, known as Aipac, is the most politically influential Jewish organization in Washington and the one taken most seriously by Israel, the way in which settlers moved into the Christian Quarter was insensitive and provocative.

Aipac warned Mr. Shamir that American Jews could not support the move and that the settlement was having a serious effect on the relationship between the two countries.

ISRAEL DEFENDS DECISION

The Israeli Foreign Ministry rejected international criticism of the Government financing of the settlement. In a sharply worded statement, it asserted, "It is the right of Jews to live everywhere, and to purchase or rent property in all parts of the Land of Israel, and especially in Jerusalem." [Page A11.]

American Jewish leaders are concerned that the Shamir Government's backing for settlers moving into the Christian Quarter could erode support for Israel from non-Jews in the United States. Muslims and Christians view any entry of Jewish settlers into their quarters as the first step toward diminishing their presence and influence there.

The message was one of several unusually emphatic gestures today by leading American Jewish organizations. Organizations called on Mr. Shamir to repudiate the $1.8 million covertly provided by his Government to Jewish settlers seeking to lease St. John's Hospice, a complex of four buildings in Jerusalem.

Leaders of American Jewish groups told Israel that its move created the impression that the Israeli Government cannot be trusted when it says that it is not using American money to support settlement activities. Israel's role in the settlement could also deter American Jews from donating money to Israel for fear it would end up in the hands of religious zealots, the leaders warned, and could tarnish Israel's record in promoting religious tolerance in Jerusalem.

Successive Israeli Governments have argued that the city should remain undivided and the capital of Israel—not only because of the Jewish claim to Jerusalem, but because Israel has insured that the rights of Christians and Muslims are protected there.

Abraham H. Foxman, national director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith said:

"The time now is for the Israeli Government to repudiate this incident, to fire those responsible and to make a clear statement by the Prime Minister indicating that this was not and is not Government policy. I think nothing short of that will restore credibility to the Israeli Government when it is essential for its dealings with friends and allies."

The anger within the Bush Administration over the Shamir Government's activities in Jerusalem was reflected in a statement on Monday by the State Department spokeswoman, Margaret D. Tutwiler. She called the settlers' move into the Christian Quarter "an insensitive and provocative action" and described the Israeli Government's financing as "deeply disturbing."

Miss Tutwiler also criticized the Israeli Government for its indecisiveness on entering talks with Palestinians even as it made decisions about funding new settlements.

The Shamir Government has asked the United States for $400 million in housing loan guarantees—over and above the $3 billion that Israel receives annually in military and economic assistance—to help resettle Soviet immigrants. The request is pending before Congress.

As a result of the erosion in trust between the Bush Administration and Mr. Shamir's Government, Secretary of State James A. Baker 3d testified before Congress last month that the Administration would insist on guarantees from Israel, that a loan guarantee would not be spent on housing in the occupied territories, a use that would violate United States law.

Normally Israel provides the United States with a pro forma declaration that aid was spent on housing projects within Israel's pre-1967 boundaries. But Mr. Baker indicated that the Bush Administration might demand a more rigorous guarantee for this housing loan, possibly even requesting that Israel end all new settlement building.

When asked for the latest Administration position on loan guarantee. Miss Tutwiler said, "When the new Israeli government is formed, we will then be working out exactly what those assurances would be."

One Administration official commented: "If we have a Government in Israel that is acting responsibly then the sorts of guarantees that we will seek could well be different from those we would seek from a Government that is acting irresponsibly. There has to be some degree of trust.

"Right now, it is very difficult to have any trust in this caretaker Government, given the incomprehensible and provocative way it is behaving," he said.

Mr. DOLE. So, obviously, the broader issue of where and under what circumstances the Israeli Government provides housing for any new settlers—whether they are long-time residents of Israel, or new arrivals—is something that deserves careful attention.

The administration will be pursuing this directly with the Israeli Government. And I think the American public will strongly back the administration's insistence that our guarantees not be used to underwrite settlements in the occupied territories, or such provocative resettlement cases as we have just seen in Jerusalem.

But let me turn from the broader question of resettlement policy, to the specifics of the Housing Guarantee Program. And let me stress upfront: I am asking some questions. Questions that I think our Government ought to ask, and our taxpayers deserve to have answered as this program is structured and implemented.

The bottom line question, of course, is: What will the program cost?

Some have asserted that this program—since it is a loan guarantee, and not a direct appropriation—is free; no cost to the taxpayer.

That is just not the case. Clearly there will be administrative costs. I know of no program ever devised by the mind of legislator or bureaucrat that did not cost any money to run.

I cannot estimate that cost. And, admittedly, by U.S. Government budget standards, those costs will not be enormous—but it is just not accurate to pretend they do not exist.

A more important consideration is that of fees. Under the existing program of guarantees for foreign nations—which being vastly expanded for Israel—countries benefiting from the guarantees are required to pay fees to us, for services provided in the processing of making the guarantees.

The Senate Appropriations Committee has reduced the standard fees for Israel. In other words, Israel will pay a lesser fee than would any other country utilizing the program.

The first questions I would ask, then—that could be addressed in conference, and by the administration, as it considers this program—are these:

What is the justification for a partial waiver of the fee for Israel?

In comparison to other similar programs, dollar for dollar, what monetary benefit will Israel derive from a partial waiver? Put another way, how much will a partial waiver cost the American taxpayer?

I should add, in this regard, that a very informal estimate I have received from an AID official indicates the cost to the taxpayer will be in the neighborhood of $25 to $30 million over the life of these loans.

A second cost issue is the so-called subsidy cost to the American taxpayer of our guarantees. This is an extremely complex, technical financial and bookkeeping matter. I will not attempt to explain it in detail.

I will just say this: The U.S. guarantee represents a subsidy—a cost of placing and servicing the loan that would be borne by the borrowers in the absence of the guarantee, but because of the guarantee will be borne by the United States; specifically, by the Treasury Department; and ultimately by our taxpayers.

The Office of Management and Budget [OMB] has standard formulas for calculating that subsidy cost. Using OMB's standard formula as it applies to a borrowing nation with Israel's established credit rating, the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] has estimated that the subsidy cost to the American taxpayer will be about $715 million for this $400 million dollar program.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the CBO memo providing this estimate.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, May 1, 1990.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
United States Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: You asked for an estimate of the cost of the proposed program to provide $400 million in loan guarantee authority to finance housing and infrastructure in Israel for Soviet refugees. Under current scorekeeping conventions, credit authority would be scored over the next several years as the loans are estimated to be committed. But, the "scoring" of credit in the federal budget has little to do with cost.

As we have stated in our report on credit reform, the subsidy provided by Federal credit programs more accurately reflect the long-term cost of credit assistance. Under credit reform, as proposed by the Administration, the $400 million in loan guarantees would require scoring a subsidy charge equal to the market value of the additional risk the U.S. Government would incur by entering into the guarantee commitments. Using the OMB subsidy model and assuming the average spread and fees for paper with the risk equivalent of Israel's, we estimate the subsidy provided by the guarantee would be approximately 19 percent, or $75 million.

This estimate may understate the long-term cost of the guarantee if the "special relationship" between Israel and the U.S. as codified in the Cranston amendment, Section 530 of the Foreign Operations Appropriations bill is applicable. Every year since fiscal year 1985, Congress has promised to appropriate enough money through the economic support fund for Israel to meet its debt service requirements. If extended to the financing of these credits, the result will be that the U.S. will reimburse Israel for the cost of servicing the debt. If this occurs, the U.S. will pay the principal and interest on this borrowing. Given the interest differential between the cost of direct federal borrowing and the cost of raising funds through a federal guarantee, the present value cost to the U.S. would be full $400 million in principal plus an interest differential of $18.4 million over the life of the loan.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER.

Mr. DOLE. So another specific question:

What will be the subsidy cost to the American taxpayer of the $400 million Israeli program? Is the CBO estimate accurate?

Another and even more fundamental cost question is whether or not the United States ultimately will actually pay for the increased debt service costs that Israel will inevitably face, because it will have increased debt.

Israel will be borrowing $400 million. That will be new debt; additional debt. Right now, Israel's debt service payment to us is more than $1.2 billion per year. We give Israel $1.2 billion in cash assistance—economic support fund [ESF] payments. The fact that the two numbers are identical is not a coincidence.

Under the so-called Cranston amendment, we have more or less pledged to give Israel enough ESF to cover its annual debt service payment.

The Cranston amendment does not force us to do that. But the logic of that amendment does in an important way drive our ESF levels.

For good reason, we do not want to just flat-out forgive Israel's debt. That would set a very bad precedent. So we have devised this system, which amounts to de facto debt forgiveness. Israel owes us x dollars, so we give it x dollars in ESF to make the payment.

Sometime after it starts borrowing money under the housing guarantees, Israel will have to start repaying that money. It will be making higher loan repayments than it would if it hadn't borrowed the money.

That cannot be disputed. But it does raise these questions:

Considering the political realities in the world, and the nature of our special relationship with Israel, are we in fact setting in train a process that will lead to greater Israeli debt, hence greater annual debt service payments, and inevitably higher U.S. ESF payments to Israel?

What is a reasonable estimate of the cost of those projected higher ESF payments?

The same CBO memo I have already included in the record estimates that from this perspective the so-called present value cost to the American taxpayer—what would have to be shelled out this year to cover these "down the road" ESF payments—would be $400 million. CBO then adds the cost of the interest differential between direct Federal borrowing and utilizing guarantees—another $18.4 million.

The bottom line: This $400 million loan guarantee will cost the American taxpayer more than $400 million; more than if we simply gave the $400 million to Israel this year.

And there are still other questions. One troublesome question is what Israel will do with the loans we are guaranteeing. The image is of a whole bunch of simple houses and apartments, to provide housing for some needy immigrants.

But the reality may not be as simple as that.

In the first place, the guarantees cover not only housing, but the so-called infrastructure for building houses. That means the loans we guarantee could be used for roads, or utility systems, or parks, or perhaps even consulting services.

That may be OK—I am not saying it is automatically bad. But we should not be laboring under the misimpression that we are just building houses for needy persons.

Another important question is what kind of housing is likely to be built as a result of these guarantees. The existing program requires that 90 percent of any guarantees be provided for housing for people with below-median income. This bill waives that requirement entirely.

As a result, this guarantee could be used to support luxury housing, at virtually any price range.

Lest anyone think this is an idle concern, I might point out that on my just-completed trip to Israel, I visited one new settlement near Bethlehem. I saw there new houses, being provided to settlers under Israeli Government subsidies. There were probably 100 or more houses already built, and another 30–40 under construction.

They were not shacks. They looked like they might fit in pretty well somewhere up off embassy row in the District, or in Fairfax or Montgomery County. An American official resident in Israel estimated that, if identical houses were built in an urban center in Israel, the likely cost would be in the range of $300,000–$400,000 per unit.

These homes were being built under the general subsidy program the Israeli Government provides to housing in the occupied territories.

Now to be clear: the homes I saw were not specifically for new immigrants. Our new housing guarantees are to be restricted to new immigrants. I do not know what kind of homes they might end up in. I do not know what kind of subsidies the Israeli Government will provide them.

But that is just the point. No one does. And we have taken out any restrictions in our program, limiting the Israeli Government in any way. If the Israeli Government wants to build them luxury housing, it can.

If it wants to build them housing using only inefficient, State-owned enterprises—who, according to one estimate, produce housing twice as costly as that which could be provided by private companies—it can do that.

There are no restrictions—and, in fact, no U.S. Government management or oversight, period—in the law, none.

This is, in effect, a blank check, in terms of how the loans can be used in supporting a housing program. In fact, when you consider the matter of fungibility of money which is a concern of the Administration, it is a blank check, period—a point I will be addressing in a moment.

But this general matter of how the money will be used raises three specific questions:

Since Israel will be totally exempt in this bill from any restrictions on what kind of housing or infrastructure it can build under the guarantee program, what are Israel's plans for using the guarantees? What kind of housing or infrastructure will it build?

If it intends to build modestly priced housing for large numbers of people, why do we need to waive the standard 90 percent requirement I mentioned above?

In our negotiations with Israel on implementing the program, will we require Israeli commitments to use most or all of the money for submedian income families, as we do for other countries? Or will we allow Israel to do whatever it wants with this money?

I think all Americans—especially those struggling with their own mortgages, or totally shut out of the housing market, have a right for answers to those questions.

As I have pointed out a number of times, we also have countless tens of thousands of homeless in this country. We do not hear their voice much, but they might ask: What about us?

And they might ask it more loudly when they find out we are about to embark on a big program to provide housing to people living in a foreign land—especially if we are leaving open the possibility that we will be subsidizing housing for a privileged few, instead of many needy people.

So I guess it is fair to add this question to my list:

How do we justify this program, in light of the suggestion by some that we have not done enough to respond to the needs of our own homeless population?

That is a question, I might add, that has been asked of me. I did not raise it. Some one asked me.

Of course, I have not even raised the question of fungibility. Our guarantees will permit Israel to borrow $400 million. That money will go into Israel's treasury.

Our language requires that money—that particular pile of dollar bills—to be used only for housing new immigrants. But what keeps Israel from taking $400 million of its own money, that it would otherwise use for its housing program, and now use it elsewhere?

I do not see anything that would prevent Israel from doing just that. I presume this is a real—not artificial—concern. I know that Israel will spend more than $400 million of its own funds for immigrant housing—no doubt about it. They have a big job, big responsibility, and they are trying to meet it.

I also happen to think that Israel's commitment to the resettlement program is so strong that it will find the money to implement it, no matter what we do. That is certainly commendable on Israel's part—and I certainly do not mean to imply otherwise. It is a real, and commendable commitment to a genuinely humanitarian program and a genuinely humanitarian need.

But the logical result is this: The $400 million under the Loan Guarantee Program will free up $400 million to use elsewhere, anywhere.

Weapons development, subsidization of inefficient state enterprises, providing unjustifiable wage increases in response to union pressure, anything, anywhere in the Government's budget.

Now the fact is: All of our aid is probably fungible, in that sense. But that does not make it any less true that this aid is fungible, too. Let us recognize that and not kid ourselves that we really can somehow stop Israel from using this $400 million for anything it wants.

And let me conclude with one final and important point. At least if we are providing these guarantees, we should have a right to expect that American companies in the housing field that provide building materials, or prefab housing, or construction related services have a chance to compete fairly for any related contracts that are let by the Israeli Government.

The fact is that, right now, Western European firms very much have the inside track. It is not Israel's fault, or some conscious design of the Israeli Government. But it is a fact.

The EEC finalized its free trade agreement with Israel several years before we did. As a result, all the provisions of the EEC agreement are already in place, fully implemented, including those provisions covering the elimination of Israeli tariffs on the import of EEC house building materials.

Our free trade agreement, more recently signed, is still being phased in. Housing materials are on something called the "C" list. Tariffs for "C" list items have not yet been eliminated. So United States house building material entering Israel still is saddled with tariffs that can reach 40 percent.

The disadvantage to our industry is clear.

Again, there is nothing untoward about all this. It is a coincidental part of the way our free trade agreement is being implemented.

But in light of this housing guarantee program, I conclude with this last question:

In our negotiations with the Israeli Government to implement the Housing Guarantee Program, should we not make it a requirement that the Israeli Government immediately remove any tariffs on United States supplied house building material that would place American suppliers at a disadvantage in comparison to other suppliers?

Mr. President, I have listed a few questions. I do not have the answers. But I do think we in the Congress, and the American taxpayers—we all should have the answers.

As I said at the outset, I support the concept of this program. I do not intend to hold up this bill, by insisting that my questions be answered now. I do not want to hold up implementation of the program, so I will not offer any amendments, either substantive, or to require a report addressing the questions I have raised.

I do urge Senate and House conferees to include in the conference report an admonition to the administration to consider all of these questions and provide the Congress relevant information. I also hope the conference report will urge the administration, in its negotiations with the Israelis, to press them on some of these same points, particularly on Israel's intentions in utilizing the loans generated by this program.

But I do hope that all the Members of the Senate and the House, and especially the conferees on this bill from both bodies, will address these questions.

I hope the administration will, too, as it negotiates this matter with the Israeli Government and puts in place its own implementing policies and regulations.

Finally, I hope the American people—the American taxpayer—will think about the questions I have raised.

We have many important responsibilities around the world. There are many critical needs; many worthwhile causes. But we have limited resources, and we are saddled with a big, big debt, and we are paying some $180 billion a year in interest. The simple fact is we cannot do it all.

We have to start thinking more about priorities. I and others have made that point before.

We need to start subjecting all proposals for new spending or new commitments to more rigorous tests—of priority, of affordability, of common sense, whether it be agriculture, drugs, education, highways, or foreign aid.

We need to end the practice of kneejerk approval of certain kinds of proposals. In this age of deficit crisis at home, and vastly expanding foreign aid needs overseas, every program must be scrutinized carefully, no matter which country is the recipient.

Mr. President, I wish we had the resources to meet all the important needs of our own society. I wish we had the resources to respond generously to the legitimate needs of every ally and every friend, including our special friend Israel, all around the world.

But we do not. We just do not have it.

It is time to face up to that reality, and in my view the sooner we start the better.

In closing, Mr. President, let me say that I have used figures throughout this statement. Some were estimates of the Congressional Budget Office, some from the Agency for International Development and other sources. I do not know whether they are close, but I do think we ought to find out—we ought to demand that our conferees find out—what the real figures are, before we agree to the conference report. As I said, some estimates suggest this loan guarantee program will ultimately cost more than $400 million. If that is true, Members of the Senate need to know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIXON). The Senator from Colorado.

AMENDMENT NO. 1570

(Purpose: To provide $5,000,000 for the United Nations Environment Program Fund and to reduce funds available for the International Military Education and Training Fund)

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I have an amendment to the bill, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH], for himself, Mr. PELL, Mr. CHAFEE, and Mr. KERRY, proposes an amendment numbered 1570.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 20, between lines 19 and 20 insert the following:

INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS AND PROGRAMS

For an additional amount for necessary expenses for "International Organizations and Programs", $5,000,000 for payment to the United Nations Environment Program Fund, to carry out the provisions of section 2 of the United Nations Environment Program Participation Act of 1983.

On page 30, after line 20, insert the following:

GENERAL PROVISIONS

(RECISSION)

SEC. 301. Of the funds appropriated to or for the use of the Department of State for fiscal year 1990, the following funds are hereby rescinded from the following account in the specified amount:

International Military Education and Training Program, $7,500,000.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, this is the week after Earth Day. A week ago, all around the globe, tens if not hundreds of millions of people came together. They rallied. They planted trees together. They protested together. They rejoiced in many ways about their humanity and oneness with the globe and also registered their concerns with each other, and with their Government, that the world is severely threatened.

I do not think there is any thoughtful observer who does not look carefully at the problems of global warming, destruction of the rain forest, dimunition of species, the pollution of oceans, and rapid population growth, without being alarmed about what is going on; without understanding our interdependence with people all the way around the globe, and without understanding the need for governments to get along with each other and work together to start to solve these enormous global environmental problems.

As we are here in the Senate, at the Marriott downtown, a group of global parliamentarians from 35 countries are in town. They have been drawn together in a conference sponsored by the U.S. Senate, sponsored and partly paid for out of appropriations voted by the U.S. Senate, in order to bring parliamentarians together from around the world to focus on a number of great issues.

There are seven working groups downtown right now, Mr. President. Three of those groups are chaired by Members of the minority in the Senate, four by Members of the majority; Senator BOSCHWITZ, Senator HEINZ, and Senator CHAFEE are on the Republican side; Senator GORE, Senator BAUCUS, Senator KERREY, and myself are on the Democratic side. We are all attempting to come to some very significant conclusions with parliamentarians from countries as small as the Maldives, a tiny country which sits out in the Indian Ocean. If we have global warming and the level of the ocean rises, the Maldives are going to have some very significant problems. Global warming will effect countries as small as that and countries as enormous and complicated as Indonesia.

What people told us on Earth Day, Mr. President, what these global parliamentarians are telling us now, and what millions and millions of people around the world have been telling us for some time, is that we must redefine what we mean by national security. Our security no longer is simply a function of our relationship with the Soviet Union. The cold war is over and the Berlin Wall has fallen. We cannot define our national security or our international security on the basis of a bipolar relationship.

Our security now is defined by our relationship with the globe, how rapidly we come to grips with that relationship and how soon we arrest the rapid degradation that is all around us. Unfortunately, as we understand that, Mr. President, and I know the Chair understands that, and many Members of this body understand that, many of our institutions continue with business as usual. They continue acting as if the world is the same today as it was before the fall of the Berlin Wall.

What this amendment is all about, Mr. President, is a shift in priorities. What this amendment is all about is saying, do we understand that the definition of security has changed, that the world has changed, that our security is now defind in environmental terms and not in solely military terms, and that it is time for us to change our spending patterns to reflect this change in reality.

What this amendment does Mr. President, is very simple. It shifts $5 million from the International Military Education and Training Program, the IMET Program, which was established during the height of the cold war in the early 1950's, to train foreign military officers and to bring them to this country to counter similar Soviet programs. That was what this program was designed to do.

IMET is now about a $50 million a year program. My amendment will transfer $5 million from this program to the United Nations Environmental Program, which reflects a different definition of national securities and a different definition of our international obligation.

The United Nations Environmental Program was established in 1973 and has become increasingly effective and increasingly used. The United States increasingly must understand that our obligations reach to a whole service of intertwined, interlocking, international institutions and not to the old, tired, cold war threats. The IMET Program is to train people in relation to the Soviet Union and the alleged threat from them. The UNEP Program is to attempt to train people and work with our ability to solve the international environmental issues.

UNEP resulted from the Stockholm Conference on the human environment. Senator PELL, the consponsor of this amendment, was a delegate to the Stockholm Conference in 1973 and has been our chief supporter of UNEP and the whole Stockholm dream ever since.

UNEP was established to facilitate international cooperation and action on global and regional environmental programs. Unfortunately, our support for UNEP in 1977 was twice what it is today; we have cut it in half over the last 10 years. This, despite the fact that we have at the same time given UNEP some very, very sharply increased responsibilities.

For example, UNEP was the primary institution negotiating the Montreal protocol, a model of an international agreement related to the limitation of fluorocarbons and release into the atmosphere—an obsolutely precedent setting and extraordinarily important endeavor.

UNEP was the institution that negotiated the Montreal protocol. UNEP also set a foundation for the International Panel on Climate Change, which I will come to in a little bit.

The IPCC is a very important international forum for the discussion of the important issue of climate change, especially the burning of fossil fuels and the creation of carbon dioxide.

UNEP established a network for the Basle Convention. You may say, what is the Basle Convention? The Basle Convention was a very important international agreement related to the transnational migration of hazardous waste.

What that means is, rich countries were taking their toxic waste, going over and buying off poor countries, and dumping their waste there. We subscribe to the international Basle Convention. To stop this, who do we ask to police it? We asked UNEP to police it.

All of this is very well and good. UNEP has done a good job. In fact, there is a very interesting General Accounting Office report on the U.S. participation in this environmental program. The purpose of this was to say, the report was to ask the questions, we have all of these responsibilities to carry out. How well are they doing it? The GAO report is a very good one and it concludes that UNEP has done very well. I ask unanimous consent to have the executive summary of this printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[U.S. General Accounting Office]

UNITED NATIONS: U.S. PARTICIPATION IN THE ENVIRONMENT PROGRAM, JUNE 1989

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Purpose

The Chairmen of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and its Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations and Congressman Gerald Solomon asked GAO to review selected issues concerning the U.N. Environment Program. Specifically, GAO was asked to examine (1) the Program's accounting practices, financial reserves, and status of its trust funds; (2) the general level of efficiency and effectiveness of its headquarters and field programs; and (3) the level of U.S. influence in the Program.

Background

The U.N. Environment Program was established in 1973. The Program's purpose is to act as a catalyst, coordinating and promoting participation of all countries and international organizations in national and international efforts to (1) preserve and enhance the environment and natural resource base and (2) help all countries to deal with environmental problems.

The Program has two primary bodies—a Governing Council and a Secretariat. The Governing Council consists of representatives from 58 countries, including the United States. The Council promotes international cooperation in the field of environment and provides general policy guidance for the direction and coordination of environmental programs within the U.N. system. The Secretariat, headed by an Executive Director, is responsible for carrying out the Program's activities.

The Program is financed through the U.N. budget, voluntary contributions to the Environment Fund, trust funds, and other miscellaneous income. The United States is the major contributor to the Environment Fund. In 1988 the United States contributed $7.8 million and $9.5 million was appropriated for 1989.

Results in brief

The Program appears to have adequate controls over its budget execution, financial and fund program reserves, and trust funds. Its financial rules and regulations, including its system of internal controls, biennial auditing by the U.N. Board of Auditors, and oversight by its Governing Council on which the United States is represented, provides a reasonable framework for financial management and accountability. Nevertheless, its financial reserve may be set too high, its support cost budget has exceeded established guidelines and it may be administering too many marginal, small-scale projects.

U.S. government and nongovernment organization officials commented favorably on the general level of the Program's efficiency and effectiveness. The United States has a strong influence within the Program because of its high-level of contributions and leadership role in environmental issues. GAO's report is based on information provided largely on an unverifiable basis and the views of U.S. and other officials.

Principal findings

Environment Fund, Reserves, and Trust Fund

The Environment Fund for the 1988–89 biennium budget amounted to $87.8 million funded by voluntary contributions from member states, and carryover funds from prior years. The budget consisted of $25.8 million for operating expenses, $60 million for the Program's environmental programs and projects, and a $2 million fund program reserve. The reserve is used to meet unforseen needs and to finance unanticipated projects.

The Program also has a financial reserve, which is adjusted each biennium to equal 7½ percent of its biennium budget. For the 1988–90 biennium the fund was $6.6 million. The financial reserve, which has never been used, was established to guarantee the financial liquidity and integrity of the Environment Fund.

The Program administers 22 trust funds, which had a balance of $17.4 million in December 1987.

Efficiency and Effectiveness

A comprehensive self-evaluation of its headquarters and field programs indicate that the Program has achieved success in creating various conventions and protocols on environment conservation. It has also addressed several environmental issues of global importance, such as ozone depletion and the "greenhouse" effect. The evaluation identified weaknesses in project design, interlinkages among programs, and a tendency to dispense funds on many small projects rather than on a few major programs. This evaluation led to organizational changes and improved management procedures.

Department of State and several U.S. government agencies and nongovernment organizations reported that the Program has effectively fulfilled its catalytic role and has coordinated several environmental initiatives of special interest to the United States. The Program is considered to be an effective forum for discussing and initiating actions on environmental issues and programs to which the United States attaches importance.

U.S. Influence

A general perception among participating U.S. government agencies and nongovernment organizations is that the United States has a strong influence within the Program. State officials told GAO that the United States is satisfied with the level of U.S. influence and that the Program supports activities of high priority to the United States and keeps political issues to a minimum.

Action Program Not Prepared

While State has established general goals to guide its participation in the Program, it has ceased annual preparation of action programs that define, in specific and measurable terms, U.S. goals and objectives and establish a specific plan for achieving them. Accordingly, even though U.S. participation appears to be going well, it is difficult to measure the extent to which U.S. interests are being served.

Recommendations

We recommend that the Secretary of State direct the Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs to establish an action program or a similar formulation that would define objectives and priorities for U.S. participation in the Program, and would specify a plan for achieving them.

Agency comments

In its comments on a draft of GAO's report, the State Department confirmed that it no longer prepares a detailed action program but pointed out that a document is prepared with some of the same features. In subsequent discussions with GAO, State officials agreed that a more comprehensive action program to guide U.S. participation in the Program is needed and said they will develop one.

Mr. WIRTH. A whole lot of new responsibilities are being given UNEP as well, Mr. President. They are now working on international agreements on biological diversity, on the relationship between forest and climate change, an extremely important issue addressed by the President in his State of the Union Message, and working on various issues related to helping developing countries deal with their environmental problems.

I have a very fine memorandum from Noel Brown at the United Nations on the increased responsibilities of UNEP. I ask unanimous consent that the first 2 summary pages of that also be printed in the RECORD. It defines very well the significant responsibilities that UNEP has taken on.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM FROM UNEP

Pursuant to our discussion, I am forwarding herewith certain items of information which I hope will be helpful in preparing the arguments necessary for the support of UNEP in the critical area of its financing:

1. At the 15th Session of the Governing Council where Governments had a chance to review and assess current environmental situations and to acknowledge the fact that environment had indeed moved to the top of the world's agenda, they were unanimous in their conclusion that UNEP was being asked to undertake additional tasks which could not be carried out without "substantial increases in the voluntary contribution to the Environment Fund." To this end, they set a target of $1 hundred million for contribution to the Environment Fund by the year 1992 and called upon governments to increase their contribution to the Fund by at least 35 percent per annum from 1 January 1989.

2. In identifying the areas in which the additional resources would be utilized, Governments approved a supplementary programme proposed by the Executive Director currently budgeted at $35 million for the biennium 1990–91, a copy of which is attached.

3. As should be clear from the supplementary programme, UNEP has identified such critical areas as:

Studies on the implications of climate change and rising sea levels in coastal areas,

Conserving biological diversity,

Relationship between change in the forests and climate,

Facilitating the implementation of the Montreal Protocol where many of the developing countries have considerable difficulties in discharging their responsibilities in this regard,

Facilitating the implementation of the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes,

Establishment of regional nodes of the Global Resource Information base, and Assisting developing countries in assessing their environmental problems and strengthen their environmental institutions.

4. These areas will undoubtedly be supplemented by others, perhaps less precisely defined, but urgent, nonetheless, wherein UNEP's assistance is increasingly being called. As environment becomes increasingly a popular cause—as a recent outpouring of Earth Day will attest—there will be clearly a broader public support base for sound environmental policy as well as increasing demand for action by UNEP in those areas where it is most competent, such as standard setting, consensus building, treaty formulation and authoritative scientific information. Increasingly, also, UNEP will be called upon to facilitate the preparatory process for 1992, particularly in areas dealing with the environment components of the agenda where UNEP's twenty years' worth of experience will prove to be invaluable.

5. In any event, it is encouraging to note that such countries like the United Kingdom has recently doubled its contribution, and others, as far as they are able, are endeavouring to meet the 35 percent target. In this, the United States stands in a special position having been the principal contributor throughout the years and more especially having exerted the leadership necessary for the Montreal Protocol to become a reality. We would hope that this same kind of leadership will obtain in these challenges facing UNEP, especially as it seeks to exploit the window of opportunity opened by the changing conditions of the world.

6. As more developing countries press the case for equity, UNEP is called upon to help translate this into a meaningful dialogue as we did in the discussions at Montreal. Given our solid relationship with industry and our encouragement for the development of environmentally benign technology, as well as reasonable procedures for its transfer, we believe that both the US Government and industry will have a critical role to play.

7. As US credibility increases in the environment field, we consider the proposed supplementary request, if approved, will send another clear signal to the world of the confidence that US places in the United Nations and the extent to which it is committed to strengthen the organization in discharging its duties. This is very much in keeping with the new spirit in the world which is placing a much higher value on the Organization as the world confronts a series of global challenges which can only be resolved through maximum co-operation and the solid support of such countries like the US, whose commitment to freedom and democratic principles is now becoming increasingly a new global value.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, we have established a record of need. We have a very clear record of a job well done. And we have a very important set of new responsibilities being given to UNEP. We also have an administration that says it supports UNEP. For example, the administration, in the White House press release on the 70-nation declaration on climate change said that this administration urges all countries to join and intensify the ongoing work on the intergovernmental panel on climate planning with respect to the framework convention.

In addition, in his remarks at the IPCC meeting at Georgetown the President said, "The United States is strongly committed to the IPCC process of international cooperation on global climate change." I ask unanimous consent that these documents be printed in the RECORD as well.

There being no objection, the documents were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the White House, Nov. 7, 1989]

UNITED STATES JOINS 70 NATIONS IN UNANIMOUS CONSENT DECLARATION ON GLOBAL CHANGE

The United States is strongly committed to the IPCC process of international cooperation on global climate change. We consider it vital that the community of nations be drawn together in an orderly, disciplined, rational way to review the history of our global environment, to assess the potential for future climate change, and to develop effective programs. The state of the science, the social and economic impacts, and the appropriate strategies all are crucial components to a global resolution.

The stakes are very high; the consequences very significant. The United States remains committed to aggressive and thoughtful action on environmental issues.

[From the UNEP North American News]

Mr. Reilly: The community of nations today faces an array of daunting environmental threats—acid rain, global warming, wildlife habitat destruction, the loss of species, stratospheric ozone depletion. The earth's climate may change dramatically, and with it, life as we know it on this remarkable planet. UNEP can play a vital role in meeting these challenges.

UNEP helped to catalyze negotiation of the Vienna Convention and the Montreal Protocol on protection of the ozone layer, as well as the Basel Convention on Transboundary Movement of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal. UNEP serves as an honest broker, bringing together governments to work on such difficult and potentially contentious issues as global warming and the protection of biological diversity. By providing an effective forum for negotiations among governments and for fostering solutions, UNEP can contribute a great deal to resolving the difficult issues we face. The 1992 Conference on Environment and Development should provide an ambitious agenda to guide UNEP well into the 21st century.

STATE DEPARTMENT STATEMENT

Last August, the State Department submitted to Congress a report which stated that "[UNEP's] programs provide the United States with a forum for making significant impact on the environmental policies of other countries, and an opportunity to address issues with transboundary implications." The report went on to say that UNEP's critical work and probable future role in the negotiation of a convention on global warming "warrants serious consideration by the United States of increasing contributions to UNEP through its environment fund, as called for at the May 1989 Governing Council meeting."

SUMMIT OF THE ARCH,
July 16, 1989.

PARIS ECONOMIC SUMMIT—JULY 1989

We advocate that existing environment institutions be strengthened within the United Nations system. In particular, the United Nations Environment Program urgently requires strengthening and increased financial support. Some of us have agreed that the establishment within the United Nations of a new institution may also be worth considering.

Mr. WIRTH. The Administrator of EPA, Mr. Reilly, in the UNEP North American News, also wrote a very strong statement about how important UNEP is, Mr. President. The State Department has also told us in testimony that UNEP's programs are extremely valuable.

Lastly, at the economic summit in Paris the United States stated that we advocate existing environmental institutions being strengthened within the United Nations system. The United Nations Environment Program is just such an institution.

What are we doing? The need is there. The world is changing. The administration says it supports this program but, unfortunately, when the UNEP came for an emergency supplemental of their own to try to fund these programs, the response was not very strong.

The Appropriations Committee suggested to the Foreign Relations Committee that the UNEP program be funded at the level of $17 million.

The administration, unfortunately, requested only $8 million. The Senate, thank goodness, appropriated $10 million last year and the House appropriated $12 million. We agreed with the House in conference and we were $5 million below the authorized level.

Since that time, a whole series of new programs have arisen, and the purpose of this amendment, Mr. President, is to get us back to the originally authorized level of funding and to a level that will meet the needs of this extraordinarily important international institution.

Where does the money come from? As I pointed out, it will come from the IMET Program, International Military Education and Training Program. One might ask, is there enough money in the program to do that? After all, we are spending only $48 million on IMET.

But, if we were to pick just two things that would equal the amount of the transfer, we could add together Spain and Korea. In Spain we have had a lot of base negotiation problems and the Koreans are doing very well, thank you very much. It seems to me this change of events would suggest we certainly can move funding from this old cold war program designed for the world of 1950.

IMET is an old, cold war program. Let us transfer $5 million out of this program and put it to use in this very exciting, forward-looking United Nations program which deals with our priorities of the future.

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will support this amendment as they reflect on the future of our national security concerns.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FORD). The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a principal cosponsor of the pending amendment offered by my friend and distinguished colleague from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH]. This amendment, increasing funding for the United Nations Environment Program to $17 million, deserves the full and vigorous support of the entire Senate.

In recent years, environmental issues have occupied an increasingly prominent position on the world agenda. Exemplifying the importance of this area of global concern, the Paris Economic Summit held this past July included the environment as a topic for discussion—a fact that sets this Summit apart from the 14 that had preceded it. Of equal significance, fully a third of the final communique of the Summit was devoted to environmental issues.

As environmental issues have become an inextricable part of the complex framework of international affairs, the United States' contribution to the U.N. Environment Program has lagged. In fact, the U.S. contribution has fallen by 50 percent in real terms since 1977.

The United States spends some $5.5 billion annually on our own Environmental Protection Agency—money that is very well spent. But as the global nature of so many of our environmental problems are increasingly understood, it makes no sense that we spend less than three-tenths of 1 percent on the global effort.

Last August, the State Department submitted to Congress a report which stated that "[UNEP's] programs provide the United States with a forum for making significant impact on the environmental policies of other countries, and an opportunity to address issues with transboundary implications." The report went on to say that UNEP's critical on global warming "warrants serious consideration by the United States of increasing contributions to UNEP through its environment fund, as called for at the May 1989 Governing Council meeting."

Mr. President, UNEP played an integral part in developing the Montreal protocol to protect the ozone layer. It played a crucial role in developing the Cairo plan of action under which African nations have begun to cooperate in solving their environmental problems. UNEP's International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals is helping developing nations control these dangerous chemicals. UNEP's Regional Seas Program continues to further sound management of marine resources.

Now is the time to provide modest additional resources to allow UNEP to step up its important work. As requests from around the globe pour into UNEP for assistance, it is crucial that the United States strengthen its commitment to the only international organization devoted exclusively to protecting our global environment. I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield to no one in this body on my own strong record on the environment, including fighting for funding for the United Nations Environment Program. In fact last year I was the one who successfully argued and got a 25-percent increase in the administration's request for UNEP. We did that in the congressional operations bill last year. That was not an easy thing to do.

I supported the House in conference that led to an additional $2 million in UNEP. I included strong report language supporing UNEP in the committee report. So I do not have to lay out my credentials for support of this program.

I might also say I am not a strong supporter of the IMET program and I commend the Senator from Colorado for his own statements on that. I might say, unlike some who can just do the speaking when it does not involve them, there are a couple of very important IMET programs in Colorado and I commend his courage in speaking out on them.

I was the Senator who successfully pushed 2 years ago to set a ceiling on IMET for the high-income countries. I forced a $7 million reduction in the subcommittee for IMET in this year's appropriation. In fact I attempted to cut off IMET entirely for high-income countries in conference with the House and probably would have been successful in that except for the strong opposition of the other body.

I required a full-scale report on the IMET Program from the GAO. I commend that to everybody here when it comes out very soon. In fact, I made it very clear in the Foreign Operations Subcommittee that there are going to have to be reforms made in the IMET Program if it is to continue.

I intend to work strongly to see that UNEP is fully funded and adequately funded as we go on. But I intend to offer an amendment which will, in effect, be a substitute. I will be doing that soon on behalf of myself and the ranking member of the subcommittee, Senator KASTEN.

Before I do that, however, I wish to yield to my good friend, the Senator from Wisconsin, who has a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, our primary concern is that the amendment, in order to fund $5 million in additional funding for UNEP, would reduce the International Military Education and Training Program by $7,500,000, a reduction of some 15 percent.

The $47 million available for IMET was itself a compromise, reached in the fiscal year 1990 appropriation bill. It was also a reduction to the administration's request.

Mr. President, we have received no formal request for additional funds for UNEP. We have no justification whatsoever that these funds are required, especially in the context of a dire emergency supplemental bill.

The senior Senator from Vermont and I as the chairman and ranking member of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, increased funding for UNEP in the Senate version of the fiscal year 1990 appropriations legislation and agreed to a further increase when that bill was in conference. Our record of support for this institution, notwithstanding the problems it has had, is strong.

Therefore, it is regrettable that we must speak against further funding for a program for which we have fought so hard in the Senate. Indeed, the Foreign Operations Subcommittee under its last three chairmen has been the leader in almost all the international environmental issues which the Senate has considered. We do not take a back seat to anyone on issues confronting the environment in the international arena.

The amendment would create serious problems for the IMET Program, which is an important part of our security assistance policy. Cutting 8 percent of a program with less than half a fiscal year to go will surely result in wasted resources. The net effect of this reduction at this time could have the same efect as a 14 percent to 16 percent cut at the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. President, all of the fiscal year 1990 IMET money has been allocated. Because IMET programs are small, a cut of this magnitude would disrupt many of its ongoing 106 country programs and would result in cancellation of as many as 300 foreign students this year. IMET programs are the only security assistance the United States provides to many smaller countries.

Reduction in IMET may appear insignificant, but takes on great importance to smaller recipients.

In conclusion, a cut of this magnitude to any program in this stage of the fiscal year is simply not a reasonable way to proceed. I would hope that the Senator from Colorado would reconsider and withdraw his amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1571

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I understand the way the procedure has been set up, there is room at this point for the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN] to offer an amendment. I ask unanimous consent it be in order for me to offer for myself and Senator KASTEN an amendment to the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Hearing no objection, the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], for himself and Mr. KASTEN, proposes an amendment numbered 1571.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

To the pending amendment, strike the first word "for" and all that follows through the end of the amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Of the funds made available in Public Law 101-167, for "International Organizations and Programs", an additional $5,000,000 may be made available for payment to the United Nations Environmental Program Fund, to carry out the provisions of section 2 of the United Nations Environmental Program Participation Act of 1983.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, this amendment, if it is agreed to, will make up to $5 million of existing funds available to assist the United Nations Environment Program.

Let me say in offering this, Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Colorado has been very strong and very forceful, as well as the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, in speaking for the need for this. The distinguished Senator from Colorado has been even more forceful in the cloakrooms, in the elevator, the steps coming up here and the steps going out of here. I thought for awhile that he was actually my shadow over the past few days in arguing for this.

I hope that he will accept this as a way to go forward. It is not every single thing he has asked for. I think it is considerably more than was in there. I say that in telling him that I concur completely with him on the need to add funds to UNEP and the need to get controls on the other program, IMET. In my judgment, this is the best we can do in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I appreciate the cooperation of the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee. I understand where we are at this later hour on the bill and I appreciate the forbearance of my colleagues.

I would like to register my appreciation to the chairman and to the ranking member, the distinguished Senator from Oregon. I think that with this amendment we are starting to move away from the cold war mentality of the 1950's and to the environmental or the global mentality of the 1990's. This is a small step, but we often begin important journeys with small steps.

I hope, Mr. President, that as we get to conference and as we get into the 1991 funding, and I know how strongly the distinguished Senator from Vermont feels about the UNEP program and about environmental issues overall, the Members of the Appropriations Committee will keep a special eye for the UNEP program and all that we are asking them to do.

They will not get much help from the administration, unfortunately. The administration put out a set of talking points opposing this additional funding with the usual things saying the United States has strongly supported UNEP and boasting about their fiscal year 1990 request of $8 million which, in fact, was half of what was authorized and, in fact, two-thirds of what the distinguished chairman of the appropriations subcommittee got into the program. They boast about their requesting $10 million this year, a 25-percent increase over the fiscal year 1990 request, without pointing out that the fiscal year 1990 request is really pretty small and that, overall, what we see is a 50-percent decline in U.S. support for UNEP since 1977.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the administration's talking points on this amendment.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNEP FUNDING

Provision: Provide an additional $5 million in FY '90 for the United Nations Environmental Program (UNEP).

The Administration opposes an additional $5 million in FY '90 for UNEP.

The United States is committed to the need to address environmental issues globally and has strongly supported UNEP from its inception. Furthermore, we have consistently maintained our standing as the largest contributor to the Environment Fund. Our FY '90 request of $8 million reflects this support.

The Administration's FY '91 request of $10 million for UNEP reflects a 25% increase over our FY '90 request and reaffirms the United States commitment to UNEP and to addressing environmental issues through international organizations and multilateral fora.

In addition to our request for UNEP, the President's FY 1991 budget includes new requests for contributions to three environmental programs within the IO and P account: FAO's Tropical Forestry Action Plan (TFAP), the World Meteorological Organization's Special Fund for Climate and Atmospheric Environmental Studies, and the International Tropical Timber Organization.

Mr. WIRTH. Having said that, I know that one of the things we are attempting to do is to raise the importance of this set of priorities. That is the purpose of this amendment. I greatly appreciate the understanding of the distinguished Senator from Vermont and the distinguished Senator from Oregon. I thank them very much. I will be most pleased to accept this amendment. Half a loaf is certainly better than none. I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished Senator from Oregon, Senator HATFIELD, be named a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, this amendment provides that the administration may use an additional $5 million of the amount appropriated for international organizations and programs for the United Nations Environmental Program Fund.

I offer this amendment primarily because I cannot support the offset which the senior Senator from Colorado has suggested, which would have cut more than 15 percent of the International Military Education and Training Program. That program is one of the better programs we support, and such a cut would do a great deal of harm to our efforts to carry on relations with the military of many other countries. The IMET Program is the only general military assistance which teaches human rights as part of its curriculum and attempts otherwise to make the military of other countries much more sensitive to our principles and ideals. It would be tragic if that program were cut so drastically.

I think the Senator from Colorado makes a valid point that additional funds may be necessary for environmental programs and my amendment would allow the Administration to make use of funds from the IO&P account for that purpose. The total amount we provided for IO&P in this fiscal year is $265,115,000—obviously a much larger pot of money from which to seek funds than the $47 million the original amendment would have cited.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1571) was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1572

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, on the unanimous-consent agreement, I had a slot for offering an amendment and I would like to do that now at this time. I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Senator BRADLEY and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, and myself, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD], for Mr. BRADLEY, for himself, Mr. BYRD, and Mr. HATFIELD, proposes an amendment numbered 1572.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 37 after line 12 insert the following:

SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS

In addition to any other amount provided in this bill for "School Improvement Programs" an additional $4,000,000 is hereby provided to carry out the Javits gifted and talented education program as authorized by title IV, part B of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as amended: Provided, That $480,000 of the amount provided herein shall be derived by transfer from the funds appropriated in Public Law 100-436 for part E, section 465, of the Higher Education Act, as amended.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this amendment adds $4 million to the Gifted and Talented Education Program. Only 12 percent of grant applications have been funded, and additional funds are desperately needed to extend this program to other States, as was intended in the original law. The amendment is deficit neutral as it is offset by reductions in the Student Loan Cancellation Program.

This amendment has been cleared on our side of the aisle, and I know of no objection on our side of the aisle. I yield to my chairman to speak for his side of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized in his own right.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment to add $4 million for the Jacob J. Javits Gifted and Talented appropriation.

Mr. President, the Gifted and Talented Program is terribly important. The needs of these students are real. More than 50 percent of the identified gifted students achieve below their ability level, and few teachers in gifted education are properly trained to design curriculum for these students.

The additional funding will add to the $9 million current funding to establish a $13 million total appropriation. Out of 231 grant applications last year, only 28 applications, 12 percent, received Federal funding for gifted and talented education programs. That means that many outstanding programs went unfunded, including many in New Jersey, which has received no Federal support for gifted and talented education. I am particularly concerned that strong consideration be given to the New Jersey Education Information Resource Center [NJEIRC] Program.

New Jersey has yet to establish a comprehensive approach to teaching gifted and talented students, particularly those students in urban areas. The NJEIRC has proposed to establish a center to act as the network headquarters for the program's schools. The NJEIRC has developed a comprehensive model to address the problems of underrepresentation in gifted and talented programs for the economically disadvantaged, those with limited English speaking ability, and minority groups. Their proposal addresses the major problems that, in the past, have hindered the development of effective gifted education programs in our cities.

Mr. President, gifted and talented children represent an invaluable national resource, one that remains sadly underdeveloped. I truly believe that our leadership position in the world depends on our commitment to our youth. Our goal must be to do everything in our power to help all students reach their potential level of intellectual development. This small increase of funding is a step in the right direction to achieve this end.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared on this side, and I recommend its adoption by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1572) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate has finally completed action, almost; we have one other amendment on which there has been a rollcall vote ordered. I am pleased that the Senate will very soon complete action on the fiscal year 1990 dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill. This bill was reported by the Appropriations Committee on April 24 and has been considered on the Senate floor now—this is the fifth day. The Senate is in its fifth day of consideration of this bill. The Senate, I believe, has adopted more than 170 amendments.

There are many who are anxious to see action on the bill completed quickly. The President wants the aid to Panama and Nicaragua, which is included in the bill, in the amounts of $420 million and $300 million respectively. Many in Congress have championed additional funds in the bill for disaster relief.

Mr. President, I wish to thank my distinguished colleague, Senator HATFIELD, the ranking Republican on the committee, for his cooperation and support throughout the process in this bill from the markup to the managing of the bill on the floor.

I want him to know how much I appreciate his strong support, and it has been effective support, his teamwork and his cooperation, and especially his friendship.

The senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], who is the chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, also deserves a special thanks for his very diligent and careful scrutiny of the foreign assistance requests which were considered by the Senate.

I thank the other members of the committee on both sides of the aisle—the other chairmen and ranking members of the subcommittees that were particularly involved in the bill.

Their cooperation is very much appreciated, as is the cooperation of all Members of the Senate in the processing of this complicated dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill.

I express my heartfelt thanks to the majority leader and to the Republican leader. They have demonstrated strong leadership and strong support in moving this bill along. Both the majority and minority leaders worked hard on this bill to develop time agreements, and I am very grateful to them.

I thank also the members and the staffs of the Senate Appropriations Committee. I thank the members of my own staff—Jim English, the director of the Senate Appropriations Committee staff, and all the subcommittee staff on my side of the aisle, and the clerical staff. And I also thank the members of the minority staff who likewise worked hard and who showed a similar dedication toward their work. It is this fine dedication and teamwork on the part of the staffs that follows through on the teamwork that is demonstrated by the chairman and the ranking member and the members on both sides of the aisle on the committee, and without that professional work on the part of staffs, we certainly would find it extremely difficult to carry on our services in behalf of the people.

All of the committee staff members are very professional, and they work well together on both sides of the aisle. This helps the members to complete their work expeditiously and effectively.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter by Robert D. Reischauer, Director of the Congressional Budget Office, dated April 27, addressed to the Honorable JAMIE L. WHITTEN, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, U.S. House of Representatives, with copies to the Honorable SILVIO CONTE and the Honorable MARK O. HATFIELD and to myself, be included in the RECORD, together with a letter addressed jointly to me and to Mr. HATFIELD by Senators SASSER and DOMENICI.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, DC, April 20, 1990.

Hon. ROBERT C. BYRD,
Chairman,
Hon. MARK O. HATFIELD,
Ranking Member, Committee on Appropriations, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN AND SENATOR HATFIELD: This is to recommend for inclusion in H.R. 4404, the fiscal year 1990 Dire Emergency Supplemental Appropriations bill, an amendment regarding the budgetary treatment of the Resolution Trust Corporation.

The amendment addresses technical budgetary changes that are consistent with the intent of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989. The amendment will prevent enormous swings in the deficit which would distort the true amount of deficit reduction needed to meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit targets. Without this amendment, the estimated deficit and the resulting sequester could be artificially increased by tens of billions of dollars for fiscal year 1991 without changing the long-term deficit reality.

This language has the support of the chairman and ranking members of the Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee. The Office of Management and Budget has no objection to this language or its inclusion in the supplemental.

We hope that you will agree that we need to accomplish this goal. We look forward to working with you on this matter. Thank you for your assistance.

Sincerely,

JIM SASSER,
Chairman.
PETE V. DOMENICI,
Ranking Member.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, D.C., April 27, 1990.

Hon. JAMIE L. WHITTEN,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This letter is in response to a request by your Committee for our interpretation and the budget impact of section 320 of H.R. 4404, the Dire Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for 1990, as reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Section 320 would amend the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (the so-called Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act) to effectively exclude the activities of the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) from sequestration calculations and from the Congressional budget resolution procedures. Two new sections would be added to Section 251(a)(6) of the Balanced Budget Act, which govern the calculation of the budget baseline and the need for deficit reductions. The first new section, subparagraph L, would exclude from the budget baseline and deficit calculations the RTC use and repayment of loans from the Federal Financing Bank [FFB] that are used for working capital requirements in resolving the savings and loan problem. The second new section, subparagraph M, would require that all other offsetting collections and disbursements of the RTC be assumed to net to zero in calculating the budget baseline and the budget deficit, beginning with the 1991 budget. The combined effect of the two sections is to remove effectively any budget impact of the RTC from the Balanced Budget Act calculations and also from the Congressional budget resolution estimates.

Section 320 would have no effect on the Congressional budget scoring for the current fiscal year because the 1990 budget resolution made no assumption for RTC working capital needs, and because subparagraph M would not apply to 1990. The budget effect for 1991 depends upon whose estimate is used for the RTC activities. In CBO's analysis of the President's proposals for 1991, we estimated that the RTC would have net outlays of $31 billion in fiscal year 1991 and net receipts of $13 billion in fiscal year 1992. The President's January budget, in contrast, estimated $7.3 billion in net outlays by the RTC in 1991. A detailed discussion of our baseline projections of RTC spending is contained in Appendix A to our March 1990 report, "An Analysis of the President's Budgetary Proposals for Fiscal Year 1991." I am enclosing a copy of this discussion for your information.

The budgetary impact of RTC activities is highly uncertain both with respect to the ultimate cost of resolving the savings and loan problem as well as the year-to-year cash flows. Closing or selling hundreds of insolvent thrifts may involve potential swings of tens of billions of dollars from year to year. For example, the CBO baseline estimates for 1991 and 1992 show a swing of $44 billion for RTC net spending.

CBO's baseline estimates were made in late February when there was very little information available from the Administration about the RTC spending plans. Therefore, we had to make a number of critical assumptions that are subject to change as more information becomes available. One assumption, for example, was that the RTC would borrow $24 billion from the FFB in 1990, and another $31 billion in 1991. Recently, the RTC Oversight Board approved plans to borrow $45.3 billion from the FFB during the current calendar year quarter, which ends June 30. If the RTC were to borrow this amount and spend it before September 30, our current deficit estimate for 1990 of $159 billion would be too low by $21 billion. It would also lower our baseline deficit estimate for 1991 by a corresponding amount. This is another illustration of the potential volatile impact of RTC activities for the federal budget.

CBO has argued for some time that RTC spending should be included in the budget totals but largely excluded from the Balanced Budget Act calculations. The rationale for the exclusion is that such spending does not affect national saving in the way that most federal spending does. Unlike most recurrent federal expenditures, RTC spending for thrift resolution involves only an exchange of one asset or liability for another. These transfers to assets leave private income and wealth unchanged, and thus do not affect saving or consumption.

Excluding most RTC activities from the deficit calculations in the Balanced Budget Act would also be consistent with the current treatment of asset sales under the act. The act excludes nonroutine asset sales from the budget baseline used to compute the spending cuts under the automatic deficit reduction provisions. It is unclear whether RTC asset sales under current law are covered by this exclusion. Unless a statutory change is made, the Office of Management and Budget would have to make its own interpretation. If OMB were not to count RTC asset sales as receipts, it would certainly make sense for the Congress also to exclude RTC's expenditures of working capital to acquire these assets. Counting asset acquisitions but not sales against budget targets would overstate outlays over time and needlessly and inconsistently bias budget policy toward fiscal contsraint.

CBO's argument for excluding RTC activities from the Balanced Budget Act does not apply of its interest expenses. RTC's interest outlays for its working capital borrowing from the FFB are not merely an exchange of assets but represent a true increase in the government's cost. Section 320 of H.R. 4404 would exclude these interest costs as well as all other RTC activities. CBO's baseline estimates of RTC's interest payments to the FFB are $3 billion for 1991 and $4 billion for 1992.

I hope that this information meets your needs.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Director.

CBO'S BASELINE PROJECTIONS OF RTC SPENDING

The Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA), enacted in August 1989, established the mechanisms for dealing with the savings and loan crisis. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), through the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC) Resolution Fund, is to complete the resolution of institutions sold before March 1989. The Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) is to close or sell savings and loan institutions that are currently insolvent or expected to fail through August 1992, and the new Savings Association Insurance Fund (SAIF) is responsible for dealing with problem thrifts after that date.

The legislation provided the RTC with $50 billion to close or subsidize the sale of hundreds of insolvent thrift institutions—$18.8 billion from the Treasury, $1.2 billion from the Federal Home Loan Banks, and another $30 billion to be borrowed through the off-budget Resolution Funding Corporation (REFCORP) starting in 1990. The $50 billion was intended to pay for insurance losses that could never be recovered. In the process of resolving the problem thrifts, however, the RTC will need cash far in excess of the $50 billion authorized by FIRREA to finance the purchase of assets that will subsequently be sold. For example, if an institution has assets with a book value of $100 million and insured liabilities of $130 million, a liquidation could require the RTC to spend $130 million immediately in cash to pay off creditors. It is further possible that an amount less than the book value would be recovered in future years as assets were sold, say $70 million. In this example, up-front cash of $130 million would be necessary, even though the ultimate loss would be only $60 million. Theoretically, the use of working capital is temporary. But if recoveries from asset sales are less than initially estimated, some of the working capital may not be repaid and the government's ultimate losses will increase.

The need for working capital appears to be substantial. The Administration has indicated a range of $40 billion to $100 billion—because the least costly method of resolving many institutions is believed to be through liquidations or "clean-bank" transactions, which require the RTC to strip out bad assets and sell them separately. Such transactions require much more up-front cash than selling or merging the entire institution. RTC's authority to borrow working capital for this purpose is not unlimited, however. FIRREA effectively caps RTC's obligations so that its liabilities may not exceed its assets, with assets in receivership valued at 85 percent of their net realized value, an amount that cannot be known at the time and would have to be estimated. FIRREA does not specify the source of working capital or the form that the borrowing could take.

The Department of Justice recently clarified the legal authority of the RTC to raise working capital by borrowing from the Federal Financing Bank (FFB), and the RTC Oversight Board has announced that the RTC will begin borrowing from the FFB very soon. Funds borrowed from the FFB will add to the federal deficit when spent. Another potential source of working capital is the RTC's $5 billion line of credit with the Treasury, although the RTC expects to use this source of funds primarily for emergency purposes. In addition, the RTC could use private markets to raise off-budget funding for insolvent thrifts to supplement its FFB borrowing, but this form of financing would be more costly and has limited usefulness.

BASELINE PROJECTIONS FOR THE RTC

The budgetary impact of spending by the RTC is still highly uncertain, even for 1990 and 1991. Closing or selling hundreds of insolvent thrifts may involve potential swings of tens of billions of dollars from year to year, depending on a host of interrelated factors that are extremely difficult to predict, including:

The number of institutions that the Office of Thrift Supervision will identify for the RTC caseload;

The form of the resolutions, with liquidations requiring much larger cash expenditures up front than assisted acquisitions, but resulting in more cash income in subsequent years;

The order in which cases are resolved: if institutions with larger losses are resolved first, there will be greater spending in initial years;

The pace of resolutions, which has been slow to date;

The form and timing of borrowing of working capital; and

The timing and value of asset sales.

Also, the RTC could take steps that would increase or accelerate its use of working capital and affect the budget as well. For example, it could delay some or all of the REFCORP borrowing, thus shifting outlays from 1991 to 1990. Such a delay would also allow the RTC to borrow working capital equal to 100 percent of the unused REFCORP borrowing authority, whereas if the REFCORP funds were used to purchase assets, borrowing for working capital would be limited to 85 percent of the value of the assets acquired. Also, it could overvalue some of its assets, thus allowing additional borrowing, and could seek Congressional approval, without statutory changes required, to make use of its legal authority to incur net obligations beyond $50 billion. (FIRREA technically allows the RTC to spend a net of $68.8 billion, though the higher figure was apparently unintended.)

Given these uncertainties and the volatile nature of spending for this purpose, a number of assumptions had to be made in updating the CBO baseline to include the RTC's use of working capital. The baseline assumes that $24 billion will be borrowed from the FFB in 1990, and another $31 billion in 1991. Other critical assumptions are spelled out below. The net result is to increase CBO baseline projections for RTC outlays by $19 billion in 1990 and by $26 billion in 1991 from the January baseline levels (see Table A–3). Because this additional spending in 1990 and 1991 would permit the acquisition and subsequent sale of more assets, baseline outlays in later years are negative, and below previous estimates by a total of almost $25 billion over the 1992–1995 period.

THE BASELINE COMPARED WITH THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

The President's budget provides few details about the assumptions used to estimate spending for the RTC over the next five years, and several financial statements normally included are missing. In the President's 1991 budget request, the RTC uses only limited working capital, largely by spending previous appropriations and REFCORP funds for temporary lending to thrifts to replace funds borrowed at high interest rates. These loans are technically repaid and that cash is reused when the institution is finally closed. Proceeds from asset sales are also used for working capital.

The CBO reestimate of the President's budget is identical to the baseline, because no legislation is proposed in the budget. Thus, CBO's estimate of RTC outlays exceeds the estimates in the President's budget by about $31 billion in 1990 and $24 billion in 1991, but is lower by $13 billion in 1992 and 1993, $10 billion in 1994, and $7 billion by 1995 (see Table A–3). A more detailed discussion of the assumptions underlying the CBO baseline follows.

BASELINE ASSUMPTIONS

The CBO baseline assumes that the RTC will borrow from the FFB until it reaches the statutory cap on its outstanding obligations. However, there is some uncertainty about the amount of this cap. While it appears that the intent of the Congress was to limit the RTC to net spending of no more than $50 billion, the formula limiting RTC's obligations in FIRREA failed to include Treasury appropriations of $18.8 billion in 1989. Thus, FIRREA technically allows the RTC to spend a net of $68.8 billion. The Administration has indicated that it will honor the $50 billion ceiling, and the General Accounting Office, when calculating RTC's net cumulative losses, will assume that the $50 billion limitation applies. Consistent with this treatment, the CBO baseline assumes that the RTC will borrow as much as it can pay back from liquidating assets, while realizing net losses of no more than $50 billion over time.

A key to determining the amounts the RTC is likely to borrow are the expected proceeds from the sale of assets, which represent the second largest source of cash to the RTC. Estimating the pace and size of sale proceeds realized by the RTC is highly speculative, given that there is little historical precedent for sales of this magnitude, and given the competing goals of minimizing the losses to the federal government, minimizing the effects of disposal of assets on local economies, and generating sufficient cash for case resolutions. CBO's estimates assume that the RTC will recover an average of about 70 percent of the estimated value of assets at the time they are acquired. Collections are expected over an eight-year period after the assets are placed in receivership; more than 75 percent of the collections is expected in the first four years. CBO's caseload projections are based on RTC's priorities for selecting cases for resolution.

CBO estimates that the RTC could borrow about $55 billion in working capital and pay it back from asset sales over the next 10 years. During the 1990–92 period, cash raised by the Resolution Funding Corporation ($30 billion), remaining 1989 Treasury contributions ($9 billion), asset sales ($37 billion), repayments of advances ($11 billion net), and FFB borrowing ($55 billion) would allow the RTC to spend about $120 billion on case assistance, and make interest ($8 billion) and principal ($13 billion) payments to the FFB (see Table A–4).

TABLE A–4. PROJECTED USES AND SOURCES OF RTC CASH, FISCAL YEARS 1990–92

Notes.—Items in parenthesis do not count toward the calculation of RTC's budget outlays. RTC principal repayments to the FFB are repayment of agency debt, and do not add to the deficit. Treasury appropriations and proceeds from FFB borrowings are a means of financing agency spending, and do not count as offsetting collections to the RTC or reduce outlays. RTC = Resolution Trust Corporation; FFB = Federal Financing Bank; REFCORP = Resolution Funding Corporation.

RTC'S ADDITIONAL FUNDING NEEDS

The $120 billion included in the baseline for RTC case resolutions for 1990 through 1992 is probably sufficient to resolve 250 to 350 insolvent institutions, but is almost certainly not enough to resolve the 500 to 600 institutions now in the RTC caseload or expected to join it during the next three years. Almost all of that spending is expected to occur before the end of 1991, when the RTC would run out of cash—both for insurance losses and for working capital. CBO now estimates that by 1992 the RTC will need at least an additional $25 billion to $30 billion for net losses, plus working capital of at least the same amount, in order to resolve the entire inventory of 500 to 600 insolvent thrifts. This estimate does not include costs for additional thrifts that are likely to become insolvent in the next few years. Under current law, SAIF would have to handle cases that remain after the RTC authority to resolve cases ends in 1992.

THE BUDGET TREATMENT OF RTC SPENDING

The President's budget distinguishes between two types of working capital: "normal," which is repaid from asset sales within months, and "extraordinary," which is repaid from asset sales over a long period of time. The normal working capital, which is included in the President's budget, is paid off within a fiscal year and has little impact on the deficit.

The President's budget makes a case for excluding the "extraordinary" working capital from the budget calculations used to determine sequestration amounts under the Balanced Budget Act. CBO agrees that such spending has no real economic effect. Moreover, the cash-based budget is ill suited for measuring the long-term impact of taxpayers of RTC's activities, which increase the deficit in early years while lowering it in later years when the proceeds from asset sales off-set other government spending.

The Balanced Budget Act excludes asset sales from both the budget baseline and the calculation of budgetary savings—except for "routine, ongoing" asset sales or sales previously mandated by law. It is not clear whether RTC asset sales are covered by the exclusion; if they are, so that asset sales would not count as receipts, it would also make sense not to count RTC's expenditure of working capital to acquire the assets. Counting asset acquisitions but not sales against budget targets would overstate outlays over time and needlessly and inconsistently bias budget policy toward fiscal constraint. Nonetheless, the act contains no provision that would allow this difficulty to be resolved, and CBO believes that a statutory change would be required to exclude the spending of working capital from the deficit totals used for the Balanced Budget Act.

Indeed, a clear economic case exists for excluding from the act's baseline deficit calculation all of RTC's net expenditures except payment of interest on RTC's debt to the FFB. (Repayment of principal does not count as an outlay in any event.) This case is based on the fact that such spending does not change the government's balance sheet and does not affect national saving in the way that most federal spending does. The same case cannot be made for the interest on government borrowing, whether through the FFB, REFCORP, or the Treasury. (Table I-5 shows CBO's deficit estimates excluding noninterest outlays of the RTC.)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished chairman of the committee and the ranking member for their perseverance, patience, and steady leadership in guiding the bill to this point. I appreciate very much their efforts. It has been very difficult.

We are all familiar with the rules of the Senate, which permit unlimited debate and unlimited amendment, but I think the managers have handled the bill very well, and I am pleased that we are at this point.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quourm call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I and the distinguished Republican leader and the managers are unaware of any Senator who wants a rollcall vote on final passage of this bill. I had earlier discussed the matter with some of my colleagues who had requested it, but they are now agreeable to proceeding without a rollcall vote on final passage.

I accordingly ask unanimous consent that the rollcall vote on final passage be vitiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I also ask that unanimous consent that upon the disposition of this matter, the time between then and 7 p.m. be for debate on the pending cloture motion on the motion to proceed to S. 135, the time to be equally divided in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues, and I now yield the floor.

VOTE ON AMENDMENT NO. 1569

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on amendment 1569?

There is no further debate. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 73, nays 24, as follows:

NOT VOTING—2

Bentsen	Gore

So the amendment (No. 1569) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, it is with some reluctance that I am forced to oppose this appropriations bill. It has a number of essential provisions in it that I strongly support, such as vital additional money for the Head Start, Food Stamp, Unemployment Insurance, and Pseudorabies Eradication programs. I also want to say, at the outset, that I endorse and support the $400 million in off-budget housing loan guarantees for Israel.

I cannot, however, support the levels of funding this bill provides for Panama and Nicaragua. I therefore supported Senator BYRD's attempt to significantly lower the amount of assistance the bill provides for Panama. I was greatly disappointed that this modest, sensible amendment was defeated on a very narrow 51-to-48 vote.

I also want to make it crystal clear that I think it was a huge mistake not to adopt the Wirth-Dixon amendment to provide for additional U.S. attorneys and additional FBI agents to deal with the tremendous backlog of S&L fraud cases. There are over 20,000 case referrals and over 2,327 inactive cases that the Department of Justice has not been able to pursue yet because they simply do not have enough FBI agents and attorneys to do so. This backlog is appalling. What makes it even worse is the fact that over 1,300 of the inactive cases, and literally thousands of the referrals, involve cases of fraud and embezzlement of amounts over $100,000.

Unfortunately, we cannot get back every nickel that was stolen. However, I do not think that the American people will forgive us if we do not make every attempt to get every penny that we can.

I think that the Senate would have adopted the Wirth-Dixon amendment, and I think it was unconscionable that a procedural device was used to prevent the Senate from working its will.

As to the Panama and Nicaragua assistance, I want to make it clear that I do not object to the concept of providing some assistance to these two countries. Indeed, I think a good argument can be made that some amount of assistance is in our national security interest.

The Panama Canal is a transportation facility of undoubted strategic importance. We sent troops into Panama earlier this year because of our strategic interests there, and because of another crucial American interest—our interest in doing everything we can in the war on drugs. We do, therefore, have interests in Panama, and some United States assistance may be appropriate to protect our interests.

The same thing is true in Nicaragua. We spent well over $300 million over the last 8 years or so in an effort to bring democracy to Nicaragua. That effort has now succeeded, but the local economy there is in shambles and some degree of United States help may be a good idea.

Having said that, however, I must also say that this bill is not the place to provide that help. This is a dire emergency supplemental. It should only be used to supplement ongoing programs where the need is critical. This is no place to begin new programs, yet that is exactly what this bill does with respect to Panama and Nicaragua.

This bill gives us no way to judge budgetary priorities. It does not help us decide how to allocate our foreign assistance budget among the many worthy competing needs. It gives us no way to determine how our foreign assistance budget fits into our overall budget. It doesn't tell us how to balance foreign aid with domestic needs.

This bill doesn't do these things because a supplemental cannot do them. It is not designed to do them. That process can only take place in the budget resolution and in the regular, annual appropriations bills.

We are only weeks away from considering the budget resolution. The regular fiscal year 1991 appropriations bills will be before us soon after that.

Today is therefore the wrong day to be debating assistance to Panama and Nicaragua. An urgent supplemental is not the place to create new spending programs without the regular procedural protections that help us judge spending priorities.

We have a lot of pressing needs here at home—needs that are, at best, being inadequately met in the Federal budget. Before we add major new foreign assistance moneys to the budget, I want to be satisfied that crucial domestic priorities are not being sacrified. That means being able to look at both the entire foreign aid budget and our domestic budget at once. That cannot be done today, and, for these reasons, and the other reasons I mentioned earlier, I must therefore vote against this legislation.

VETERANS HEALTH CARE

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise today to urge my colleagues' support for the $94 million supplemental appropriation included in the bill for the Department of Veterans Affairs health-care system for the current fiscal year. On April 3, 1990, the House of Representatives passed the fiscal year 1990 dire emergency supplemental with $50 million for the VA medical care account. Although I applaud the worthwhile efforts of the House, I am convinced that more is needed to keep the VA health-care system on track this year, and I am delighted that the Senate Appropriations Committee heeded the urgent recommendations presented by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] and myself to provide a substantial increase over the House add on. This major supplemental appropriations bill will, if the House agrees, stop the financial hemorrhaging in VA facilities across the country.

This supplemental, coupled with the President's promising VA budget request for the medical care account for fiscal year 1991, can signify the turning point in the long struggle to enable VA to get back on its feet again. We've got to provide a period of stability so the system can catch its breath and focus on providing high-quality health care rather than responding to fiscal emergencies every day.

The current crisis in VA medical care has been brewing for the last several years and is the result of seriously inadequate administration requests combined with inaccurate administration representations regarding the needs of the VA health-care system. Over the last 4 fiscal years alone, fiscal year 1987–1990, Congress has added over $1.7 billion to the administration's appropriations requests for VA medical care. Even those increase, however, proved to be inadequate to maintain the VA health-care system at the program levels intended by the Congress. Hidden shortfalls in funding for the direct costs of patient care repeatedly forced VA to divert funds from equipment and maintenance and repair in order to keep staffing and workload levels at or close to intended levels.

Eventually, this kind of cannibalization of equipment and other nonrecurring funding was pushed beyond tolerable limits. The amounts available for diversion to direct care costs were exhausted; VA's direct care capacity fell off; and enormous backlogs of new and replacement equipment, prosthetics, and maintenance and repair needs developed. Many VA medical centers were forced to cut back in various ways. They reduced staff; they closed beds and even entire wards; they shut down innovative and effective programs, such as, for example, drug and alcohol treatment and hospital-based-home-care programs; they curtailed community nursing home placements; and they postponed activations of completed facilities.

That was the kind of situation that was overwhelming VA health-care programs when, in September 1988, I chaired hearings that highlighted the severe funding problems in that system. At the hearing, the committee heard strong and consistent testimony from the witnesses that this was the worst fiscal crisis they had ever seen in VA. To address the severe funding issues that faced VA in fiscal year 1989, I initiated and was joined by 24 Senators in an October 1988 letter to President Reagan, and by 41 Senators in a January 1989 letter to President Bush, urging submission of an fiscal year 1989 supplemental appropriation. The fiscal year 1989 $345 million supplemental that was finally enacted on June 30, 1989, was just over half of the amount I had recommended but was $42 million more than the President had finally requested on March 24, 1989. These funds were use to begin rebuilding VA's staffing level and restoring programs and services which had been closed down or curtailed as well as to make a major reduction in the prosthetics backlog and a small dent in the equipment backlog.

The fiscal year 1990 VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies Appropriations Act was enacted on November 9, 1989, as Public Law 101–144 with an appropriation of $11.434 billion for VA's medical care account. That amount, combined with the $50 million appropriated for that account for VA drug-abuse treatment programs in the Department of Transportation appropriation measure (Public Law 101-164), exceeded the administration's request by $743 million. When these appropriations were enacted, it seemed that the funding level for fiscal year 1990 should be minimally adequate though probably austere. Unfortunately, at the beginning of fiscal year 1990, there was a $252.4 million shortfall due to a $158.4 million Gramm-Rudman sequestration and a $94 million VA miscalculation in personnel costs. This shortfall continues to pose a grave threat to VA health care in the current fiscal year.

Because of the dire situation that VA facilities are facing in the current fiscal year, 40 Senators joined me in a bipartisan letter that I sent to President Bush on December 22, 1989, urging him to submit a request for a fiscal year 1990 supplemental. Two months later, on February 27, 1990, I personally delivered to President Bush a second bipartisan letter signed by 52 Senators and making the same appeal. Since no such request was submitted, Congress has taken the initiative to provide added funding.

At the Veterans' Affairs Committee's February 23 hearing, VA's then Chief Medical Director testified that "the budget in the hospital system now is approximately at the same level we were a year ago". A year ago, we were told that VA was experiencing a fiscal crisis; as I have noted, witnesses in September 1988 characterized the fiscal condition of the VA health-care system as the worst fiscal crisis that VA had ever faced. Thus, this year, according to VA's Chief Medical Director, the situation is still that bad.

Also at the February 23 hearing, VA field witnesses from the Baltimore, Chicago, Seattle, and Gainesville VAMC's testified under oath about specific funding shortfalls at their facilities. All four witnesses stated that community nursing home placements have been reduced, generally from 6 to 3 months. They also noted reductions in patient workload and serious equipment needs. Dr. Stanley Geyer, chief of staff at the Seattle VAMC, said that he had brought with him "a 20-some page list of equipment that we need to buy at the Seattle Hospital." Joseph Moore, director of the Lakeside VAMC in Chicago, said that replacement equipment funding "continues to be bad for us" and funding for new equipment "gets worse each year." Malcolm Randall, director of the Gainesville VAMC, stated that the VA facility is "turning away people who apply for care who feel that they are entitled to care." Barbara Gallagher, director of the VAMC in Baltimore, said that the VA facility is not furnishing inpatient care to any category B or C veterans. The other witnesses stated that their facilities were seeing very few category B or C veterans.

After this budget hearing, I received, from Secretary of Veterans Affairs Edward Derwinski, a March 15, 1990, letter which stated that "current fiscal year 1990 funding—$72 million more than we had estimated we would need * * * will permit a balanced program in which VA will provide care to all service-connected and low-income veterans expected to seek care this year." Unfortunately, Secretary Derwinski's assertion is not borne out by the facts. The $72 million VA calls extra is actually not even enough to maintain current services. Jack Powell, the executive director of the Paralyzed Veterans of America, put the issue well at the committee's April 4 hearing on the future structure of the VA health care system when he asked, "Is it an honest, objective assessment if you start out from the standpoint that you have a $72 million surplus while your hospitals are indicating millions of dollars of shortfall?"

Even in the short time since our February 23 hearing on the budget, further cuts have been made to important programs and services across the VA health care system. For example, the Martinez, CA, VAMC has recently closed a 45-bed ward and put a freeze on hiring. The Salem, VA, VAMC reported a $1.57 million fiscal year 1990 shortfall as of January 31, 1990. According to a January 8–11, 1990, survey by a field representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the San Francisco VAMC will experience a shortfall of nearly $5 million in fiscal year 1990. A report based on a January 29–February 2, 1990, visit by field representatives of the American Legion to the Birmingham, AL, VAMC notes that there is a fiscal year 1990 budget shortfall of approximately $500,000, which has prompted such actions as the reduction of 20 FTE, delays in filling vacant positions, and inadequate beds in the blind rehabilitation center to meet the demand for such services. A survey of the same facility by field representatives of the Veterans of Foreign Wars during January 8–12, 1990, placed the fiscal year 1990 shortfall at $1.5 million.

In a January 18, 1990, VA document entitled "Budgetary Implications for Fiscal Year 1990," the Minneapolis, MN, VAMC reported:

> The Department of Veterans Affairs health care system has been plagued by severe underfunding in Fiscal Year 1989 and it appears that this situation will not reverse itself in fiscal year 1990. * * * Financial restrictions have * * * [made] it impossible to fully utilize the new Medical Center. Unfunded salary costs, as well as mandatory absorption of other costs, has continued to compound difficulties in meeting both workload demands and mandated employee levels.

These financial restrictions mean that the Minneapolis VAMC will be unable to complete activation of the 80 remaining beds in its extended-care center, unable to activate of the Twin Ports Outpatient Clinic, and unable to fill approximately 100 vacant positions. In addition, there will continue to be a shortfall for the costs of medical supplies and long waiting lists for care.

A March 21, 1990, VA inspector general review of the Portland, OR, VAMC points to budget problems at this facility as well. The IG concluded:

> "The medical center does have a resource shortage problem which has led to the diversion of some patients to community hospitals, a limited hiring freeze, cut backs in selected services, the closing of one ward, and not opening another ward. * * * The medical center would require a substantial amount of funds (currently estimated by the medical center a $10.9 million) to open closed wards and provide a full range of medical services to all veterans.

The Lincoln, NE, VAMC had to reduce staffing by 11 and convert $383,000 from previously restricted accounts in order to get through fiscal year 1989. During fiscal year 1990, the Lincoln facility has had to reduce FTEE by another seven and severely restrict new hires. The facility will have difficulty meeting current workload demands, and its medical supply inventories will be depleted by the end of the fiscal year.

In February 1990, the Denver VAMC took steps to address its fiscal crisis. Dialysis services were reduced to a single 12-hour shift three times per week, medical service admissions were limited, both a psychiatric and a surgical ward were closed, and the Drug and Alcohol Program was reduced.

Across the VA health care system, there is an enormous replacement equipment backlog. Despite the expenditure of $50 million for such equipment from the fiscal year 1989 supplemental appropriation, that backlog is expected to be $638 million at the end of the current fiscal year. Such huge—and growing—replacement equipment needs pose a major threat to the quality of health care services at VA facilities. Although I am still very disturbed by the cannibalization of equipment funds to pay for staffing and supply needs, I am pleased that the $94 million supplemental will permit a reduction of this backlog by about 8 percent.

This year, as never before, Congress has been faced with difficult spending choices as the changing needs of our Nation and world—to assist a growing elderly population, to fight against the tragedies of the AIDS and drug epidemics and of environmental degradation, to recover from natural disasters such as the northern California earthquake, and to encourage democratic governments in Eastern Europe and elsewhere—come on top of our trillion dollar deficit.

There is no question but that the current fiscal year 1990 funding level would mean that tens of thousands of veterans would this year be denied the quality of care—or denied care entirely—that we owe them. I therefore urge all of my colleagues to demonstrate by their support for this $94 million VA health care supplemental that maintaining our Nation's commitment to caring for our veterans is a promise that will not be sacrificed. I thank the Chair of the VA, HUD, and independent agencies Appropriations Subcommittee, Ms. MIKULSKI, the chairman of the full committee, Mr. BYRD, and the ranking minority members of each unit, Mr. GARN and Mr. HATFIELD, for their great cooperation. In addition, I want again to express my appreciation for the hard work of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI], a member of both the Veterans' Affairs and Appropriations Committees, for his dedicated—and successful—efforts with me to increase the amount for the VA health care system in the Senate bill.

AIDS

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, at this time of year, when we are considering the fiscal year 1990 supplemental appropriations bill for disaster assistance, I would like to take the opportunity to stress the importance of Federal AIDS research activities. The AIDS epidemic is a public health emergency, a qualified disaster.

I am not going to offer another amendment or ask for more money for a Federal program. Instead, I must simply raise an important issue, and that is the tremendous impact AIDS has on our Nation's health and health care resources.

At the end of March 1990, over 128,000 AIDS cases had been recorded by the Centers for Disease Control, and close to 1 million people are infected with the HIV virus. AIDS research is a crucial means to prevent the increasing transmittal of the disease and to enable us to find a cure.

The National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases [NIAID], under the National Institutes of Health [NIH], has established Centers for AIDS Research [CFAR's] at 11 universities. The 5-year grants will promote AIDS research, with the ultimate goal of improving the diagnosis, treatment, and prevention of AIDS.

The CFAR Program is designed for groups of researchers and investigators with established reputations in the AIDS field and ongoing AIDS research grants from NIAID and NIH. The CFAR Program aims to consolidate and to focus the AIDS research activities at these universities.

Efforts such as CFAR's could make AIDS a manageable chronic disease, with increased life expectancy and eventual research advances in other areas, such as immunology and epidemiology. We must continue to fund CFAR's and other vital Federal AIDS research. I urge my colleagues in the Senate to join me in supporting the CFAR Program at the appropriate time.

Through creative and interactive AIDS research programs, such as the CFAR's, we continue to escalate our battle against AIDS. We must continue to combat and to control this onerous and tragic disease.

Mr. HARKIN. I agree with my colleague from Florida.

DOMESTIC REFUGEE RESETTLEMENT FUNDING

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, as the Senate continues debate on the supplemental appropriations bill, I want to take this opportunity to discuss refugee resettlement programs.

I am extremely pleased this supplemental provides additional funding to make up for shortfalls in the State Department's overseas refugee assistance and processing programs.

Clearly, the United States must continue in its humanitarian mission and provide assistance to refugees worldwide. Since 1980, when the Refugee Act of 1980 was enacted, we have resettled over 1.3 million refugees in this country. The Appropriations Committee deserves great credit for working to this end.

But frankly I am disappointed by the failure of HHS and OMB to request supplemental funds for domestic refugee programs.

We must remember that refugee policy does not end with the actual processing and admissions into the United States. That is only the beginning as the long resettlement process begins.

Most, if not all refugees, enter the United States with minimal English skills, competitive job training, or education. For this reason, programs were enacted through the Refugee Act to help promote self-sufficiency so that refugee families could become functioning and contributing members of society.

Without the training and services these programs provide, there is, in all likelihood, little hope that these individuals can become productive members of society, which is truly unfortunate given the tragedies and persecution these people have already endured and from which they escaped.

Despite the intent of the Refugee Act which says that States be reimbursed for the cash and medical programs they provide to refugees during the first 36 months of resettlement, we are finding that funding is inadequate to the point that this reimbursement period has dropped to just 4 months.

This means that instead of paying the costs associated with public assistance programs beginning in the 37th month as the act provides or even in the 25th month as was the case last year, States and local governments are having to pick up the tab beginning after the 4th month. When a refugee is unable to attain self-sufficiency and thus provide for a family, the refugee must rely on public assistance, which the States must pay. Unfortunately, Mr. President, it is extremely difficult for a refugee family to become self-sufficient in just 4 months.

Sadly, instead of seeking an appropriate level of funding—one that is linked in some responsible manner to refugee admissions—the administration's response has been to reduce the reimbursement period despite rising admissions. Effective January 1, 1990, that fell from 24 to just 4 months, which means a cost transfer of over $85 million to the States.

Let me underscore the point that other States are not immune to these funding transfers. While California, Florida, and New York, to name but three, are home to the largest concentrations of refugees, other States such as Illinois, Oregon, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Minnesota are having to shoulder, increasingly, the financial responsibility for refugee programs even though refugee policy is a Federal responsibility driven in large part by foreign policy considerations.

We know this for a fact: States have little say in the policy, but they are being forced to pay more and more of the costs. That is patently unfair.

I would appreciate the thoughts of the chairman and ranking member of the Labor-HHS Appropriations Subcommittee, Senators HARKIN and SPECTER, on these matters that are under their subcommittee's jurisdiction.

Mr. HARKIN. I am pleased Senator WILSON has raised this issue, Mr. President, and I want to assure my colleague from California that we on the subcommittee are aware of his concerns in this area. He is correct when he states that Congress must recognize the fact that current refugee policy is shifting a greater burden to the States than was intended under the Refugee Act of 1980.

For the benefit of Senators, I want to state that we did put forward an effort during last year's appropriations process to increase this appropriation. Unfortunately, the House deferred its appropriation because the programs had not been reauthorized. So when we went to conference we were unable to secure additional funding necessary to address the increased admissions level.

I also want to underline Senator WILSON's statement that the administration's budget request for these programs underestimates the domestic need associated with its admissions request. For instance, the administration raised the ceiling on refugee admissions after we had already completed our markup. Unfortunately, HHS has not come forward to request supplemental funds despite our urging them to do so last year. This is placing great strain on many States in fiscal year 1990, including my home State of Iowa, and I intend to make sure the administration takes whatever actions are necessary to maintain all ongoing State refugee program operations.

We are concerned that these programs must be maintained, and we will work to address these inequities within our 302(b) allocation for fiscal year 1991. Although our 302(b) allocation has not yet been determined, there will inevitably be intense competition for scarce resources among many worthwhile social programs under the jurisdiction of the Labor, HHS, and Education Appropriations Subcommittee.

Mr. SPECTER. I would like to add to Senator HARKIN's remarks by saying that it is difficult to make up for the shortfall in these programs in light of the deficit problems and the administration's budget request. As he states, we did urge the administration to come forward for supplemental funding last year, and feel it should have come forward with a request this year at the time funds were being sought to address shortfalls in overseas programs.

The subcommittee is concerned that current trends in refugee policy may be placing a disproportionate fiscal burden on local government, and I fear that current refugee services may soon reach a level that is insufficient to ensure an effective resettlement process, which ultimately works against the very people we are trying to assist, the refugees themselves.

I look forward to working with our subcommittee chairman, Senator HARKIN, Senator WILSON and other Members as we look for ways to secure an appropriate funding level in these programs, one that recognizes refugee admissions levels.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks my colleagues have expressed on this matter because, as they recognize, States need additional assistance, and I look forward to working with them as we discuss this issue further during the fiscal year 1991 budget process.

RESETTLEMENT FUNDING

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of my colleagues, Senator WILSON, Senator SPECTER, and Senator HARKIN on the very important issue of funding for refugee resettlement programs. As they so eloquently explained, the Refugee Act of 1980 envisioned a partnership between the Federal Government and State refugee programs. The Federal Government was to be responsible for the cash and medical costs of resettling refugees for 36 months after their admission to the United States. Sadly, a decade later, this partnership has deteriorated. Federal reimbursements to the States have fallen to just 4 months for categorical assistance programs despite increasing refugee admissions. The States, however, continue to uphold their part of the agreement by taking the substantial difference out of their own budgets.

It is a little known fact—but only too well known to those of us from States affected—that over 80 percent of refugees settle in about a dozen States. My home State of Oregon is a good example of the impact this has on those States. Oregon ranks 11th nationally in terms of the number of refugees it has resettled since 1975. This may not sound impressive, until it is put into context. With a total population of 2,690,000, Oregon ranks 30th nationally in population size. My State has resettled a total of 25,439 refugees since 1975, which means that almost 1 of every 100 residents of Oregon is a refugee.

The people of Oregon have welcomed refugees from Southeast Asia, Eastern Europe, Russia, and other areas. Communities have initiated their own local efforts to lend support and assistance to these new residents, overcoming language and cultural barriers. We do not lament the fact that because of circumstance or by choice many people forced to flee their own countries have settled in our State. After a period of adjustment and assistance, the majority of them have enriched our culture and become productive citizens. Many have brought needed skills, and some have started their own businesses. But this does not happen overnight. Refugee resettlement programs are the necessary transitional step.

Because of the many cuts in Federal reimbursement to the States for refugee resettlement costs, Oregon and the other top dozen States are literally out of pocket millions of dollars. The Federal Government makes decisions about refugee admissions, and a handful of States end up picking up the tab. These States are doing the best they can, but in no way can they keep the Federal Government's promise of 36 months of resettlement assistance to those who need it. This is not fair to the refugees, who may come to this land of promise only to find themselves among the poor and destitute. And it is certainly not fair to the States which, because of circumstance, are assuming a huge fiscal burden cast upon them by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I deeply regret the fact that the shortfall in refugee funding for 1990 is not addressed in this supplemental appropriations bill. It is my hope and that of my distinguished colleagues from the affected States that this issue will be a major focus in the budget process for 1991.

RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST AND EVALUATION, NAVY ON THE SUBJECT OF BONE MARROW TYPING

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I would first like to express my appreciation for the chairman of the Subcommittee on Defense, Mr. INOUYE's work on this provision to include $6 million in the fiscal year 1990 dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill to permit an expanded human leukocyte antigen [HLA] bone marrow typing program through the Navy Medical Research and Development Command. I greatly appreciate his support, along with that of the full committee chairman, Senator BYRD, for this life-saving program. I would also like to commend my colleague, Senator SARBANES, for his efforts on behalf of the bone marrow donor program.

Mr. INOUYE. I thank the Senator for her kind words, and I congratulate her in turn for the work she has undertaken in support of this very important program. The subcommittee appreciates her initiative in bringing this matter to its attention and arguing persuasively for the additional funding.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to clarify the intent of this appropriation and the issues to be discussed in conference. It is my expectation that the focus of the activities to be conducted with these funds shall be HLA tissue typing, with a particular emphasis on increasing the number of ethnic minorities to be added to the national registry. Is that the chairman's intent?

Mr. INOUYE. Yes, my colleague is correct.

Ms. MIKULSKI. As the chairman knows, the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute currently manages the Federal contract for the National Marrow Donor Program. Is it the committee's intent that any program funded under this provision will involve the full cooperation of the Navy and the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute?

Mr. INOUYE. Yes, the Senator is correct. It is the intent of the committee that the Navy and the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute should cooperate fully in evaluating how the funds allocated under this provision should be spent.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I would like to raise three more issues about which I would hope the chairman can obtain further clarification during conference with the House. First, there has been some concern expressed about the relationship of the National Marrow Donor Program to other private bone marrow registries. It is particularly important that all patients accessing any registry be informed of the existence of all other registries. The issue of access to registries is an important one.

A second issue which should be clarified further is whether all of the typing to be financed with the supplemental funds shall be HLA-A and HLA-B testing only, or whether resources are better used for carrying out HLA-DR typing as well.

Finally, there is a need to clarify how the National Marrow Donor Program [NMDP] will allocate funds to those entities in need of funding for the typing of potential donors.

May I ask the chairman whether he agrees with me that these issues are important and should be clarified further in conference?

Mr. INOUYE. I would agree wholeheartedly with my distinguished committee colleague. She has my commitment that I shall do my utmost to ensure that these issues are given full consideration in conference.

There also is another issue which should be raised in conference which deserves further elaboration. Mr. President, there is a need to improve the effectiveness and cost aspects of the HLA typing procedures. The National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute already is engaged in research in this area. I understand the Navy may propose to use some of the funds provided in this supplemental to undertake research with the same objective. There is little debate about the need for additional research. However, Congress and the taxpayers deserve some assurance whether such research efforts by both organizations truly are necessary, and if so, that they will be complementary and not duplicative.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Once again, I express my deep appreciation for the chairman's efforts on behalf of this program. Because of his efforts, tens of thousands of names can be added to the national registry within the next few months, sending a message of hope to the thousands of patients throughout the United States who suffer from leukemia, aplastic anemia, and other bone marrow diseases. Let me just restate that it is my fervent hope that these funds be used for the addition of as many names as possible to the national registry in the most expeditious manner.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I must oppose this bill today because I believe it once again illustrates the many flaws in the way we conduct the people's business. As happens so often, this legislation has become a magnet for all kinds of amendments that clearly belong elsewhere.

Parts of this bill are genuinely needed and should be approved. The basic purpose, aid to Panama and Nicaragua, is one I support, though I question the specific levels of funding included here. Other parts of this bill for some domestic programs are needed, but frankly only because we did not do our work well last year.

Still other parts of this bill are neither dire nor urgent. It is simply loose language looking for a home and we, regretably, have provided one with this legislation. Abortion and the death penalty are serious issues that deserve careful debate, but not in the context of a supplemental appropriations bill. There are other similar examples spread throughout this bill.

Mr. President, I do not fault the Appropriations Committee or our leadership for all of this. They undoubtedly share some of the same frustrations. We, as a body, simply have not shown the self-restraint and discipline and serious purpose that should be the norm, not the exception, in dealing with complex legislation of this type.

Important as many parts of this bill are, I cannot vote for what amounts to business as usual.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I was planning to offer an amendment to this bill to provide $125 million in economic assistance for the three coca-producing nations of the Andes—Bolivia, Colombia, and Peru. Unfortunately, the administration opposes my amendment. So rather than hold up this important legislation, I will not offer my amendment at this time, and will wait until we have a full debate on the national drug strategy.

However, I would like to take a few moments to discuss the subject of my proposal—the current situation in the Andean region.

I believe that a phenomenal opportunity lies before us in the Andes—an opportunity that we cannot afford to waste.

This opportunity is the dramatic decline in the price of the coca leaf—the raw material for cocaine—in the Andean countries, which provides us a chance to help encourage coca farmers to get out of the business.

The free fall of coca prices is no coincidence—it is the direct result of events in the last 7 months.

Last August, Senator Luis Galan, a candidate in Colombia's Presidential elections, was brutally assassinated, most likely by the Medellin cartel. Colombian President Barco immediately declared total war against the drug cartels.

The results of this courageous effort, thus far, are striking: many leading traffickers have been extradited to the United States, millions of dollars worth of assets have been seized, hundreds of labs have been destroyed, and one of the most notorious leaders of the Medellin Cartel—Rodriguez Gacha—is dead.

In September, at the direction of Congress, the President proposed the national drug control strategy—the first comprehensive plan this country has ever had to attack the drug problem.

In February, the Presidents of each of the three coca-producing nations held a historic summit with President Bush, beginning a new partnership against the blight that affects the entire Western Hemisphere.

This confluence of events, and the increased commitment on the part of all nations to fight cocaine cultivation, has contributed to this remarkable reduction in coca leaf prices.

This price drop is dramatic, particularly in Bolivia, the source of roughly 30 percent of the world's supply of cocaine. Last August, before the crackdown in Colombia began, the price of a 100-pound bag of coca leaf in Bolivia was $89. In mid-August, the crackdown in Colombia began. And the price quickly dropped. By October, the average was $35. In December—$19. In March, the most recent month for which data are available, the average price was $12 a bag.

For peasants that grow coca in Bolivia, the break-even point is considered $30 per 100-pound bag. The result, then, should be obvious—coca farmers are losing a bundle of money. Not surprisingly, they are getting out of the business.

As a result, coca farmers are eradicating their fields, at a record pace. In 1989, Bolivia eradicated 2,504 hectares of coca, just half of its target of 5,000 hectares. Thus far in 1990, Bolivia has nearly surpassed its eradication totals for all of 1989. In the past 3 months, Bolivia eradicated 2,318 hectares. And with each proceeding month, a new record is broken. In March, Bolivia eradicated 829 hectares, nearly 10 times the amount of March 1989, and one-third of the total for 1989.

Don't take my word for it, just ask the State Department, which supplied me with these figures.

What is happening here? I think the answer is clear—the cartels are on the run, their organizations have been disrupted, and they are not buying coca from Bolivian peasants. The reduced demand for coca leaf grown in Bolivia has sent the price plummeting.

This provides a chance to provide economic assistance—right now—to induce Bolivian peasants into the legal sector. If we act now, with relatively little money, we stand a better chance of moving farmers out of the business of growing coca, and into other crops and regional industries.

When I first heard the initial reports of the price decline, I proposed the idea of providing immediate economic help. On February 28, in a foreign relations hearing, I made the suggestion to Drug Director Bennett. At the time, he promised me that he would consider my idea.

Since then, Mr. Bennett has written to me to declare the administration's opposition to my proposal. While the letter is not that illuminating, the message is clear—my proposal does not fit with the President's strategy.

Now I find this somewhat odd. Instead of claiming success for Colombia's war on the cartels and seeking to capitalize on it, the administration has chosen not to respond to these new developments. I would have thought that the administration would be proud of its achievements, and seize the moment.

Instead, the administration clings to its initial plan to wait until fiscal 1991 to send new economic aid for crop substitution and development.

This inflexibility, to say the least, is discouraging. Dramatic events are happening in the Andes. But the administration chooses—somewhat obstinately—to stick to a plan that is already out of date.

I believe we should act now, while the opportunity exists, rather than waiting until the beginning of the fiscal year, which is 5 months away.

The drop in coca prices gives the Andean nations—and the United States—a window of opportunity, however brief, to convince farmers in coca-growing regions to switch to legal alternatives. But the window will slam shut in a matter of months.

If alternative means of employment are not available, farmers will become quickly disillusioned and return to their coca fields, or, worse yet, move up the chain and become involved in processing coca paste.

In March, a senior economic advisor to the president of Bolivia, Samuel Doria Medina, testified to this in an appearance before the Judiciary Committee. Mr. Doria Medina declared that coca leaf prices were at an unprecedented low level, and that the opportunity to wean farmers away from the coca trade would be short lived.

Unfortunately, little economic assistance is available now. We have appropriated just $56.3 million in economic aid for the Andean nations in the current fiscal year; and much of the aid is development assistance—project assistance which often spends out slowly.

My proposal would have added $125 million in economic assistance—right now—to help the Andean countries at this critical moment in the drug war.

These countries desperately needed help. As we have all learned, cocaine production in the Andes has become a vital component of the regional economy. Quite literally, the Andean nations have become hooked on drugs.

In Peru, for example, profits generated by the cocaine trade account for 25 percent of export earnings in Peru. In Bolivia, as many as 300,000 people—nearly 20 percent of the work force—depend on the cocaine trade, directly or indirectly, for their livelihood.

When enforcement against the traffickers succeeds, then obviously there is going to be great economic disruption. Or to put it more bluntly, as a one-time Bolivian Finance Minister has stated, "We would have rampant unemployment; there would be open protest and violence." The sum of $125 million may sound like a lot of money. But the fact is that the administration has proposed spending $2 billion for the so-called Andean Plan.

Moreover, I would remind my colleagues, we appropriated $125 million in new military assistance and law enforcement aid to the Andean countries just last fall. The administration, by the way, has asked for $175 million in new economic aid for the coming fiscal year.

My approach, Mr. President, does not undermine the President's strategy, as some may argue. Rather, it enhances it.

The President's strategy calls for increased enforcement, followed by new economic assistance to promote crop substitution and alternative development in fiscal 1991. I agree with the concept of this approach—that increased enforcement must precede new economic help.

But where I disagree is in the timing of this approach. I believe we must follow enforcement with immediate economic assistance, rather than waiting until the beginning of the fiscal year.

Some will undoubtedly argue that the choice between providing new money now and providing new money in fiscal 1991 is a distinction without a difference.

But I think it makes all the difference in the world. Not only because the Andean countries need the help now, but because as a practical matter, new fiscal 1991 money will not arrive on the scene until 10 to 12 months from now, at a minimum.

Why am I so sure of that? Because recent experience tells me that is so. In 1988, Congress approved $5 million in funds to protect judges in Colombia that are under constant threat of attack from the narcoterrorists. When did that money arrive? A majority of it, we later learned, got to Colombia in the summer of 1989.

This is not an isolated incident. Last fall, Congress approved $125 million in new military and law enforcement assistance for the Andean nations.

You know how much has been spent to date? Not one dime. It was only a few weeks ago that the administration briefed Congress on its plan. And only now is the administration reaching final agreement with the Andean countries on how that money will be spent.

So let's not kid ourselves. Time is of the essence, and we frankly cannot wait until next spring for economic help to arrive on the ground in the Andes.

Mr. President, as I said at the outset, I had hoped to offer this amendment today on the bill before us. But I have decided not to pursue this matter at this time. However, I intend to continue making the case that the Andean nations need economic help—now—to take advantage of the opportunity that lies before us.

KANSAS DISASTER ASSISTANCE STATEMENT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I would like to take a few minutes to express my appreciation to the Appropriations Committee and its distinguished chairman, Senator ROBERT C. BYRD, for including an amendment to provide $2.5 million in disaster assistance for Kansas communities devastated by the March 13 tornadoes. This money will go a long way toward helping these Kansans and their communities put their lives together in the wake of one of the worst twisters in history.

In March of this year, the town of Hesston and the surrounding communities were hit with two disasters: First, the tornado, and second, the news that the area was ineligible for Federal Emergency Management Agency disaster assistance. The reason given—their uninsured losses from the disaster were too small for FEMA to step in.

Well, a quick look at the town of Hesston after the Tornado would convince anyone that a declaration of a Presidential disaster was more than merited. In large sections of this town of 3,000 people, nothing, literally nothing remains standing. So, while the losses may not be as large as if the tornadoes had hit a major city, the area has been devastated and its citizens are in great need.

We are not the first, nor the last community to find ourselves in this situation. Senator KERREY was faced with a similar problem after a rural area of Nebraska was hit by tornadoes. We both learned, much to our distress, that small communities are at a severe disadvantage in qualifying for Federal disaster assistance.

Although I think in the coming months we need to look closely at the problem of rural discrimination by FEMA, the need in Kansas is urgent and severe. This special appropriation will come as an answer to the hopes and prayers of this community. I again want to express my thanks to Senator BYRD for including this amendment and express my hope that it will survive the House and Senate conference on this bill.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to thank the chairman of the full Appropriations Committee and the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Agriculture for providing funds to keep the Commodity Supplemental Food Program at USDA going. Part of that $4.7 million, which the committee has included in its supplemental appropriations bill, will help provide food for thousands of mothers and children and senior citizens in the State of Michigan and across the country. Without this money, they would probably have been removed from the program.

The shortfall that this emergency appropriation makes up for occurred because the USDA had miscalculated the availability of nonfat dry milk for the program nationally and was forced to buy more expensive evaporated milk. This miscalculation would have caused operators, who administer the program and the food that it provides, to reduce their caseload, denying essential nutrition to poor mothers, babies, preschoolers, and senior citizens.

I would also like to thank the chairmen for including sufficient funds for watershed and flood prevention operations in the Soil Conservation Service. Several areas in the State of Michigan experienced flooding in 1989, causing extensive damage to road systems, bridge crossings, road and stream banks, public facilities, and businesses. Destruction of the riverine environment and sediment loading to Lakes Michigan and Huron was extensive. The funds that have been earmarked for SCS will allow the implementation of an emergency watershed protection program to reduce further erosion and remove debris and sediment.

ARMSTRONG AMENDMENT NO. 1545

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I rise to comment on the amendment of Senator ARMSTRONG, which would require the State Department to expend some of its fiscal year 1990 funds being provided in this supplemental appropriations bill on the admission of 2,000 Soviet refugees who are Pentacostals or Evangelical Christians.

I will not oppose this amendment, because it has been worked out in such a way that it will not act to disrupt the admission of other needy refugee groups which the Congress and the administration have agreed to admit during the annual refugee consultation. In addition, I believe the amendment has an appealing aspect of basic fairness to it, given the extreme and inordinate attention that our Government has given to some other refugee groups from the Soviet Union.

However, this amendment still effectively serves to earmark a certain amount of the Refugee Bureau's budget for the admission of a particular refugee group, and I think earmarking is very bad public policy. Earmarking is the congressional micromanagement of foreign policy—personified. Earmarking restricts the Refugee Bureau from allocating these resources intelligently—a tricky task given the rapidly changing environment of international refugee assistance and resettlement needs. Finally, earmarking is often done by Congress in response to the powerful pressure of the special interest groups. These groups typically have their own narrow interests in mind—not the national interest.

If Congress cannot create and guide a refugee policy that is in the national interest, then it should keep hands off of refugee policy, period. We should not fall victim to the pressure tactics of narrow special interest groups. We must do what is best for our country as a whole, and what is best for the needs of all refugees, worldwide.

Let me give an example of what we have been up to. For fiscal year 1990, the Refugee Assistance Program must now comply with the following $22.1 million in earmarks: $9.5 million for Bulgarian Turks; $5 million for Iraqi Kurds; $4.8 million for refugees to Israel; $1.5 million for the headquarters budget of the International Committee of the Red Cross; $500,000 for antipiracy efforts; and $250,000 for Burmese refugees.

I do not think that any of these fine groups or activities are necessarily undeserving. But let's face it: If they really deserve our money, then the Refugee Bureau will get it to them. If the Bureau does not give it to them, it is probably because there are more important refugee priorities somewhere else in the world. For example, the $22.1 million in earmarks I mentioned required the Refugee Bureau to make an 11 percent reduction in U.S. contributions to meet the basic needs of refugees in camps overseas—and those needs include simple food, basic shelter, and medical assistance.

I do not mean to be an absolutist about this. Certainly there will be a rare occasion when an earmark might be necessary. I might even go for one myself now and then. However, earmarking has become a regular national pasttime around here. It hurts our Refugee Program, and I believe it should stop. While I will not oppose this amendment today, I would like to put my colleagues on notice that future attempts to earmark refugee assistance funds will be met with spirited resistance from me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill, having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 4404), as amended, was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to and the Presiding Officer [Mr. KERREY] appointed Mr. BYRD, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. SASSER, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. HARKIN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. REID, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. KERREY, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. GARN, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. NICKLES, and Mr. GRAMM, conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. I ask unanimous consent for 1 minute to make an observation on the bill we just passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to express my appreciation for the excellent cooperation of the Members being here. I think we lost less time on this bill waiting for amendments than we have, in my memory. Members were here to offer their amendments and take up the business of the Senate and help expedite the bill. I thank the Members for that.

Of course, again, it always takes leadership, and I commend my leader, the chairman of the committee, for his excellent orchestration of this very complex measure and to all the staff on both sides I am also grateful. It was a privilege to be in tandem with the Senator from West Virginia. I thank all my colleagues for helping finish up this very complex bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon for his kind comments.

Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate has finally completed action on the fiscal year 1990 dire emergency supplemental appropriations supplemental bill. This bill was reported by the Appropriations Committee on April 24 and has been considered on the Senate floor for a total of 5 days. The Senate has adopted more than 170 amendments.

There are many who are anxious to see action on this bill completed quickly. The President wants the aid to Panama and Nicaragua, which is included in this bill in the amounts of $420 million and $300 million, respectively.

Many in Congress have championed additional funds in this bill for disaster relief. The supplemental appropriations bill includes additional funding for relief and recovery from the devastation caused by Hurricane Hugo, the Loma Prieta earthquake, and wildfires which have devastated Federal lands principally in the Western United States. Funds are also included to help certain Midwestern States recover from the effects of ruinous tornadoes. Funds are included for continuing cleanup and damage assessment work resulting from the calamitous Exxon Valdez oil spill in Prince William Sound, AK, on March 24, 1989. Language in the committee report accompanying the bill directs the Department of the Interior to redirect previous appropriations in order to protect public safety from threats of chronic eruptions by Mount Redoubt Volcano, also in Alaska. Additional funds have been provided to the Soil Conservation Service for watershed and flood prevention activities; and closer to home, the bill includes emergency funds to renovate the Corps of Engineers headquarters building, which was seriously damaged by a fire on March 23, 1990.

In addition to these diaster relief activities, the supplemental appropriations bill contains $110 million requested by the administration to complete the 1990 decennial census; $30.5 million for measles outbreak control; $166 million for Head Start; $705 million for the Food Stamp Program; and $94 million for veterans medical care; $245 million for the veterans loan guaranty revolving fund; and $190 million for veterans compensation and pension benefits.

Many of the items which I have mentioned are funded at lower amounts, or in some cases, not funded at all, in the House-passed dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill. When the Senate conferees sit down with their House counterparts, we will have to resolve more than 170 amendments.

Mr. President, before I close, I feel compelled to register my disappointment with the outcome on the Byrd-Johnston amendment which failed by a 48 to 51 vote on April 26. This amendment would have reduced funding for Panama from $500 million requested by the President, and $420 million which was included in the House-passed bill, to a level of $300 million. An appropriation of $300 million would still have been a substantial sum to assist a nation the size of Panama for the remaining 4 months, or so, that this money will be available.

More importantly, the Byrd-Johnston amendment would have reallocated these savings from the Foreign Aid Program to a number of very important domestic programs; domestic programs which desperately need additional funding now, but which apparently are not going to receive any increase from this supplemental appropriations bill.

Included in the Byrd-Johnston amendment, was money to clean up serious environmental problems at the Department of Energy's weapons production facilities. The Byrd-Johnston amendment sought to reorder the administration's priorities. Our amendment would have provided $200 million to accelerate the cleanup of environmental hazards at the Department of Energy's facilities. Unfortunately, that amendment failed.

The Byrd-Johnston amendment would also have provided an additional $50 million for sanitation facilities for American Indian housing. There currently exists a backlog of $675 million in sanitation needs for Indian homes. I do not believe that there is any group in the world that is more deserving of our assistance than the American Indian community. Unfortunately, the amendment failed.

Among other things, the Byrd-Johnston amendment would have provided an additional $12.3 million for the Women, Infants and Children Supplemental Food Program. These funds would have been provided to the neediest of Americans, who are at nutritional risk. Unfortunately, the amendment failed.

The Senate has chosen not to fund these very important domestic programs that were included in the Byrd-Johnston amendment. The Senate has chosen, instead, to send a very generous sum in the amount of $420 million in foreign aid to Panama. The Senate has made its decision, but I want to call the attention to the closeness of the vote. It was rejected by a vote of 48 to 51, with 99 Senators voting. We cannot continue to ignore crying domestic needs. We must be sure scarce tax dollars are used efficiently.

Mr. President, by a vote of 96 to 0 the Senate adopted an amendment which will hopefully start the process of reorienting our foreign aid programs away from simplistic one-way cash transfers to client States, and toward increasing American competitiveness. The amendment calls for a study, to be conducted by the Secretary of Commerce, that would examine various mechanisms we might incorporate into our foreign aid program to enhance America's competitive position. I hope this is the beginning of a process which will bring increased rationality into our foreign aid program. This will be particularly important as we attempt to deal with the challenges of revitalizing Eastern Europe.

On March 11, 1990, the nation of Lithuania reasserted its independence. Now, after five decades of declaring our steadfast moral support, the United States has an opportunity to provide concrete evidence of our continuing commitment to Baltic self-determination. We have included a provision appropriating $10,000,000 for the establishment of an embassy in Vilnius—VILL nee us. This provision does not restrict the President's prerogative in deciding when to recognize the government of President Landsbergis. But it does clearly spell out our desire to recognize the Lithuanian Government as soon as possible, and is in keeping with our long-standing policy toward the Baltic countries. When President Bush feels it is appropriate to recognize the new Government of Lithuania, he will have ready the resources he needs to implement his decision.

Mr. President, I want to thank my distinguished colleague, Senator HATFIELD, the ranking Republican on the committee, for his cooperation and support throughout the processing of this bill, from the markup to the managing of the bill on the floor. I want him to know how much I appreciate his strong and effective support, his teamwork and cooperation, and especially, his friendship.

The senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], who is the chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, also deserves a special thanks for his very diligent and careful scrutiny of the foreign assistance requests which were considered by the Senate.

I also thank the other members of the committee, on both sides of the aisle. Their cooperation is very much appreciated, as is the cooperation of all Members of the Senate in the processing of this very complicated dire emergency supplemental appropriation bill.

I wish to express thanks to the majority leader and the Republican leader. They have demonstrated strong leadership and strong support in moving this bill along. The leadership worked very hard on both sides of the aisle, to develop time agreements, and I am very grateful. I thank, also, the members and staff of the Senate Appropriations Committee. All of the committee staff members are very professional and work well together on both sides of the aisle. This helps the members to complete their work expeditiously and effectively.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask that the record reflect at this point that had there been a rollcall vote on passage of the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill, I would have been obliged to cast my vote in the negative.

There are a number of reasons why—including, of course, the enormous additional expenditure of Federal funds. Also, I must say that I found it most discouraging last week when the Senate voted to override an obviously correct parliamentary ruling by the Chair. This was an unbecoming act by the Senate, and it occurred on an issue of great importance. Moreover, I viewed it a deliberate political act aimed at a confrontation with the President.

The President has made clear that he will veto this legislation, which he should.

MOTION TO INVOKE CLOTURE RELATIVE TO S. 135, HATCH ACT REFORM AMENDMENTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the pending business is the motion to proceed to S. 135, the Hatch Act reform amendments. All debate on the amendment between now and 7 p.m. will be equally divided and controlled in the usual form.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the motion to proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERREY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am pleased that the Senate is moving to proceed to debate S. 135, the Hatch Act reform bill. It is a debate that is long overdue.

The original Hatch Act was passed in 1939. At that time, no hearings were held on the legislation. It passed the Senate by unanimous consent with little debate. We now have had over 50 years of experience under the act. During that time, Federal employees have been denied many of the basic rights of freedom of expressing and action enjoyed by millions of other American citizens.

In 1966, almost 25 years ago, Congress established an independent bipartisan commission to investigate and study Federal laws limiting political participation by Federal employees. The Commission's report recommended strong sanctions against coercion of Federal employees or misuse of official position, but also recommended that, beyond clear and specific limits, "political participation should be permitted as fully as for all other citizens."

In 1974, Congress lifted most restrictions on political activities by employees of State or local governments who work in programs funded in whole or in part with Federal funds.

In the following Congress, in 1976, both houses of Congress voted to repeal many of the prohibitions on the Hatch Act, but President Ford vetoed the bill. The veto was sustained on April 29, 1976, when the House of Representatives fell 26 votes short of the two-thirds necessary to override.

Since the 1974 changes in the Federal law, 13 States have reformed their own statutes governing the political activities of States employees. Congressional inquiry has found no adverse effects from these changes in State laws. Not a single attorney general of those States had voiced any concern that easing restrictions has led to coercion or improprieties within the affected State work forces.

On November 17, 1987, the House of Representatives passed Hatch Act Reform legislation, H.R. 3400, by a vote of 305 to 112. On May 19, 1988, the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee approved an amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 3400 by a vote of 9 to 3.

During the 100th Congress, I was a member of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

I participated in the drafting of the committee substitute.

I voted for it.

The legislation now before the Senate, S. 135, is the same legislation that I supported as a member of the Governmental Affairs Committee in 1988. As majority leader, I am pleased to now bring it to the Senate floor for action.

S. 135 strengthens existing law both to prohibit coercion against Federal employees, and to guard against improper political activity.

It is different from the bill vetoed in 1976, and from the legislation, H.R. 20, that already has passed the House of Representatives in the current Congress.

S. 135 will continue to prohibit Federal or Postal employees from:

Running for public office in a partisan election, as the candidate of any political party.

From soliciting campaign contributions from the general public, and

From coercing the public, or coercing other Federal employees under their authority.

At the same time, S. 135 will allow 3 million Federal and Postal employees to exercise the same constitutional rights that are enjoyed by other Americans. It would restore their political rights: away from work; out of uniform; and on their own time.

These rights include:

Participating in voter registration drives;

Circulating nominating petitions for candidates;

Speaking out at local community caucuses in favor of candidates;

Holding office in a political party or club; and

Working in a political campaign, helping with such chores as stuffing envelopes, answering telephones, attending rallies, or engaging in similar activities.

The bill would eliminate many confusing, contradictory, often senseless Federal regulations that restrict ligitimate political expression.

Federal and Postal workers currently are told that they can put political advertisements on their cars, but none bigger than 15 by 30 inches.

They are also told they can put a lawn sign on their own property, but only if it is no larger than 14 by 22 inches—in other words smaller than what is allowed on their cars.

Under current law, Federal and Postal workers can go to political rallies but they can't talk or carry signs. They can write letters to editors, but cannot send any letter to more than five newspapers.

Many of the restrictions under current law are illogical and unnecessary. They defy rational explanation.

One example exists in the State of Maine, where there are two major shipyards. One is Bath Iron Works, which builds Navy cruisers and destroyers. It is privately owned. The other is Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, which overhauls Navy submarines. It is publicly owned.

Bath Iron Works employes approximately 10,000 shipyard workers. They are all private employees. There is no restriction of their political rights.

Portsmouth Naval Shipyard employs approximately 8,000 shipyard workers mostly from Maine and New Hampshire. They are all Federal employees. Under the Hatch Act, their political rights are restricted.

Shipyard workers at Portsmouth Naval Shipyard are no different from shipyard workers at Bath Iron Works. The State of Maine is proud of them all.

There is no difference in how hard they work. There is no difference in the pride that they feel in contributing to our Nation's defense.

There is no difference in their love for their families or their communities—and in the importance that each and every one of them has in community life.

Shipyard workers are part of Maine's maritime heritage. They are part of our New England tradition. They are all citizens, and should all freely play a role in our American democracy.

The only difference between a shipyard worker at Bath Iron Works and a shipyard worker at Portsmouth Naval Shipyard is that Portsmouth workers are Federal employees. Because of that fact, they are denied the same political rights enjoyed by workers at Bath.

There is no logic to that difference. There is no compelling national defense interest that overrides the political rights of an electrician or pipefitter who works on the shipyard waterfront in Portsmouth.

Away from the shipyards, on their own time, when their work clothes are changed, shipyard workers at Bath Iron Works and Portsmouth Naval Shipyard should enjoy the same rights: To play softball, pursue hobbies, attend the church of their choice, participate in community meetings, or if they choose, work in political campaigns.

It is a matter of personal choice. And individual trust. Political rights are at the very core of community life and American Democracy.

Democracy in Poland and Eastern Europe has been restored in large part also because of the assertion of political rights by workers at a shipyard in Gdansk, Poland.

Poland's shipyard workers formed the Solidarity Movement, which all Americans have applauded. Last November, the leader of that movement, Lech Walesa, stood before a joint session of Congress and proclaimed that "the ideals which underlie this glorious American Republic and are still alive here, are also living in faraway Poland."

Today that same shipyard worker from Gdansk is considered a possible candidate for President of Poland.

When Lech Walesa addressed the Congress of the United States, no one asked if the Hatch Act applied to him.

If he runs for President in Poland, no one will ask: "Does the Hatch Act apply to him?"

If Lech Walesa were a shipyard worker from Bath Iron Works, the Hatch Act would not apply. But it most certainly would if he were a shipyard worker from Portsmouth Naval Shipyard.

That is illogical. It is also wrong.

S. 135 would reform the Hatch Act, and in only a modest way. Under the Senate bill, there will still be restrictions. It is a compromise from the greater reform already passed by the House of Representatives.

The rights of shipyard workers in Kittery, ME, and Portsmouth, NH, should be no different from those in Bath, ME. The spirit of democracy now alive in Eastern Europe, first asserted by shipyard workers in faraway Poland, should not be denied Federal workers here at home.

The ideals which underlie our American Republic are living today both abroad and at home—and are reflected in this Hatch Act reform legislation.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise today to state my opposition to this legislation. In 1976, the President of the United States vetoed legislation very similar the bill we are considering today which was reported by the Committee on Governmental Affairs last year. In 1976, President Ford vetoed similar legislation because it was "bad for the employee, bad for the government, and bad for the public." Mr. President, this legislation, like that legislation, is "bad for the employee, bad for government, and bad for the public."

Mr. President, this legislation is bad for the Federal employee because it unleashes irresistable pressures to become a captive soldier in political armies inside and outside the Government.

This legislation is bad for the Federal Government because it would undercut the neutral, nonpartisan administration of programs by civil servants. It would nourish a working environment where politics replaces merit.

This legislation is bad for the public because it would foster the creation of employee interest groups inside the Government that might sabotage the will of the American people. The Federal work force is the servant of the American people, to act as their instrument not as their foil.

Proponents of this legislation ignore the adverse impact of this legislation on the Government and on the American people and focus attention exclusively on the Federal employee. They would have you believe that the Hatch Act oppresses Federal employees and that S. 135 would set them free. The truth is the very opposite. The Hatch Act protects Federal employees from inside and outside coercion. And this legislation would, in practice, restrict their freedom.

Mr. President, a similar debate might be held regarding section 603 of title 18, United States Code. That provision, among other things, forbids the staff of the Senate from making campaign contributions to their respective Senators. This provison, it might be argued, robs Senate staffers of the right to contribute to Senate campaigns, a right enjoyed by the entire American populus except for the oppressed few.

But we all know why this provision was passed and has been retained on the books. Section 603 was not enacted to oppress, or even to trade employee rights for the honor and privilege of Government service, but to protect the employee. Were it not for section 603 and similar provisions, it might become expected of Senate staffers to make such contributions. Since it is not possible to outlaw expectations, the only way to protect Senate staffers is to prohibit this form of political activity. Similar expectations will arise if Hatch Act protections are removed. It does little to solve the problem to declare against coercion.

After two centuries of trial and error, America and Federal employees have come to appreciate the genius of a politically neutral Federal work force responsible to an elected President and his political appointees. This system allows Government to be both responsive to popular will yet fair and impartial in the administration of our laws. This system rests squarely upon the Hatch Act. It is the reason why a politically neutral work force can function subordinate to political appointees without itself becoming politicized. This legislation is a serious threat to the delicate balance of this much admired system.

In his veto message in 1976, President Ford stated that if legislation like the committee reported bill became law, "pressure could be brought to bear on Federal employees in extremely subtle ways beyond the reach of any anti-coercion statute so that they would inevitably feel compelled to engage in partisan political activity." In my opinion, this would be the inevitable result of this legislation. Proponents of this legislation do not seem to appreciate the expectations, the pressures, and the coercion that will spring forth if this legislation is enacted.

Proponents suggest that the merit system protects the Federal employee so well that the Hatch Act is no longer necessary. That suggestion is much like the notion that because we are entering a period of relative peace throughout the world, we no longer need strong defense. Both suggestions reverse cause and effect. Just as it is a strong defense that fosters peace, so, too, it is the Hatch Act that maintains the merit system. Its purpose and function for 50 years has been to insure that civil service is based solely on merit and not on politics.

Proponents rely on one clause of the bill which tracks verbatim a 1907 Executive order that "no person in the Executive civil service shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof."

As later history was to show, the 1907 Executive order did not adequately protect Federal employees. Its terms, like the provision in this legislation do not address expectations. Its terms do not address subtle pressures. Its terms do not address postelection reprisals, whether they are direct or indirect, harsh, or subtle, flagrant or disguised. It does not address the expectations, pressures, and coercive efforts directed by nongovernmental individuals and groups against Federal employees.

These lapses are not the fault of the 1907 Executive order. That order was merely an addendum to Civil Service Rule I which prohibited employees from taking "an active part in political management or political campaigns." This legislation overturns Civil Service Rule I by permitting, some would say even encouraging, active involvement in political campaigns. It will lead us back to a situation pre-1939, in which the fundamental safeguard of employees does not exist and all that remains is an order outlawing coercion.

The point is not only that this legislation contains a poor formulation of protection for the Federal employee but also that no formulation can be adequate once employees are free to engage in partisan political activity including direct involvement in political campaigns. No drafting technique can overcome the proclivities of human nature.

Once Federal employees are free to engage in partisan political activity, it will only be human nature for them to believe that it would please their politically appointed superior to exercise their new political rights under this legislation in a manner that pleases the superior.

It will only be human nature for employees to try to get an edge on their competition by engaging in the partisan politics of the superior.

It will only be human nature for other employees who had not engaged in the partisan politics of the superior to feel it is necessary to do so to eliminate the edge of their competitors. Since it is only human nature to try to get ahead, employees will engage in political activity pleasing to the political hierarchy.

Mr. President, the Hatch Act has served us well. In spite of all the efforts of Presidents through the years and in spite of all the civil service regulations, the problem of the spoils system was not ultimately solved until Congress enacted the Hatch Act in 1939. Since then, the Hatch Act has protected the Federal employee, fostered a more efficient and effective work force, and enhanced the confidence of the citizenry in the fairness of their Government. It has been good for the employee, good for the Government, and good for the public.

Why do we now risk a return to the spoils system? Why do we risk repealing the only remedy that has worked? Why do we risk undermining the merit system?

Each Senator will have to decide whether there is sufficient cause to scuttle the only effective remedy for the spoils system this Nation has known. In addition, it should be noted that there has been no clamor for change. No Governmentwide polls of Government employees have been offered to show their desire for change. In fact, a poll last year in Government Executive magazine reveals that over 60 percent of Federal employees oppose a loosening of the Hatch Act.

While the Federal employee unions and the postal groups support change, the weight of other testimony given during hearings held by the committee in the 100th and 101st Congresss stands in opposition to this bill. Senior advisors of the Bush administration, Common Cause, the American Bar Association, the Federal Bar Association, the National Academy of Public Administration, the Chamber of Commerce, and the American Farm Bureau have all voiced strong opposition to this legislation. In addition, scholars and former Government officials have likewise opposed the bill.

The central question before us is the quality of Government service that the American people should receive and the protection from political pressure that the Federal employee should enjoy. That is why organizations not normally outspoken on these types of issues have come forward to voice vigorous opposition to this legislation.

Some have cited first amendment concerns with the present law. The American Civil Liberties Union testified last year that they believe the Hatch Act violates the Constitution. However, on more than one occasion, the Supreme Court has specifically rejected the ACLU argument. Thus, there is no constitutional imperative to vote for this bill. The only constitutional issue before us is the claim of the administration that this bill violates the Constitution by unduly restricting the activities of political appointees.

Proponents believe they have answered the problem of how to draw a bright line between permissible and impermissible conduct. They would permit partisan political activity off duty and prohibit such conduct on duty. Simple, is it not? The problem is that the bright line between on duty and off duty has little to do with Hatch Act concerns. As the Federal Bar Association made clear to the committee when it testified last Congress, the concern is whether expectations, pressures, and coercion are imposed upon the Federal employee and not the time of day the employees engages in partisan political activity. The fact that an employee engages in political conduct off duty does not answer the question whether he has been pressured on duty.

In addition, few of us would find it appropriate for employees of the Federal Election Commission to engage in partisan politicking at night and serve as umpires over partisan politics by day.

Few of us would find it appropriate for an employee of the Internal Revenue Service to be a soliciting support for a partisan candidate at night and conducting an audit of a local business by day.

Few of us would find it appropriate for an assistant U.S. attorney to be a campaign manager for a partisan campaign at night and prosecuting political corruption during the day.

These, Mr. President, are but a few examples of what we could expect if this legislation is enacted.

In upholding the constitutionality of the Hatch Act in United Public Workers, C.I.O. versus Mitchell, the Supreme Court considered the question of off duty political activity. The majority held that—

> We do not find persuasion in appellant's argument that such activities during free time are not subject to regulation even though admittedly political activities cannot be indulged in during working hours. The influence of political activity by government employees, if evil in its effects on the service, the employees or people dealing with them, is hardly less so because that activity takes place after hours.

The bright line of on duty and off duty of S. 135 is a mirage.

Proponents also argue that this legislation is not a repeal of the Hatch Act protections, but simply a reform. I disagree. The protections afforded to Federal employees in this legislation are simply redundant of protections already provided in the criminal code, title 18. Instead, it can be argued that the Senate bill removes from the Hatch Act the protections afforded to civil service employees in title 5. During the Governmental Affairs Committee hearing on this legislation, then Acting Deputy Attorney General Edward Dennis responded to a question as to whether this bill is effectively a repeal of current law.

Mr. Dennis:

> We (the Department of Justice) view S. 135 as a virtual repeal. I know it is couched in its structure and its title suggests amendments to the Hatch Act, but in our judgment, with those provisions being eliminated that relate to office in a political party and the other very significant election activities that you mentioned would be permitted under S. 135, it eviscerates the Hatch Act to such an extent that we feel it would be an insignificant factor insofar as regulating this critical area.

Finally, Mr. President, the proponents of S. 135 argue that Federal employees are confused by the regulations and opinions issued under the Hatch Act. The confusion, it is argued, has a chilling effect on permissible political activity.

While this argument has some merit, proponents of this legislation overstate its case. In upholding the constitutionality of the Hatch Act in United States Civil Service Commission versus National Association of Letter Carriers, the Supreme Court specifically considered the question of whether the act was "unconstitutionally vague and overbroad." In response, a majority of the Court held that, "it seems to us that although the prohibitions may not satisfy those intent on finding fault at any cost, they (the prohibitions) are set out in terms that the ordinary person exercising ordinary common sense can sufficiently understand and comply with, without serious sacrifice to the public interest."

In fact, the regulations governing what is considered permissible and impermissible political activities can be found in title 5, Code of Federal Regulations, section 733. There are 13 permissible activities and 16 impermissible activities found in these regulations.

While Federal employees may be confused by what is and is not permissible activity, the regulations are not as confusing as the proponents purport them to be. Proponents of reform frequently mention the several thousand administrative decisions of the former Civil Service Commission which predated the passage of the Hatch Act in 1940, and the effect of these rulings on current interpretation and enforcement of the act. As the Office of Special Counsel has pointed out,

Some individuals have erroneously referred to these decisions as "rules" or "regulations," creating the false impression that there are some 3,000 rules or regulations currently governing political activity by Federal employees. Such individuals clearly misapprehend the legal and historical significance of those decisions.

Rejecting the argument set forth by the National Association of Letter Carriers in the aforementioned case, the Supreme Court ruled that the proper subject of inquiry was not the "several thousand adjudications of the Civil Service Commission," but rather the regulations that were extracted from them. The Court held that,

It is to these regulations purporting to construe Section 7324 as actually applied in practice, as well as the statute itself * * * that we address ourselves in rejecting the claim that the Act is unconstitutionally vague and overbroad.

In addition, Mr. President, I do not understand the logic of the argument that if the implementation of a law is confusing, the law should be repealed. One would hate to see this argument applied to the Bill of Rights, which has for nearly two centuries raised an endless stream of litigation designed to clarify its application. The appropriate response to the argument is to do what is necessary to eliminate the confusion.

Recent Federal appellate court cases in the second and eleventh circuits have further clarified the issue of what is and is not permissible political activity. The distinction drawn by the courts appears very straightforward to us. The Court in Blaylock versus United States Merit System Protection Board held that the Hatch Act's prohibition against taking an "active part in political management or in political campaigns" encompasses only active participation in, on behalf of, in connection with, organized efforts of political parties or partisan committees, clubs, and candidates. In an effort to clarify the existing regulations in light of these appellate court decisions, the Office of Personnel Management, in conjunction with the Office of Special Counsel, should promulgate new regulations to clarify the restrictions on political activity.

Since my analysis has led me to conclude that the Hatch Act is good for the employee, good for the Government, and good for the public, and since I believe that claims of confusion over the implementation of the act have some merit, I plan to propose a substitute amendment in lieu of this legislation that the Office of Personnel Management be directed to issue new regulations that would clarify and simplify the guidance that has been given to Federal employees with respect to the Hatch Act. This proposal would satisfy the best argument of proponents for change without risking the benefits of the Hatch Act for American society. Moreover, I am sure that we are all aware that this legislation, if passed, would be vetoed. This proposal, in contrast, would not be.

The choice for the Senate is clear: Whether to do some good or whether to make a major mistake.

Proponents of the bill suggest that the legislation is a modest proposal. Proponents argue that this bill represents the middle ground between the administration, on the one hand, and the House-passed bill on the other.

The bill tracks the House version in all its particulars with only two exceptions. Whereas the House version permits Federal employees to engage in virtually any political activity off duty, S. 135 would not permit an employee: First, to run for partisan political office or second, to solicit campaign contributions except from fellow employee-members of a union or group for their own PAC. While it is true that the bill we are considering is less drastic, I do not believe it cannot accurately be called a mild or toned down change in the Hatch Act.

In order to understand this, one must compare what Federal employees may do under the Hatch Act with what they may do under this legislation and the bill passed by the House:

WHAT EMPLOYEES MAY DO NOW

First, register to vote and vote.

Second, contribute money to partisan political campaigns.

Third, express their views in private and in public—though not in a concerted way to elicit support for a candidate or party.

Fourth, attend conventions and rallies but only as a spectator.

Fifth, run as an independent candidate in certain partisan contests in designated areas with a high concentration of Federal employees.

Sixth, assist in nonpartisan voter registration drives.

Seventh, campaign for or against political referendum questions.

Eighth, participate as a nonpartisan pollwatcher or election judge.

Ninth, wear buttons—off duty or, subject to various agency restrictions, on duty.

Tenth, participate in nonpartisan campaigns.

ADDITIONAL ACTIVITIES EMPLOYEES COULD DO UNDER S. 135

First, hold office in a political party.

Second, distribute campaign literature and solicit votes—off duty.

Third, organize and participate in phone banks—off duty.

Fourth, organize and participate in political meetings—off duty.

Fifth, publicly endorse candidates and urge others to support them—off duty.

Sixth, solicit contributions to the PAC of a Federal employee organization to which both the employee and the donor belong—off duty.

ADDITIONAL ACTIVITIES EMPLOYEES COULD DO UNDER THE H.R. 20

First, run for and hold public office—off duty.

Second, solicit contributions—off duty.

But for the provisions dealing with running for office and soliciting contributions, the House bill and S. 135 are identical. Both renounce the principle of a neutral, nonpolitical Federal work force. Both are oblivious to the expectations, pressures, and coercion that would be borne with this legislation. Both would strike the keystone from the arch of our merit system. Both would scuttle the only remedy that has worked to vanquish the evils of the spoils system.

This legislation should be rejected.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, as a cosponsor of the Hatch Act reform amendments, I strongly urge my colleagues to vote for cloture, and for this bill.

Federal employees are citizens and should possess all the rights of citizens, including the right to participate in the political process.

This is a good, reasonable, balanced bill. It restores to Federal employees the right to participate in political activities in their spare time, while at the same time protecting these employees from undue pressure to participate in partisan activity.

Under current law, the secretary who works for FDA and lives in Rockville, MD, can't go door-to-door on a Saturday afternoon on behalf of her favorite candidate for mayor. The attorney who works for the FTC can't host a get-together in his home for his college roommate who's running for the State legislature.

Why should we impose these unreasonable restrictions on citizens who simply want to have a voice in how their communities are governed?

Mr. President, political participation is dropping off in our Nation. Voters are tuning out. Citizens feel they do not have the time or the interest to get involved. That's dangerous. We need the active participation of the citizenry to keep democracy alive.

Meanwhile, we are telling Federal workers—who are among the brightest, best-informed, and most public-spirited Americans—that they're not allowed to make their voice heard. That doesn't make sense. We should welcome their active involvement, should they choose to devote their spare time to political activity.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the motion to proceed to consideration of S. 135, legislation to modify and clarify the Hatch Act to enable Federal civilian and postal employees to engage more fully in the democratic process. This proposal is identical to that reported by the Governmental Affairs Committee last year, and I want to commend the chairman and other members of the committee for their perserverance and commitment to needed Hatch Act reforms.

As you know, the Hatch Act was passed in 1939 in response to a prevailing atmosphere which served to undermine the development of a professional civil service. While over 60 new Federal agencies had been created by the end of 1934, only 5 had been placed under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission, resulting in a staffing policy based on political patronage over merit competition. The proliferation of patronage positions generated concern in the Congress that some civil servants might be concentrating on partisan interests over national interests. Consequently, the Hatch Act, a proposal to severely restrict the political activities of civil servants, received swift congressional approval.

It is important to this discussion to note that abuses which preceded passage of the Hatch Act did not result from voluntary participation in partisan politics by Federal civilian and postal employees. Rather, the Hatch Act was passed originally to protect civil servants from coercion and improper use of official authority by supervisory personnel. However, one of my greatest concerns is the possibility that under current law, attempts may still be made to influence the political activities of subordinates. Such concerns have been justified by recent events, including a case in the State of Washington during the last Presidential election when Navy shipyard workers were notified that their participation in the State's Presidential caucuses would constitute a violation of the Hatch Act.

Our goal must be to ensure the integrity of a nonpartisan civil service and protect against political corruption while at the same time protecting the basic right of all Americans to participate in their Nation's political process. In my view, the legislation we are now considering furthers this effort greatly by clarifying current law by specifically stating what is permitted and what is prohibited under the Hatch Act. S. 135 sets out a clear distinction between political activity on the job and political activity on an employee's own time. Pursuant to S. 135, participation in on-the-job political activities is prohibited without exception and civil servants would not be allowed to solicit campaign contributions from the general public. However, Federal civilian and postal employees would be protected against partisan coercion and would be allowed to participate in a wider range of political activities during their own time.

I have been a longtime supporter of efforts to reform the Hatch Act and during the 94th Congress voted as a Member of the House of Representatives for legislation to repeal many of the act's prohibitions on political activities. As you know, this proposal was vetoed by President Ford. I deeply regret that the House failed by 26 votes to override the veto and am very pleased to have an opportunity to actively participate in continued efforts to make necessary modifications to the Hatch Act.

Mr. President, certainly it was not the intention of the 76th Congress, when passing the Hatch Act, to prohibit a subset of American citizens from participating fully in the political process. The legislation we have before us would ensure that this special group, Federal civilian and postal employees, enjoy the same basic rights as other citizens—the right to participate freely and fully in our Nation's political system. Enactment of such reforms is long overdue and I urge my colleagues to join me in strong support of this very important legislation.

IT IS TIME FOR HATCH ACT REFORM

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I rise to offer my hearty support for S. 135, legislation to reform the Hatch Act, and to urge my colleagues to vote to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

The Hatch Act, which is more than 50 years old, has become outdated and virtually incomprehensible. It has led to the enactment of some 3,000 separate administrative rulings governing the political actions of Federal civilian and postal employees. Reform is clearly needed, and I believe that the bill before us provides a reasonable approach. S. 135 would allow Federal and postal employees to participate more fully in the political process during their time off the job while protecting them from political coercion on the job.

I am an original cosponsor of this legislation because I believe public employees have the same right as other Americans to participate in the electoral process. Those who join the Federal work force are characterized by their dedication and commitment to service to our Nation. These qualities are the very ones which are called for in the political arena, and to deny public employees access to some of the most basic political privileges is unfair and unrealistic.

I do not claim that working as a Federal or postal employee is exactly the same as being a salesperson or health care professional. Of course, we must ensure that no public employee will take undue advantage of his or her position to launch a bid for partisan office or pressure fellow employees to support a particular candidate or point of view. It is because of these concerns that S. 135 includes protections against such undesirable situations.

The effort to bring Hatch Act reform to the Senate floor has been a long one, and I commend all those who have been a part of it. Such public employee organizations as the American Postal Workers Union, the National Association of Letter Carriers, the National Treasury Employees Union, the American Federation of Government Employees, and the National Federation of Federal Employees are to be commended for their commitment to the principle of fair treatment for public employees and for their excellent work in keeping this issue before Congress.

Let us enact Hatch Act reform this year. Thank you.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GLENN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, we know from previous experience on the floor in years past that all we seem to need to do is mention the Hatch Act and the helmets go on, the foxholes get dug, "man the barricades" is the call, and we prepare for battle. The attitude is that the lines are drawn, there is something sacred that we cannot approach without something akin to upsetting the Constitution, or that it ranks right along with God, flag, and motherhood in the America psyche, that it is not changeable, and that it is not amendable even to be made more workable, to be made more practical, and to be made more clear.

Mr. President, that is basically what S. 135 does. It is not a revolutionary change in how we handle our civil service, nor is it something that destroys the rights of people because they are loyal to this country and are part of Government service.

S. 135, the Hatch Act reform amendments bill, would amend the 1939 statute that prohibits most Federal civil and postal employees from being politically active. S. 135 proposes changes that would allow these civil servants to participate voluntarily—underline "voluntarily"—as private citizens in the Nation's political process. The Hatch Act was passed in 1939, and has been reviewed a number of times through the years—from 1947 to 1966, 1975, 1976, 1978, it has been looked at. So why bring it up now?

There are some events that occurred that combine to make amendment of the Hatch Act a major civil service issue in the 100th Congress—this being the 101st that we are in now, but in the 100th Congress.

During the 1984 Presidential election, the presidents of three major Federal and postal employees unions endorsed Walter Mondale's candidacy. They followed that up in their unions' newsletters, and encouraged their membership to vote for it. The American Federation of Government Employees, the National Association of Letter Carriers, and the American Postal Workers Union were the unions involved.

The three presidents of these unions have been Government employees. They were on leave from their Government jobs to perform the role of being heads of their unions, which is permitted. None of them had been away less than 16 years. In other words, they had held their positions outside their Government jobs on leave from those Government jobs for over 16 years. Nevertheless, the Office of Special Counsel brought suit against these men, asserting that they violated the prohibition against active political participation as judged under the Hatch Act.

The Merit Systems Protection Board upheld the OSC finding, and they penalized those three presidents. They suspended them from their jobs for 60 days. That was a very symbolic gesture because they had already been off their jobs for over 16 years. So that 60-day penalty did not mean a whole lot to them. Because they had been on leave from those jobs, the suspension had no effect. But the board's decision was viewed as a way of establishing the principle of this case.

This was appealed in two Federal circuit court cases. The Merit Systems Protection Board order was reversed on findings that no Hatch Act violations had occurred. Despite requests from the Merit Systems Protection Board and the Office of Personnel Management to appeal that court decision to the Supreme Court, the Office of the Solicitor General declined that invitation. So appeal was never made.

But the prosecution of Bill R. Blaylock and Sid Brody on grounds which had never been before asserted with regard to the Hatch Act raised the issue of partisan enforcement of the Hatch Act. This was not protecting Government employees. It was using the authority of the Hatch Act in a way never intended for partisan use, to enforce the Hatch Act, using that as the excuse, and using that enforcement power in a partisan way.

A number of Members of Congress pointed out that the intent of the Hatch Act was to prevent political coercion in the workplace. Yet employee coercion was not at issue in the actions of these three union presidents.

Finally, another concern about the Hatch Act was one concern that pushed for a lot of concern and a lot of debate at that time. Finally the vagueness of the statute continues to generate much concern. We had one witness who testified before the Governmental Affairs Committee, and I will quote his statement.

> We cannot advise our members with confidence since advisory opinions of the special counsel are not subject to judicial review. It is only after employees jeopardize their jobs that a determination is made on whether or not an activity is permitted under the Hatch Act. Many decisions are not published and so are not readily available, resulting in an inability to ascertain the precise extent of prohibited and protected activities or the penalties involved.

Mr. President, let me follow up on that a little bit and give some examples of that.

S. 135 is a modest proposal developed by the Governmental Affairs Committee on a somewhat bipartisan basis. We had a 10-to-4 vote. So we had a couple of the Members on the Republican side supporting the vote out of committee. What it would do basically is eliminate many of the complicated and restrictive rulings that presently govern the political activities of Federal civilian and postal employees.

The committee held 2 days of hearings on the Hatch Act in February 1988 and 1 day in July 1989. Much of the testimony focused on the fact that under current law Federal civilian and postal workers must comply—hear this—with some 3,000 separate administrative rulings about what kinds of political activities are permissible. The bulk of these rulings are from pre-1940 days, back before there even was a Hatch Act, but they were folded into this when the Hatch Act was finally put together.

Witnesses have testified that this set of rulings have become confusing, illogical, and have been trivialized over the years.

Let me say before I give some of these examples. I was somewhat lukewarm on changes in the Hatch Act initially back some years ago. The Hatch Act has worked well, I think. I think it should be something that can be changed from time to time so it retains its vibrancy, its applicability in any period of time. But I was lukewarm about changing the Hatch Act. But the more we got into it, the more we realized that just simple fairness demands that we make some changes, that we clarify what the intent is of the Hatch Act, how it is going to be applied, and how it will work.

Every American wants to see every other American participate in the political process as much as possible. But in some cases it may be necessary to limit some of that political activity for the overall benefit of everyone. I support that idea. But in addition to the example I have of what happened in the Mondale campaign, and the improper interpretation of the Hatch Act to prevent things that it was never intended to apply to, to that example, add these:

If "Hatched"—if subject to the Hatch Act—you may wear a campaign button on the job, and write a $1,000 check to a candidate, but you cannot give any in-kind contribution of your time, not even something like going over to help stuff envelopes or circulate a nominating petition, something very simple.

If "Hatched," you cannot wave a political poster at a rally, but you can put it on your car or post it on your front lawn.

If "Hatched," you may express your opinion about a candidate publicly, but you cannot make a speech or campaign for or against a candidate. The fine line on this one became a very serious issue in the State of Washington during the last election when Navy shipyard workers were notified they could not actively participate in the State's Presidential caucuses without violating the Hatch Act. They could not even attend the caucuses, not just to vote, but we know how the caucus system works, and they could not attend. The Hatch Act was given as the reason.

The current Hatch Act even extends to letters to the editor on partisan politics. That is another one. Up until last year, for example, employees could write letters to the editor in support of a candidate, but not more than five such letters to any one newspaper or no more than one such letter to five different newspapers. These are laughable, I guess, but they are actually in the law, and we attempt to administer these things.

If you were a Federal employeee, what would you do? Well, you probably would figure, unless you felt very strongly about it, you are just going to stay out of the system and forget it before you get in trouble.

We pointed these issues out, these laughable matters, for several years, but there has been no action on correcting it. At the hearing we held, people were chuckling when we explored how nonsensical some of the Hatch Act restrictions are. Yet, it should not be a humorous matter.

The right of American citizens in good standing to participate in the politics of the Nation is a serious and important constitutional right. It is not something we take lightly. It is a right that, if restricted at all, should be restricted only to the extent necessary to prevent more profound violations from occurring.

The Hatch Act was passed 50 years ago. The development of a professional civil service was being undermined by patronage appointments. At that time more than 60 new Federal agencies had been created by the end of 1934, but only 5 had been placed under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. This meant that the majority of these agencies were being staffed strictly on the basis of political patronage rather than on merit competition.

This rapid growth of patronage jobs, more than 300,000 new jobs in the Government, a fraction of the size that we have today, but 300,000 jobs, created congressional concern that some civil servants might be working for partisan rather than national interests.

In 1939, a special Senate investigation disclosed that political appointees in the WPA—the Works Progress Administration—had truly, honestly, coerced relief workers into making political contributions in return for their jobs. The Hatch Act was passed without congressional hearings, with little debate, in order to protect Federal employees. It was fast action.

The Senate vote on the act was so hasty that a subsequent amendment had to be offered on the House floor to exempt the President, Vice President, and Members of Congress from the Hatch Act restrictions that would have prevented them from even seeking reelection, because they would have been Government officials already in office. They could not have gone out and actually campaigned. So it was passed so fast that there had to be a second action to even permit elected officials to run again for office.

In passing that Hatch Act, Congress attempted to guard the civil service from undue political influence by prohibiting Federal workers from engaging in partisan political activities altogether, none, period.

Fifty years later we have a dramatically different situation. We have an established professional service hired on a competitive merit basis, and we also have a system of checks and balances and appeals processes to guard against political abuses. I believe that a compelling case has been made for restrictions on the political liberties of today's work force.

At the same time, I am acutely aware of public concern that too dramatic a change in the Hatch Act might serve to repoliticize the civil service and expose workers to coercion. What we face in proposing reform of the Hatch Act is a balancing act, an admitted balancing act. We must balance the need to protect the integrity of the civil servants with our duty to protect the constitutional right of all citizens who participate in the Nation's political processes.

Mr. President, under the bill, "Hatched" employees would enjoy more freedoms after hours, after their work hours are finished, by being allowed to work voluntarily, as private citizens, for the candidates and causes of their choice. They would be allowed to carry posters at a political rally, stuff envelopes, participate in voter registration drives, and distribute campaign material while off the job. These are basic rights that other Americans just take for granted.

Some restrictions on off-the-job activity provided for in current law would remain. First, current law prohibitions against Federal and postal employees soliciting campaign contributions from the general public would remain. No campaign contribution soliciting.

Second, this bill would keep current law prohibitions against "Hatched" employees running for partisan elective office. They could not do that. So that is continued. At the same time, it would allow them to run for offices within party organizations or affiliated groups. For example, an employee could be a precinct chairman or convention delegate, a privilege that Federal and postal workers do not enjoy today.

S. 135 would ensure the continued protection of "Hatched" employees from political coercion, by making a clear distinction between activity on the job and activity off the job, away from work on an employee's own time. All political activity on the job would be banned. And this even includes the wearing of campaign buttons, which is allowed under current law.

S. 135 would retain all current law prohibitions and penalties against the use of one's official position to influence other employees and increase the criminal penalties for those convicted of such abuse. In some ways, I view this as strengthening the Hatch Act.

In addition, S. 135 would prohibit Federal workers from engaging in any political activity while wearing a uniform or insignia that identifies them as a Federal or a postal employee.

The Department of Justice, the opponents of the bill, have charged that provisions of S. 135, intended to prevent abuses, will be ineffective in achieving that goal as a practical matter because of the difficulties inherent in proving even the most patent abuses.

Mr. President, I find a statement like that from the Justice Department a little disturbing. It is incredible that these officials having the primary responsibility for upholding the laws of our land and laws of our Nation would maintain that criminal statutes are ineffective because of difficulties in providing the charges.

Indeed, I would believe such difficulties are often the case, but surely Justice officials would not advocate repealing the statutes involved in those cases just because it might be difficult in proving.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to give Federal workers the job protection they deserve, but at the same time give them the right to participate more fully in the political processes, a right denied to them for over 50 years. So I urge my colleagues to support S. 135.

Mr. President, I believe that action by the Senate on Hatch Act reform is long overdue. I know how the feelings go on this. Feelings run high at just the mention of the Hatch Act. The House has twice passed its version of Hatch Act reform, a version quite different from what we have in the Senate. The most recent version, H.R. 20, they passed on April 17, 1989, by a vote of 297 to 90.

I introduced S. 135, the Hatch Act Reform Amendments of 1989, in January 1989, and the Governmental Affairs Committee held a hearing on it in July 1989. The committee approved the bill without amendment by a vote of 10 to 4, reported to the Senate on October 17, 1989.

I think this legislation has very widespread support. I know we have 54 Senators currently signed up as cosponsors of the bill, so I just hope we get by the cloture vote here and we immediately proceed to the consideration of S. 135.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GLENN. I yield such time as the Senator may desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LIEBERMAN] is recognized.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I am proud to rise in support of S. 135 and express my personal hope that cloture is invoked tonight so we can take up this important piece of legislation.

I rise with a certain special sense of personal satisfaction because when I was at law school, which as the Presiding Officer can imagine was a few short years ago, I wrote a paper on the subject of the Hatch Act, and naturally, as befits a law school student, concluded that it was outrageously unconstitutional.

So I consider it to be just another one of the continuing series of miracles that brought me to this great body, so that I have the opportunity now, almost 23 or 24 years later, to stand in this Chamber and argue that we try to right some of the wrong that I think was done in the original passage of the Hatch Act.

The fact is that this act does strip Federal employees of one of the most fundamental rights of our society, one of the truly defined American rights, which is the right to participate in the political process.

I think if we in our society are ever going to limit the right of full political participation, we ought to put the burden of proof on those who would suggest that we adopt or sustain a law that would do that. We ought to demand that they make the fullest showing of fact that there is not just a hint or suspicion of a problem, but a clear record of evidence that there is a problem.

I see none of that in the statements or the arguments of those who oppose S. 135. What I see are fears that come from another time and are unrelated to the facts of civil service life today and the reality of our law, which prohibits and punishes all of the activities and more that those who oppose S. 135 fear.

Mr. President, I worry not only that the Hatch Act as it exists now is bad for those who work for the Federal Government, but I think it is also bad for the body politic in general because our political system depends on popular participation.

And yet by the Hatch Act, we preclude the participation of literally millions of our fellow Americans and millions of our fellow Americans who uniquely are prepared to play active roles in the life of our Government, because Government is their work. Ultimately, excluding whole segments of the public from political participation will weaken our Government.

Even if one agreed with the basic premise of the Hatch Act, which I clearly do not, it is a fact that the act has failed to establish a comprehensible, rational system for regulating the political activities of Federal and postal employees.

I think it has failed to do so because of the inherent inconsistency, the inherent objectionable quality to attempting in America to prohibit political liberty. When we do that, we end up creating a crazy quilt of restrictions that are arbitrary and ultimately ridiculous.

Last year, at the hearings held before the Governmental Affairs Committee on this proposal, some of the arcane rulings that are part of the regulations pursuant to the Hatch Act were described, and Chairman GLENN mentioned some of them.

But does it make any sense when it comes to political signs, for instance, that a Federal employee can lawfully display a 15-inch to 30-inch political sign on his car, but it is unlawful for him to display the same size sign on his lawn or to hold any sign at a political rally, looking at the TV news today and seeing the footage from Red Square in Moscow, the May Day celebration, where there are Soviet citizens demonstrating against the Soviet policy in Lithuania, holding up signs objecting to the policy, waiving Lithuanian flags?

The fact that an American citizen who happens to be a Federal employee could not go to a political demonstration in this country and wave a similar political sign is to me simply unacceptable.

What has happened as a result of this crazy quilt of regulations that make really ultimately no sense is that Federal employees have found themselves confused and have ultimately chosen the cautious course, which is not to participate at all. And that has meant complete abstention from the political process, including activities that are lawful.

Plainly, the time has come for Hatch Act reform. Perhaps in 1939 when the act was adopted there may have been some concern about political influence in the appointment of people to civil service positions, but even at the outset, the Hatch Act was an overreaction to a problem. It was the classic use of a meat cleaver to deal with a problem that really required a scalpel.

Our professional civil service today is well established and there are numerous civil and criminal statutes in place to protect employees from intimidation and improper conduct and to protect the public from the improper mixing of political activity and government authority.

This legislation before us, S. 135, would remove some of the most ridiculous extreme limitations on Federal and postal employees. Truck drivers, nurses, janitors, postal workers, secretaries, and mechanics, 3 million Federal and postal employees in all, would no longer be excluded from exercising their political rights simply because they are Federal and postal workers. They would be free on their own time to hand out campaign literature, to work on voter registration, to put a sign up in their yards, and participate in a political meeting.

This bill retains strong limitations on political activities by Federal employees. In fact, in my opinion, it retains too many limitations. It still prohibits Federal employees from running for partisan office.

Why should an individual who works for the Internal Revenue Service and lives in Alexandria, VA, for instance, be prohibited from running for a local board, a board of finance, a board of education, where he or she can contribute to the life of that community?

But I understand that many people believe we should move slowly in changing the law. This is a temperate, moderate bill. It strikes a balance. It preserves an independent civil service, and better protects the rights of Federal and postal workers.

I hope that the Senate this evening will open the door by invoking cloture to striking a blow for freedom and democratic principles that are so fundamental to our country, by passing this legislation and removing the archaic restrictions that bar the Federal work force from more fully participating in the democratic process.

I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. I yield the distinguished leader 7 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON] is recognized for 7 minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President. I thank the manager.

This is a most curious thing, to be dealing with a bill first enacted in 1939. There was a reason why this bill was enacted in 1939, and why in the year 1990 it is still on the books. During that period of time, the control of the Senate and the House has been mostly under the administration of the Democratic Party. Both parties should be concerned with this bill, but I have a hunch this next vote will be a pretty good straight-shot partisan vote. That's curious to me because the Democratic Party has sustained this fine piece of legislation on the books all those years.

Yes, there are some regulations that govern Federal employees. They sometimes lead to confusion and to frustration. But think how many times we pass legislation here solely out of frustration. We do that with veterans legislation. We are going to try to do it with atomic radiation fallout. We tried to do that with agent orange.

We do a lot of that here. It is called frustration. The reason it is frustrating is because you know you cannot get to first base on it most of the time. So yes, there are some frustrating little things about what you can do and what you cannot do under the Hatch Act:

You can register and vote.

You can assist in voter registration drives, but you cannot work to register voters for one party only.

You can express opinions about candidated and issues.

You can participate in campaigns where none of the candidates represent a political party; that is, school board.

You cannot be a candidate for public office, nor can you campaign for or against a candidate in a partisan election.

You can contribute money to political organizations, but you cannot collect others' contributions.

You can attend political fundraising functions, but you cannot sell tickets to others for such function.

You cannot make campaign speeches to elect a partisan candidate.

You can wear or display political badges, buttons or stickers, but you cannot distribute such campaign material to others in partisan elections.

You can attend political rallies and meetings, but you cannot organize or manage such rallies and meetings.

You can join political clubs or parties, but you cannot hold office in such a club or party.

You can sign nominating petitions, but you cannot circulate these petitions.

You can campaign for or against referendum questions, constitutional amendments, municipal ordinances.

The House bill was a massive overhaul of the Hatch Act. The Senate, I will say this, certainly moderated it, and that is good.

The President has obviously promised a veto of any revision to this act because of one thing; the same reason

President Ford said about why he vetoed it

The compromising position that could result for Federal employees and will result, it is called pressure. Pressure could be brought, and will be brought, on Federal employees in extremely subtle ways beyond the reach of any kind of anticoercion statute. It is a fine line to walk from an employer's suggestion to flat out coercion. It is not only difficult to define, but is difficult to enforce.

On a personal level, I watched my remarkable father serve as Governor of Wyoming. He then ran for reelection as Governor in 1958 and was defeated. He had some deep personal views about capital punishment that were not akin with his constituency. He did not believe in it. In Wyoming that is a pretty hazardous place to be.

But let me tell you what really happened so that in 4 minutes you can hear the real ring of it against the wall. In that campaign—and this is pretty small potatoes politics—after the election they went out to the parking lot. They looked around to see what size the bumper stickers were that they had torn off. They had been torn off because the Democrat had defeated the Republican, and they were all out looking for their friends to get some jobs. They went out and said, "We could tell on your bumper sticker, even though you rubbed it off"—used a little SOS on it—that you were a Simpson supporter. So, therefore, you will be jettisoned out of your seat. It does not matter what you are doing here because we have not been in charge for a long time. We have a lot of people lusting for work."

Now the Republicans do that kind of thing, too, and they are good at it.

So they not only did that, they checked the stationary to see the names of people who had been in State government, and checked the mailing lists. Ladies and gentlemen, have you ever seen real small, pinheaded partisan people who lurk in real life politics? They keep score. Democrat or Republican, they have long memories, like elephants. They play tough. They have total recall, and they can remember every single guy who was a Democrat and then shifted his registration. We are talking about real life.

Let us just look at that last campaign. Let us say you happened to be a Dukakis supporter. You love him. No Hatch Act. You campaign. You pass out stuff. You wear the button, of course, after hours. You preach the word, and Bush wins. You lose. And I tell you, I know what the law says, and I do not care what it says. I do not care how good you put it. You lose. There are certainly penalties against coercion. We all know that. But I know politics better than I know anything else after 25 years, and I know the people who get involved in some of these things who really do not care about Government as much as they care about just blasting the other party out of the office. Period.

And you know that you are going to have people who know their jobs. They are fine people, but I know the zealots. I know the guys who say, "Get that guy. Get him." I know how they screen the ranks. I know how they pick their friends. I know how they punish their enemies. Then there's the issue of fundraising in the office. Boy, that will be a dazzler when the supervisor puts the screws to the little guy down there and says, "Don't worry, I will be by after hours to talk about it."

Then you need to remember how a Democratic Senator will work with a Democratic bureaucrat, how a Republican Senator will work with a Republican bureaucrat. It ought to chill you. That is why nothing has been done since 1939. It would not be good for this country to change this law. That is why we had a Hatch Act in the first place.

The real honest-to-God Federal worker does not want a thing to do with this so-called reform measure. He is cringing, thinking, "Boy, are they really going to get that thing done? And, if they do, that is going to hurt me," because he is a pro and he does not want the pressure. And this nagging subterranean, nonidentifiable, subtle, plain old pressure is not what the real pro wants.

Well, all the Federal unions hang out around here. We are right in the middle of Virginia and Maryland. And, boy, they do a tattoo on our dome all day long about this and other things. They want to come at us on this one. But I will tell you, this is one of those you vote for and hope to Heaven it does not pass. That is what you hope for on this one. I think it is a vote you are going to take too far. It is a bad bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. GLENN. How much time is remaining on my side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 4 minutes and 17 seconds.

Mr. GLENN. I yield such time as the Senator from Alaska may use.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska, Senator STEVENS, is recognized for up to 4 minutes and 17 seconds.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Chair and the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. President, the bill we are discussing today would reform the Hatch Act—not repeal the Hatch Act. We are talking about relaxing some restrictions so that our Federal civil servants can participate more fully in the political process, a right taken for granted by most Americans. We are talking about fairness.

The legislation reported out of the Governmental Affairs Committee in October of last year is identical to a bill which was reported out of that committee during the last Congress. I supported that bill in 1988 and I continue to support the bill now.

Under the Senate bill, Federal employees would be allowed to participate in political activities while off duty and away from the worksite. This involvement could include handing out brochures, putting up yard signs, helping with telephone banks, and other functions commonplace to most Americans.

The Senate bill differs from the House-passed bill in that Federal employees would not be permitted to run for any partisan political office at any level. The Senate bill also restricts solicitation and acceptance of political contributions to a fellow member of the same employee organization for that organization's multicandidate political action committee. Again, only while both employees are off duty and away from the worksite.

Let me remind the Senate of the restrictions which remain in effect under the Senate bill.

Federal employees could not engage in any political activity while on duty, while in a Federal building, while wearing a uniform or official insignia, or while using a Government vehicle.

Federal employees could not run for partisan political office at any level of Government.

Federal employees could not solicit political contributions from the general public.

Federal employees could not give a political contribution to someone in order to encourage that person to vote, or not to vote.

Federal employees could not give, solicit, or accept a contribution while in a Federal facility.

In addition, Federal employees could not wear political buttons—something they are now allowed to do.

The Federal work force in 1939 needed the Protections of the Hatch Act restrictions. Civil servants were being coerced into participating and contributing to political campaigns out of fear for their jobs. Today's Federal employees are much more aware of the civil and criminal penalties which have been enacted to protect them. Violations would still be subject to fines of up to $10,000, imprisonment of up to 3 years, or both as provided in title 18 of the United States Code.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have reprinted at the end of my remarks a list of the statues and statutory provisions which are intended to insure a politically neutral Civil Service. These provisions are not changed by S. 135.

Mr. President, the Senate bill is a balance between protecting the impartial administration and enforcement of Federal laws and the advancement of Federal Civil Service based solely on merit—a laudable concern expressed by the Department of Justice—and the basic constitutional right of all Americans to participate in their country's political process.

I urge support of this legislation.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATUTES AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS WHICH ARE INTENDED TO INSURE A POLITICALLY NEUTRAL CIVIL SERVICE

The following statutes, enacted after passage of the Hatch Act in 1939, serve a useful purpose in preserving the neutrality of the work force and negating practices relating to the spoils system:

Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, P. Law 95-454, 92 Stat. 111.

CHAPTER 23—MERIT SYSTEM PRINCIPLES

5 U.S.C. §2301(b)(1) Recruitment should be from qualified individuals from appropriate sources in an endeavor to achieve a work force from all segments of society, and selection and advancement should be determined solely on the basis of relative ability, knowledge, and skills, after fair and open competition which assures that all receive equal opportunity.

5 U.S.C. §2301(b)(2) All employees and applicants for employment should receive fair and equitable treatment in all aspects of personnel management without regard to political affiliation * * *

5 U.S.C. §2302(b)(1) Any employee who has authority to take, direct others to take, recommend, or approve any personnel action, shall not, with respect to such authority discriminate for or against any employee or applicant for employment—

(E) on the basis of marital status or political affiliation, as prohibited under any law, rule, or regulation . . .

(3) coerce the political activity of any person (including the providing of any political contribution or service), or take any action against any employee or applicant for employment as a reprisal for the refusal of any person to engage in such political activity.

Federal Criminal Code provisions—18 U.S.C. §594, 595, 597, 598-607.

18 U.S.C. § 594 prohibits the attempt or use of intimidation, threat, or coercion for the purpose of interfering with another's right to vote. A person in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

18 U.S.C. § 595 prohibits any person employed by the federal government in an administrative capacity from using his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting, the nomination or election of certain candidates for national office. Violators are subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or one year in prison, or both.

18 U.S.C. § 597 prohibits the making, offering, solicitation, acceptance or receipt of expenditures in consideration for one's vote or the withholding thereof. Violation of this section carries a fine of not more than $1,000 or maximum imprisonment of one year, or both. If the violation is willful, a fine of not more than $10,000 and imprisonment of not more than two years, or both, shall be assessed.

18 U.S.C. § 598 prohibits the use of congressional appropriations for work relief, or the exercise of authority conferred by an appropriations act, for the purpose of interfering with an individual's right to vote. Violation of this section warrants a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

18 U.S.C. § 599 prohibits a candidate from the direct or indirect promise or pledge, or the use of his influence, of the appointment of any person for the purpose of procuring support for his candidacy. Violators shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. Willful violation carries a maximum fine of $10,000 or two years in prison, or both.

18 U.S.C. § 600 prohibits promise or special consideration for employment, position, compensation, contract, appointment or other benefit made possible by an Act of Congress to any person in return for any political activity, or the support of a candidate or political party. Violators of this section shall be fined no more than $10,000 or imprisoned no more than one year, or both.

18 U.S.C. § 601 prohibits causing any person to make a contribution for the benefit of any candidate or political party through the denial of deprivation of any employment, position, or work with an agency of the federal government. A maximum fine of $10,000 or imprisonment of not more than one year, or both shall be levied against violators.

18 U.S.C. § 602 makes it unlawful for a candidate for Congress, elected representative, employee or officer of the federal government to knowingly solicit contributions, within the meaning of section 301(8) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, from any other officer, employee or person. Any individual in violation of this section shall be fined no more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

18 U.S.C. § 603 prohibits any officer or employee of the United States from making any contribution to any other officer, employee, Senator or Representative, if the person receiving such contribution is the employer or employing authority of the person making the contribution. Violators are subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or three years in prison or both.

18 U.S.C. § 604 prohibits solicitation or receipt of any assessment, subscription or contribution for any political purpose, from any person known to be receiving or entitled to compensation, employment or benefit generated by Congressional appropriation for work relief purposes. Violators shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

18 U.S.C. § 605 prohibits the disclosure, for political purposes, of the names of persons on relief, to a political candidate, committee or campaign manager, or the receipt of such a list. Violators shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

18 U.S.C. § 606 prohibits officers of employees of the United States from discharging, promoting, or degrading the rank of any other officer or employee for giving, withholding, or neglecting to make a political contribution. Violators shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

18 U.S.C. § 607 makes it unlawful to solicit or receive any contribution in a room or building occupied in the discharge of official duties by any person mentioned in section 603 above. Any person in violation shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

Expansion of the Competitive Service.

At the time the Hatch Act was passed, only about 10% of all federal employees were covered. Now there are few employees who are not covered and the Hatch Act Reform bill will continue such broad coverage. Further 5 U.S.C. § 1308 requires that Congress be provided with an annual report setting forth a statement in the administration of the competitive service, the rules and regulations and exceptions thereto in force, the reason for exceptions, etc. Section 3302 gives the President sole discretion for providing for necessary exceptions of positions from the competitive service and thus, possibly from Hatch Act coverage.

Government in the Sunshine Act, P. Law. 94-409, 5 U.S.C. § 552b, and the sunshine provisions of other various statutes.

Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552.

Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1984, P. Law 93-443, 88 Stat. 1263.—Includes public financing of presidential election and limits contributions and expenditures for federal candidates; Strengthened oversight functions of Congress; and Whistleblower Protections.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, in view of the time constraints, let me just say a few words to the Senate about this act. It has been 50 years since it was passed. The two great parties have each occupied about half of that time in the control of the Federal Government. But times have changed, Mr. President. We are approaching a time now when the demographics of society show us that we are going to have to have incentives to get bright young people to come into the Federal Government. What incentive is there now? Pay? Are we going to tell them we are going to pay them, offer incentive payments to bring young people in? I do not think that is the wave of the future. The wave of the future is participation by young people in Government. They see it all over the world. And yet, here comes a young person into the Federal Government to see whether he or she wants to take a job with the Federal Government. And what do you tell the young people about political activity? As the Senator from Ohio said, you cannot stand on the corner and raise a political sign. Of course, you can give money.

I wonder about the statements we have been hearing today if people really understand this bill. There is plenty a Federal employee can do to influence politics. The question is, What can you do to be involved in politics? The young people of this country want to participate. And I believe that to tell them—as the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Connecticut have pointed out, sure you can put a little sign on your front yard or you can put a bigger one on your car and you can wear a button and you can give a thousand dollars. That is not what they want. They want to be able to go to caucuses; they want to feel the spirit of the democracy of America.

How do you get that? How do you get that and listen to people who are living in the past? I grew up in Indiana. My grandfather was a Government employee for a while. I remember when they used to come around and get contributions from my grandfather. Those days are gone. There is nothing in this bill that would authorize that. There is nothing in this bill that would authorize anyone to discriminate against a person because they declared themselves to be in support of one person or another in a Federal campaign. Nothing. Nothing that would repeal the protections that are there for the Federal employee now.

I congratulate my friend from Ohio, and, as he said, he came into this argument. Sentor GLENN did. I remember sitting down talking to him when he first became chairman of our committee. He was skeptical. "Prove it to me."

Prove it to me, that this has to be done in order to protect the Federal employee and at the same time give him or her greater participation.

Through the years, I congratulate my good friend, JOHN GLENN, he has come around. He sees it. I spent time in the Federal Government as a civil servant. I did not have anyone tell me not to put a bumper sticker on my car. I could do that. I could contribute.

What people do not understand is the protections in this bill are protections to allow you to get out and be part of a group that goes to a caucus, goes to a precinct meeting and expresses yourself on issues. I think that is what the young people want to do.

From my point of view, I think this is the thing most people are missing, and our President is missing it. The people in his Justice Department are missing it.

The time will come when we are going to have a hard time getting more bright young people to come into Government and, I think this current Hatch Act is a disincentive to the young people who want to be vibrant activists in this system of ours today. I think there is a distrust in the Hatch Act that is no longer warranted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, in closing the debate, I would like to briefly sum up the arguments against this legislation:

First, current law under the Hatch Act is designed to protect Federal employees from political coercion. S. 135 severely erodes this protection by making Federal employees vulnerable to indirect, subtle pressures. Let there be no doubt that if this bill becomes law, Federal employees will feel obligated to engage in certain activities to further their career, even in the absence of explicit coercion.

Second, let me be clear, both supporters of current law and S. 135 want to protect against political coercion. Current law is a proven, effective method for doing so, while this legislation fails to acknowledge the notion that coercion is often done in subtle ways.

Third, this legislation will permit a Federal work force with sensitive responsibilities such as law enforcement, tax collection, Federal election oversight, and the awarding of Government contracts to become identified with certain political parties or causes. Public identification of Federal employees with partisan politics would erode public trust in the Government.

Very frankly, I doubt very seriously that the reason the youth is not becoming more involved in Government is because of the Hatch Act.

Fourth, this legislation will present an unprecedented opportunity for Federal employees to solicit contributions from other Federal employees who belong to the same employee union. This will breed subtle pressures within the work force to contribute to certain political actions.

Fifth, political coercion at the State level, where protections similar to those at the Federal level are not in law, has resulted in numerous prosecutions. The Office of Special Counsel has recently prosecuted cases of coercion in Akron, OH, and Niagara Falls, NY. The Department of Justice has investigated cases of political corruption in Clark County, IN, and Chicago, IL.

Sixth, opponents of this legislation include Common Cause, the American Bar Association, the Federal Bar Association, the National Academy of Public Administration, the National Taxpayers Union, and the Chamber of Commerce. Proponents are Federal and Postal employee unions and the ACLU.

Seventh, surveys indicate that Federal employees do not support Hatch Act reform. More than 35 percent of Federal personnel specialists surveyed believe Hatch Act reform would have a negative effect on the work environment, while only 11 percent said it would have a positive effect, and the remainder said it would have no effect or had no response.

In 1987, the Senior Executives Association published a survey of their members. More than 70 percent of the members who responded to the survey favored the current law. But what is even more revealing is some of the comments made by respondents:

The additional "freedom" in exercising rights of citizens would quickly turn into political favoritism, with different sets of Senior Executives careerists and GS careerists "in" or "out" of favor depending on election results.

And, further, they said:

The bill could be very harmful for professionals in the career service. Incoming appointees would be under great pressure to award those who worked the hardest for the party that won.

For anyone who doubts a return to the spoils system, I urge them to listen to these Federal employees. The Hatch Act protects them now. The Hatch Act reflects the historical and continuing necessity to balance the rights of Federal employees as citizens with the overwhelming public interest in an impartial, politically neutral, and independent civil service. The changes being proposed harm that balance.

For that reason, I urge Senators to vote against proceeding with this legislation.

Mr. President, I have here from the executive office of the President, a statement of administration policy in which it is said:

The Administration opposes the enactment of S. 135. If this bill were presented to the President, his senior advisers would recommend its disapproval.

S. 135 repeals virtually all of the Hatch Act's restrictions on partisan political activity by Federal employees. This bill would allow unrestricted, off-duty partisan electioneering and political activity by all Federal employees. Such activity would undermine the integrity and independence of the traditionally non-partisan civil service.

Under S. 135, Federal employees would be vulnerable to both direct and subtle political pressures. They could be presented to "volunteer" help in campaigns and to make financial contributions in order to curry favor with one political party or another. The bill's proposed safeguard against abuse is inadequate and largely unenforceable.

The Administration believes the Hatch Act, which has served to protect the public interest for half a century, is a valuable safeguard of governmental integrity and should be preserved.

I yield back the floor reserving the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 30 seconds to the distinguished chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for 30 seconds, chargeable to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GLENN. What we are proposing is to bring some clarity from confusion concerning the Hatch Act. On the job, "no politics of any kind" clarifies that. It does not even permit what is permitted now. No politics of any kind on the job.

But off the job, you still cannot solicit money, you cannot run for elective office, but you can participate in the political process as every other American, with those very sensible restrictions. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time controlled by the Senator from Ohio is yielded back. The Senator from Delaware still controls 38 seconds.

Mr. ROTH. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The hour of 7 p.m. has arrived. The time for debate under the unanimous-consent agreement having expired, pursuant to rule XXII, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending cloture motion, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to the consideration of S. 135, a bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to restore to Federal civilian employees their right to participate voluntarily, as private citizens, in the political processes of the Nation, to protect such employees from improper political solicitations, and for other purposes.

George Mitchell, John Glenn, Tom Daschle, Jim Sasser, Patrick Leahy, Alan J. Dixon, Charles S. Robb, Paul Simon, Frank R. Lautenberg, Herb Kohl, David Pryor, Wendell Ford, D.K. Inouye, Dennis DeConcini, J.J. Exon, Bob Kerrey.

CALL OF THE ROLL

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the quorum call has been waived.

VOTE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on the motion to proceed to the consideration of S. 135, the Hatch Act reform amendments, shall be brought to a close?

The yeas and nays are required. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BREAUX). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 70, nays 28, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Bentsen

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 70 and the nays are 28. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

The pending question before the Senate is the motion to proceed to the bill, S. 135.

The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is noted. The Clerk will please call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, there will be no further rollcall votes this evening.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader is recognized.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEETING WITH PANAMANIAN PRESIDENT ENDARA

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader and I met this afternoon with Panamanian President Endara—who is here on an official visit.

I had the opportunity to meet President Endara in Panama last December—coincidentally, just 2 weeks before the United States intervention which ousted Noriega, and led to Endara's selection as President.

He impressed me then with his courage and determination—and has impressed all of us since with the energy and dedication he has brought to the task of establishing his government.

I might also say—he has learned quickly how to deal with our press. In our meeting, one reporter tried hard to get him to say something critical about the slow pace of congressional action on the Panama aid package—but he stuck to the diplomatic high road.

He did make clear that Panama needs our help, and needs it quickly. And both the majority leader and I pledged our best efforts to move the supplemental as quickly as possible.

The President also reaffirmed something he told me in Panama, and has said publicly since: What Panama needs, more than aid, is investment, technology, tourism, and trade. That's where Panama sees its future.

I would like to put in the RECORD an eloquent speech that President Endara gave at the National Press Club today. It makes this same point, and many other important points.

I would like to take particular note of the emphasis that President Endara placed on the issue of drugs and money laundering in his speech. He said, and I quote: "We are in a partnership with the United States in this global war on drugs." His actions to date suggest he takes this partnership seriously, and is working hard, to again use his words, "to eliminate any chance that the tyranny over the mind that comes from drugs and drug money will ever return" to Panama.

Mr. President, it was a pleasure to welcome President Endara to the Senate. I commend his speech to all Senators.

PRESIDENT GUILLERMO ENDARA'S REMARKS TO NATIONAL PRESS CLUB LUNCH, MAY 1, 1990

"All men are created equal."

"God who gave us life, gave us liberty."

"Almighty God hath created the mind free."

I would like to begin with these words by Thomas Jefferson, chiseled in his Memorial forever, because they inspire the thought and actions of the government of Panama.

The years 1989 and 1990 will be remembered as a time of triumph for democracy. But, we in Panama look back more than two decades for the beginning of our struggle to regain our liberty and to assert our right to be equal.

It was finally in June of 1987 that the dam of dictatorship broke and a flood of cries for freedom rushed like a torrent through the country

We called upon the people of Panama to be good citizens, to stand up for decency, to march for human rights and democracy, to face the armed power of the military with nothing but the righteousness of our cause and a white handkerchief. They answered that call. People marched as one into the streets of our cities in a moral crusade which was non-violent, truly national, encompassing all classes and ages, all religions and regions, from all walks of life.

Then, two years later, on May 7, 1989—almost exactly one year ago—Panama had an election. On that day, despite intimidation and fraud on the part of the government, the people of Panama spoke—clearly, with one voice, throughout the country, for all the world to hear. They voted overwhelmingly for the opposition coalition, ADO-Civilista.

Yet, the dictator tried to cheat the people of their victory, attempting to annul a peaceful process, tarnished only by his own illegal and fraudulent actions. But when even that failed, he worked to choke the voice that called for freedom. When we tried to claim the victory for democracy, which was rightfully ours, we were beaten and battered and arrested and jailed. Never forget the blood that flowed that day in May and was recorded for history and for the whole world to witness.

Politically and morally, the people of Panama were victorious, but there were other forces that we could not vanquish by ourselves. The guns were too many; the power and control of the dictator, too great; his alliance with international criminal conspiracies, too powerful.

When we sought a peaceful way out at the negotiating table to avoid additional suffering to our people, the dictator would have none of it and saw it as another opportunity to impose his almighty will. When we sought help from our friends and from our neighbors, all kinds of outmoded, old-fashioned legalistic barriers were raised. Only the United States and Costa Rica were with us.

Do not let the story of our sacrifices and yours be written by those who see the world through the dark and unlit windows of the past. Let us, the people of Panama, write the story of our own struggle, and we will tell the truth for the whole world to hear: Panama was liberated, not destroyed. All who were in Panama during those days will bear witness to these facts. We are today a free nation. If anybody has any doubts, anywhere in the world, please do not waste your time with Byzantine discussions: come to Panama, travel to any corner of the cities or of the countryside, talk to the people, breath the air, see for yourself.

If you do, you will find that our struggle has taken on a new meaning now and a different dimension. We are struggling now to make Panama a better place to live in, a better place for foreigners to visit, and a better place to leave to our children and future generations. Our struggle now is to preserve democracy, to attain economic recovery and progress, and to show the world that we are good, friendly, hard-working, honest and creative people, not a nation of drug-traffickers and money-launderers.

We want to eliminate any chance that the tyranny over the mind that comes from drugs and drug money will ever return, with its sequel of moral corrosion and social degradation, for you as well as for us. We want this for its own merits and our protection. Consider that close to one-half of our population is 19 years of age or under, and that one-fourth is under 10 years. We must protect this precious resource because the future of our country depends on it.

For years, we breathed the rotten air of corruption, drugs and money launderers. They are gone today and we do not want them back; this form of tyranny has ended. When I ran for President, I promised the people that the new Panama would not tolerate their activities on our soil. One of my first acts as President was to appoint an Attorney General who immediately ordered the freezing of over 200 bank accounts that were tainted with money made from drugs. Shortly thereafter the new government issued a decree requiring our banks to record and to report every cash transaction in excess of ten thousand dollars.

We are in a partnership with the United States in this global war on drugs. It is a true alliance of interest and of effort. We will continue to work with the United States to find ways to make that alliance, and our partnership, stronger and more effective. When it comes to the war on drugs, I assure you, that the U.S. has no better friend than the new government of Panama. Winning that war is in our own interest too.

We are also struggling in my country against the new enemies of freedom which are also the oldest enemies of man: poverty, disease, ignorance, and unemployment. Democracy cannot long survive where children starve, where the sick go untreated, and where those who want to work are idle.

Conservative estimates place unemployment at the 20 percent level nationally, and up to 30 percent in urban areas, primarily around both entrances of the Canal in the Pacific and in the Atlantic sides, where roughly one million people live, out of a total population of almost 2 and a half million. According to three-year-old statistics, the government provided jobs to 22 percent of the working population, while the private sector of the economy provided about 35 percent. (Incidentally, the Canal operation accounted for only 3 percent. But while the mean monthly salary in Panama was four hundred and fifty dollars, it was fifteen hundred dollars in the Canal area).

We must reduce the size of the public sector in Panama, and increase the role of the private sector in the economy, to enable it to provide more jobs for Panamanians. The service sector with more than 50 percent, the agricultural sector with 30 percent, and the manufacturing sector with 15 percent, of the jobs in the private sector, must be strengthened. Toward this end, we are delineating clear government policies to encourage the initiative of private domestic and foreign investment.

More than a third of our total imports come from the United States. About two thirds of our total exports come to this country. The United States is an important business partner and we want to expand and increase our commercial exchange.

Illiteracy is also a threat to democracy and freedom. We have eleven per cent illiteracy rate nationwide but it skyrockets to sixty-three per cent among the native Indian population. We must provide adequate education to them as well as to the half-million sudents between the ages of six and fifteen who crowd our schools, and to the more than fifty thousand younsters who attend our three universities. We depend on them and on the development of their minds and skills to build the country of the future which we all want.

This is our call to arms today, for we are stil embattled. This is our challenge today, for our democracy is still at risk. This is our task today in Panama—to feed those who are hungry, to care for those who are sick, to find shelter for these who cannot escape the tropical sun or rain, to educate those who want knowledge, to find jobs for those who seek work.

With your generous help we are going to be able to meet the immediate basic human needs of our people, until the long term economic policies and measures which are being put in place begin to bear fruit. We will reconstruct and return prosperity to our land. Panama will be a showcase of freedom and of free enterprise for all the Hemisphere to see and for all the world to participate in. Your investment in our well-being will grow and multiply in value—not only for all Panamanians but for people throughout the world.

We want to participate as full-fledged members of the democratic world that is taking shape. The political revolution that has reshaped the face of this world over the past months will be followed by an economic revolution. All of Europe will soon be one giant, productive, united, powerhouse of an economy. Soon it will be so in Asia and the Pacific where new economic forces are taking shape. We want to be part of this exciting world, and we want to contribute to its progress and well-being.

We, the leaders of the democracies in this Hemisphere, must find the wisdom and the will to plan together, to work together, to produce together, and to trade together in a way that will make our nations prosper together in peace. I propose a new Alliance for Growth and Freedom, and I invite all democratic governments of our Hemisphere to join in the effort. I do not propose the mere transfer of wealth from those who have to those who have not. I propose an Alliance which will benefit all participants as partners, as equals with their economies and private sectors truly engaged and involved, with obstacles to trade and investment eliminated once and for all. Let us think big; let us be bold. We live in an exciting time.

Let me, in closing, say a few words about a couple of topics which give me concern.

Last week, all the world celebrated the twentieth anniversary of Earth Day. Every year, that celebration reminds us—ever more powerfully—of our common plight on this planet that we share. The environmental movement is based on the notion that, to combat the despoliation of our planet, we must put the common good above narrow national interests, that there should be a new definition of national interest which includes the health and welfare of other human beings. This movement rises above nation states and national boundaries and unites all men and women in a common effort to meet a common threat. To save the world, all the world must work together, and when it comes to cleaning up our planet, national boundaries are more of a hindrance than a help. Slowly and painfully we have finally learned: When we put poison in our environment, we endanger more than our forests, streams and wildlife; we also poison ourselves.

The same can be said about human rights. For the first time in human history, we have come to realize that the cause of human rights transcends national boundaries, that the people of the world have an absolute right to intervene in the affairs of a nation or government engaged in the wholesale violation of human rights. The cause of human rights—like the environmental movement—cuts across borders and boundaries and makes traditional notions of national sovereignty obsolete.

Will that same sense of common purpose and shared destiny ever unite the peoples of this Hemisphere in their quest for social justice and economic prosperity? Surely it is worth our time and talent to explore better ways to bring our peoples together to the benefit of all. Surely the hope of genuine cooperation and collaboration among the nations of this Hemisphere is not just an idle daydream.

To build this kind of an economic community in this Hemisphere will take time and trust, but first we need the will. Let us pledge at least that we will begin to work on a declaration of hope. Let us spell out a vision of the future that might one day bring us together in a Greater American Economic Union. When that moment comes, it will be a new day for all Americans, from the North as well as the South.

There is already a new day in Panama. We are building a new nation. You have given us some of the tools to begin. Now watch us work. Panama is the place to be, today and also tomorrow.

For myself and for all the people of Panama, thank you for the honor that you pay to my country by inviting me to speak to you on this occasion.

NEVADA'S SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR—LINDA MONTGOMERY

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize one of our Nation's outstanding business persons. Mrs. Linda Montgomery of Las Vegas, NV, has been selected by the U.S. Small Business Administration as the SBA Small Business Person of the Year for the District of Nevada. This is a truly praiseworthy achievement of which we should all be very proud.

Mrs. Montgomery is the owner of the Learning Center, a computer training center which she founded in 1985. The center's courses are geared to the business professional who requires effective personal computer training in a short timeframe. In the span of 5 years, the center has grown from a 1 classroom, 1 instructor operation to its current facility of 7 instructors and 6 classrooms, offering 32 courses. In addition, in September 1989, the Learning Center opened the TLC Career School providing a 9-week curriculum to prepare individuals for the job market.

This kind of growth requires more than hard work. It begins with the foresight to anticipate the integral role personal computers would play in today's business world. It depends upon an unusual degree of flexibility to meet the rapid pace of expansion both within the field of computers and in the economic boom of the Las Vegas area. Most of all, it mandates a keen business mind to maintain fiscal control of an ever expanding business.

Mr. President, Mrs. Montgomery is a valuable member of the Las Vegas Chamber of Commerce and the Las Vegas community. But she is also the type of person who is invaluable to our Nation's international economic welfare. At a time when our Nation is struggling to regain our former economic dominance, Mrs. Montgomery sets an example of the success for which we should all strive. Our recognition of her achievements is important not only to reward a job well done, but to provide an example of the ingenuity which the United States must harness to overcome the increasing international economic competition that we face.

REPORT ON THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO NICARAGUA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM-115

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I hereby report to the Congress on developments since my last report of October 25, 1989, concerning the national emergency with respect to Nicaragua that was declared in Executive Order No. 12513 on May 1, 1985. This report also provides final information on total Administration expenses directly incurred in exercise of emergency authorities pursuant to that order from May 1, 1985, through my termination of the national emergency on March 13, 1990. Executive Order No. 12513 prohibited: (1) all imports into the United States of goods and services of Nicaraguan origin; (2) all exports from the United States of goods to or destined for Nicaragua except those destined for the organized democratic resistance; (3) Nicaraguan air carriers from engaging in air transportation to or from points in the United States; and (4) vessels of Nicaraguan registry from entering United States ports. On March 13, 1990, in Executive Order No. 12707. 55 Fed. Reg. 9707 (March 14, 1990), I terminated the emergency declared with respect to Nicaragua and lifted the economic sanctions imposed on that country, in response to the successful completion of a democratic presidential election in Nicaragua.

1. The declaration of emergency was was pursuant to the authority vested in the President by the Constitution and laws of the United States, including the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, 50 U.S.C. 1701 et seq. ("IEEPA"), the National Emergencies Act, 50 U.S.C. 1601 et seq. ("NEA"), chapter 12 of title 50 of the United States Code (50 U.S.C. 191 et seq.), and section 301 of title 3 of the United States Code. The termination of emergency and removal of sanctions were made pursuant to the authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and laws of the United States, including those just noted. This report is submitted pursuant to 50 U.S.C. 1641(c) and 1703(c).

2. The Office of Foreign Assets Control ("FAC") of the Department of the Treasury issued the Nicaraguan Trade Control Regulations implementing the prohibitions in Executive Order No. 12513, effective May 7, 1985, 50 Fed. Reg. 19890 (May 10, 1985).

3. Since my report of October 25, 1989, fewer than 20 applications for licenses have been received by FAC with respect to Nicaragua, and the majority of these applications have been granted. Of the licenses issued in this period, some authorized exports for humanitarian purposes, covering donated articles beyond the scope of the exceptions to the export ban. Certain licenses authorized the export of equipment to La Prensa, the major opposition publication in Nicaragua, as well as to other opposition press groups. A license was also issued to the Free Trade Union Institute of the AFL–CIO to export equipment and supplies to the Nicaraguan Confederation of Trade Union Unity in Managua for use during the elections that were held on February 25, 1990, in Nicaragua. Our licensing action was taken pursuant to Public Law 101–119, which was enacted by the Congress to provide assistance for free and fair elections in Nicaragua.

4. Since my last report, several cases have been referred to the FAC civil penalties division for civil penalty actions. The companies in question are based in the United States and engaged in unauthorized exports to Nicaragua from the United States. We expect at least four of these exporting companies to be assessed penalties.

In addition to cases currently under civil penalty consideration, there are approximately 34 companies under active investigation by the U.S. Customs Service. These cases involve unauthorized importation and/or exportation of goods between the United States and Nicaragua.

5. The U.S. Government expects to have greatly improved relations with Nicaragua now that the new Nicaraguan government has taken office, particularly in light of President Chamorro's commitment to democratization and to a free market economy. For these reasons, I terminated the national emergency with respect to Nicaragua on March 13, 1990.

6. The expenses incurred by the Federal Government in the period from November 1, 1989, through May 1, 1990, that are directly attributable to the exercise of powers and authorities conferred by the declaration of the national emergency with respect to Nicaragua are estimated at $119,667.48, all of which represents wage and salary costs for Federal personnel. Personnel costs were largely centered in the Department of the Treasury (particularly in the Customs Service, as well as in FAC and the Office of the General Counsel), with expenses also incurred by the Department of State and the National Security Council.

7. For the full period of the national emergency with respect to Nicaragua (May 1, 1985, through March 13, 1990), the total expenditures of the Federal Government directly attributable to the exercise of powers and authorities conferred by the declaration of the national emergency are estimated at $1,309,783.48, all of which represents wage and salary costs for Federal personnel. Personnel costs were largely centered in the Departments of State and the Treasury, and the National Security Council.

8. The February 25, 1990, democratic election in Nicaragua ended the unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States previously posed by the policies and actions of the Sandinista government in that country, and led to my termination of the national emergency to deal with that threat. Accordingly, this is the last periodic report that will be submitted pursuant to 50 U.S.C. 1703(c). This report also constitutes the last semiannual report and the final report on Administration expenditures required pursuant to 50 U.S.C. 1641(c).

BUDGET REQUEST OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM-116

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act, I am transmitting the District of Columbia Government's 1991 Budget request and 1990 Budget supplemental request.

The District's general fund 1991 operating budget request is $3,241 million. Total 1991 Federal payments anticipated in the District's budget are $540 million. The District's 1990 general fund budget supplemental request contains $111 million in cost increases and $131 million in budget authority rescissions, for a net decrease of $20 million. This transmittal does not affect the Federal budget.

There are three District budget issues to which I would direct your attention. First, I encourage you to continue the abortion funding policy that the Congress established in the District's 1989 and 1990 appropriations laws, which prohibit the use of both Federal and local funds for abortions.

Second, the 1991 Budget proposes to modify and make permanent the 1990 pilot project that requires the District of Columbia to charge Federal establishments directly for water and sewer services. Inappropriate charges and excessive usage have been eliminated through this pilot project. As a result, Federal appropriations under the pilot program for water and sewer services for 1990 will be roughly $4 million (or about 12 percent) lower than under the old, lump-sum payment system.

Third, I ask that the Congress reinstate the President's apportionment authority over the Federal payment to the District of Columbia. Directing immediate disbursement of the Federal payment at the start of the fiscal year increases Treasury's cost of borrowing. Further, the Congress very clearly did not intend to exempt this payment from sequestration in the original Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act as current law permits.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 1, 1990.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

By Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself and Mr. BURNS):

S.J. Res. 303. Joint resolution designating May 5, 1990, as "National Tax Freedom Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BIDEN (for himself and Mr. THURMOND):

S. 2545. A bill to amend title 18 of the United States Code, to increase the term of imprisonment for offenses involving driving while intoxicated when a minor is present in the vehicle; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DRUNK DRIVING CHILD PROTECTION ACT

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Drunk Driving Child Protection Act of 1990. Simply put, this bill increases the penalty for drunk and drugged driving by an additional year and a $1,000 fine for offenses in which there are minors in the car.

Drunk driving is one of the most serious public health problems in the country.

Each year, more than 24,000 people are killed in alcohol-related crashes—in other words, one person is killed every 20 minutes by a drunk or drugged driver.

Two of every five Americans will be involved in an alcohol-related traffic accident in their lifetime.

More than a million alcohol and drug related accidents occur on our highways every year, causing a half of a million injuries.

And more than 40 percent of all teenage deaths result from car accidents—half of these involve drinking.

We have made a great deal of progress in recent years in fighting back against drunk driving. Virtually every State in the country has strengthened their laws against drunk driving, largely as a result of aggressive efforts by Mothers Against Drunk Driving [MADD] and other concerned groups.

In Congress, I have worked to pass tough laws to crack down on drunk and drugged driving.

In 1986, I was the Democratic floor manager for the Comprehensive Anti-Drug Abuse Act, which created a new Federal offense with a maximum 15 years in prison for operating a bus, train, or other common carrier under the influence of alcohol.

And in 1988, I coauthored the provisions of the omnibus anti-drug abuse bill that explicitly recognized that drunk driving is a violent crime—requiring States to compensate drunk driving victims in the same way that other violent crime victims are compensated.

We have made progress. But when 24,000 Americans are killed every year by drunk drivers, it's clear that much, much more needs to be done.

All drunk drivers should have stiff and certain punishment. But when a drunk driver puts a child at risk, such reckless acts should be punished even more severely.

That's why I am introducing the Drunk Driving Child Protection Act of 1990 to increase the penalty for drunk driving whenever a child is in the car. If there is a minor present, my amendment allows a judge to impose an additional 1 year in prison and an extra fine of $1,000 on top of the punishment of the current penalty for drunk driving.

My bill will attack the problem of drunk driving with children in the car on two fronts. First, my bill will boost the penalty for drunk driving on Federal lands. There are more than 200,000 miles of roads on Federal land—more than in any single State in the country. Second, my bill will increase the penalty for drunk drivers who are behind the wheels of buses, trains, and other common carriers that operate on our highways.

Drunk and drugged drivers are a danger to our entire society. They not only risk their own lives, but also the lives of countless others. That's why we've enacted tough drunk driving laws in the past several years. But when they risk the lives of innocent children—who have no choice whether to get in the car with a drunk parent or other adult—the law should be even more severe. A stiffer penalty is a matter of simple justice.

I am pleased that Senator THURMOND, with whom I have worked closely on antidrunk driving legislation, is cosponsoring this bill. I look forward to working with him to move this legislation through the Judiciary Committee as quickly as possible.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill, an explanatory factsheet, and a letter in support of the bill from Mickey Sadoff, president of Mothers Against Drunk Driving, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2545

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Drunk Driving Child Protection Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. STATE LAWS APPLIED IN AREAS OF FEDERAL JURISDICTION.

Section 13(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) striking "For purposes" and inserting "(1) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (2) and for purposes"; and

(2) adding to the end thereof the following:

"(2) In addition to any term of imprisonment provided for operating a motor vehicle under the influence of a drug or alcohol imposed under the law of a State, territory, possession, or district, the punishment for such an offense under this section shall include an additional term of imprisonment of not more than one year and an additional fine of not more than $1,000, or both, if—

"(A) a non-driving minor was present in the motor vehicle when the offense was committed; and

"(B) the law of the State, territory, possession, or district applicable to the offense does not provide an additional term of imprisonment for an act described in subparagraph (A).".

SEC. 2. COMMON CARRIERS.

Section 342 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting "(a)" before "Whoever"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(b) In addition to any term of imprisonment imposed for an offense under subsection (a), the punishment for such offense shall include an additional term of imprisonment of not more than one year and an additional fine of not more than $1,000, or both, if a non-driving minor was present in the common carrier when the offense was committed.".

FACT SHEET: "DRUNK DRIVING CHILD PROTECTION ACT OF 1990" TO BE INTRODUCED BY SENATOR JOSEPH R. BIDEN, JR.

CURRENT FEDERAL LAW

Drunk driving is punishable under two provisions of the federal criminal code. Under the Assimilative Crimes Act, crimes committed on federal lands that are not specifically punishable under the federal criminal code are punishable under the state law in which the federal land is located. Thus, when a federal judge sentences a person for drunk driving on federal land, the judge applies the state penalties.

In addition, the 1986 drug bill made it a federal crime to operate a common carrier (e.g., bus, rail train, airplane) under the influence of alcohol or drugs, punishable by up to 15 years in prison and $10,000 fine.

THE BIDEN "DRUNK DRIVING CHILD PROTECTION ACT OF 1990"

Senator Biden's bill amends both provisions of federal law to increase the penalty when a minor is present in the vehicle. First, under the Assimilative Crimes Act, Senator Biden's bill would allow federal judges to impose an additional penalty, beyond the applicable state law, of not more than one year imprisonment and an additional fine of not more than $1,000, where a minor is present when the drunk driving offense occurs. This provision would extend to the more than 200,000 miles of roads on federal lands—more than in any single state.

Second, the bill amends the common carrier provisions to increase the penalty for operating a common carrier under the influence of drugs or alcohol when a child is riding in the vehicle by up to one year imprisonment and an additional $1,000 fine.

In addition, this legislation—developed in cooperation with the Delaware and national offices of Mothers Against Drunk Driving—will serve as a model for the states to follow in enacting tough drunk driving laws.

MOTHERS AGAINST DRUNK DRIVING,
Hurst, TX, April 27, 1990.

Senator JOSEPH BIDEN,
Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BIDEN: Mothers Against Drunk Driving is delighted to stand with you in support of the "Drunk Driving Child Protection Act of 1990" Bill which will enhance the criminal sanctions for individuals who choose to drive drunk with minor children in the vehicle.

No one should choose to ride with an intoxicated driver. However, minor children rarely have the opportunity to choose. For example, MADD gets calls almost daily from divorced parents, ordered to send their children for visitation with the non-custodial parent, knowing that that parent drives drunk with the child.

An enhancement of up to one year of additional incarceration and up to $1,000 additional fine for each minor child, we believe, will have a deterrent effect.

We trust that this federal legislation will serve as an incentive for the states to follow in enacting similar criminal statutes. We also believe this legislation will encourage states to specifically consider patterns of drinking and driving in determining the best interest of the child in civil suits affecting the parent-child relationship.

As always, MADD remains extremely grateful for your prompt attention to our legislative goals regarding drinking and driving.

Respectfully,

MICKY SADOFF,
National President.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague, Senator BIDEN, in introducing the Drunk Driving Child Protection Act of 1990. This important legislation amends Federal law to increase the penalties for those who drive under the influence of drugs or alcohol when a minor is present in the vehicle.

Under current law, drunk driving is punishable under two provisions in the Federal criminal code. First, under the Assimilative Crimes Act, crimes that are committed on Federal lands that are not specifically punishable under the Federal criminal code, as is the case with drunk driving, are punishable under the State law in which the Federal land is located. In other words, when a Federal judge sentences a person for drunk driving on Federal land, he or she applies the State penalties. The second provision, which was enacted in 1986 and which I introduced, makes it a Federal offense to operate a common carrier, such as a bus or train, while under the influence of alcohol or drugs. Violators may be punished by up to 15 years imprisonment. This bill amends both of these provisions by increasing the terms of imprisonment by 1 additional year, as well as increasing the fines, when a minor is a passenger.

Mr. President, it is clear that no individual should get into a vehicle with an intoxicated person behind the wheel. Fortunately, as adults, we can refuse a ride with a friend or relative who has been drinking. Instead, we can offer to drive the person ourselves or offer that individual a place to stay for the night. Yet, our Nation's children are not always in a position to choose for themselves. They are truly the innocent victims of drunk drivers.

Any person who would get behind the wheel of a car or common carrier while under the influence of drugs or alcohol should certainly be subjected to tough penalties. However, any person who would risk the life of a child passenger should face even tougher penalties.

In closing, this legislation is strongly supported by Mothers Against Drunk Driving. It will send a signal to those who would drink and drive with children in their vehicle that such conduct will not be tolerated. These enhanced penalties will deter individuals from recklessly putting the lives of their innocent passengers at risk. This legislation is needed to further limit the risk of harm to our Nation's children.

For these reasons, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

By Mr. THURMOND (by request):

S. 2546. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, Chapter 41, to revise the definition of "eligible veterans", and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING AMENDMENTS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today to introduce at the request of the Department of Labor the Veterans' Employment and Training Amendment of 1990. This amendment, which is very simple, would permit active duty military personnel who are within 90 days of separation from service, to receive a variety of veterans' employment and training services. I have a longstanding interest in veterans' employment issues, and I am pleased to introduce this legislation.

Specifically, the proposal would expand the existing definition of "eligible veteran" in chapter 41 of title 38, to include military service personnel who are eligible for discharge or release from the service under conditions other than dishonorable within 90 days. As earlier mentioned, it would permit the Department to provide employment and training services under the Disabled Veterans' Outreach and the Local Veterans' Employment Representative Programs to military service personnel before they leave active duty. This legislation should help servicemen and women in making informed choices about future civilian employment, and should also reduce the reliance upon unemployment compensation for ex-servicemembers.

Mr. President, I ask that the copy of the bill and transmittal letter from Secretary Elizabeth Dole be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2546

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Employment and Training Amendment of 1990."

SEC. 2. Paragraph 4 of section 2001 of title 38 United States Code is amended by deleting the word "or" before subparagraph "(B)", deleting the period after the word "disability" and adding in lieu thereof a comma, and adding the following language at the end thereof: "or (C) served on active duty for a period of more than 180 days and is eligible for discharge or release from active duty under conditions other than dishonorable within 90 days."

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
SECRETARY OF LABOR,
Washington, DC, April 23, 1990.

Hon. DAN QUAYLE,
President, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am pleased to enclose for the consideration of Congress a draft bill entitled the "Veterans' Employment and Training Amendment of 1990."

The draft bill would expand the definition of "eligible veteran" in Section 2001 of Title 38 U.S.C. for the purpose of providing services to military service personnel who have substantially completed their period of active service and have decided to leave the military for civilian careers. Under the proposal, such personnel who are within 90 days of separation could be provided a variety of veterans' employment and training services. We expect that the provisions of such services in the period prior to separation would enhance the transition of valued military service members into the civilian economy and reduce the reliance on Unemployment Compensation for Ex-Servicemembers (UCX).

We would point out that Congress recently enacted the "Veterans Benefits Amendments of 1989" (Public Law 101-237) which includes a provision for the Secretary of Labor to establish a three year pilot program, in at least five but not more than ten states, to furnish employment and training information and services to military personnel who are within 180 days of their separation. We believe that it is important to provide employment services to all separating military service personnel and not be restricted to just a few states. In so doing, we can coordinate our proposal with the existing demonstration authority and services currently provided to veterans. This can be accomplished within existing budgetary resources.

We urge that this bill receive prompt and favorable consideration.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to transmittal of the draft bill to Congress from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

ELIZABETH DOLE.

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

This draft bill would amend the definition of "eligible veteran" found in section 2001(4) of title 38 U.S.C., which applies to programs under chapter 41 of this title, Job Counseling, Training and Placement Services for Veterans.

The proposal would expand the existing definition of "eligible veteran" to include military service personnel who are eligible for discharge or release from the service under conditions other than dishonorable within 90 days.

The existing definition of "eligible veteran" in Section 2001(4) of Chapter 41 incorporates by reference the definitional language found in section 2011(4), of Chapter 42—Employment and Training of Disabled and Vietnam Era Veterans. Section 2011(4) provides;

"The term "eligible veteran" means a person who (A) served on active duty for a period of more than 180 days and was discharged or released therefrom with other than a dishonorable discharge or (B) was discharged or released from active duty because of a service-connected disability."

This proposal would permit the Department to provide employment and training services under the Disabled Veterans' Outreach program (DVOP) and the Local Veterans' Employment Representative (LVER) program to military service personnel before they leave active duty and allow them to make informed choices concerning military retention and future civilian employment. The bill would also reduce the reliance on Unemployment Compensation for Ex-Servicemembers.

By Mr. ROTH (by request):

S. 2547. A bill to reform the Federal pay system, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL PAY REFORM ACT

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise to introduce by request the Federal Pay Reform Act of 1990 as transmitted by the Office of Personnel Management today. This legislation represents a year-long effort by the Bush administration to improve the ability of the Federal Government to recruit and retain the best and the brightest for Federal service. As the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, I believe that as the committee proceeds to consider Federal pay reform it is critical that this proposal receive a thorough and fair review.

The diversity of jobs and skills of the Federal Government's 2 million strong work force is as varied as the 50 States from which they come. In my home State of Delaware more than 5,000 Federal employees work diligently to provide such services as care in veterans hospitals to the issuing and delivery of Social Security checks, and insuring the safety of our highway, rail, and air transportation systems.

Across our country, Federal employee are dedicating their careers to public service, whether it be a customs officials protecting our borders, a medical scientist searching for cures for cancer and AIDS, or a social worker providing moral and inspirational support to help retrain a displaced worker for a new career. It is critical that we do our utmost to attract and retain the best employee possible.

Unfortunately we are failing in our efforts—the Federal Government is experiencing a quiet crisis. At a time when communication and technological advances in the workplace provide fertile ground for sweeping improvements in employee productivity, we must do more to attract and retain highly educated and well-trained employees. The Federal Government is simply not doing enough to meet this challenge, which will only become greater and greater. The reforms incorporated in this legislation seek to move us closer to meeting these challenges.

In its 1989 report, "Leadership in America—Rebuilding the Public Service," the National Commission on the Public Service, chaired by Paul Volcker, pointed to some startling statistics:

Only 13 percent of Federal Government senior executives interviewed would recommend that young people start their careers in government, while several recent surveys show that less than half the senior career civil servants would not recommend a job in government to their own children;

Of the 610 engineering students who received degrees at MIT and Standford in 1986, and the 600 who graduated from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in 1987, only 29 took jobs in government at any level; and

More than 50 percent of the respondents to a recent survey of Federal personnel officers said recruitment of quality personnel had become more difficult over the past 5 years.

The General Accounting Office recently testified before the Committee on Governmental Affairs that of 64 college students in various discussion groups, only 2 indicated a willingness to accept a starting salary at the Federal entry-level rate. While the pay gap between the private and Federal sector is a significant factor contributing to the failure of the Federal Government to recruit and retain the best possible employees, it is not the only factor.

We must do more to promote the ideal of public service and all Americans must recognize the value these public servants are providing. And we must do more to ensure that civil servants know what their responsibilities are and know how they are performing. We must provide Federal employees with the assurance that they will be rewarded appropriately for their service. If employees are not recognized for their service, or told how they can perform their jobs better, we will continue down the slippery slope of a Federal Government that can't do. And this is unacceptable at a time when the Federal Government has the capability to be more responsive to the needs of the American people.

This legislation seeks to remedy this slide. It is designed to achieve five objectives:

First. Restructuring the pay system to reflect diverse labor markets. The general schedule and it associated performance management and recognition system will be replaced by two basic white-collar pay systems: a Federal national pay system for professional recruited on a nationwide basis and a Federal locality pay system for employees recruited on a local basis.

Second. Increasing flexibility in the pay system to adapt to special situations and needs. The bill provides for a range of new authority including new recruitment, retention, and relocation bonuses and allowances; expanded authority to hire above minimum entrance rates; and travel expenses for job candidates and new appointees.

Third. Strengthening the link between the performance of an employee and his or her pay. The legislation provides that under both the national and locality pay systems, employees whose performance falls below the fully successful level will not be entitled to receive the annual pay adjustment. Under the locality pay system, employees will progress to the midpoint of the pay range based on service within that grade level, however progression beyond that point will be based on performance. Both systems will have performance cash awards of two to twenty percent of basic pay for high performance employees. A greater reliance on a pay-for-performance system will mirror movement in the private sector toward this type of system. It is my understanding that these changes are taking place in the public sector as well—several cities including Scottsdale, AZ and Sunnyvale, CA have implemented pay-for-performance programs.

The pay-for-performance system will not be implemented until 1994 for the locality pay system and 1995 for the national pay system. This will provide the administration several years to train Federal managers to conduct proper performance appraisal reviews and provide an opportunity to develop a fair and equitable performance rating system.

Fourth. Instituting a credible, effective, and enduring pay adjustment process. The President's pay agent will recommend pay adjustments based on data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics and consultations with a new national employees pay council by November 1 of each year in time for the President's annual budget submission.

Fifth. Providing immediate relief for critical pay problems. This includes geographic differentials in three high labor cost areas—New York, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, and nationwide five-percent salary increases for some college entry level occupations.

Mr. President, I would like to briefly outline with more specificity some of the more immediate changes within the administration's proposal which will help to remedy some of the Federal Government's most critical recruitment and retention problems. The legislation will provide:

Greater authority to hire above the minimum rate within a grade level. This will provide agencies more flexibility in hiring college graduates and other entry level employees at a higher wage if the applicant has special skills.

Relocation bonuses with service agreements. Agencies would be given the flexibility to establish relocation bonuses, up to 25 percent of basic pay, which would be available to employees who must relocate to fill a position in which the agency is having difficulty filling. An employee receiving such a bonus would have to agree to work for the Federal Government for a certain period of time.

Staffing differentials of up to 60 percent of basic pay in areas where OPM determines there are local labor market anomalies for identified occupations, grades, and locations. This would replace OPM's current authority to provide special pay rates to meet recruitment and retention needs.

Advance pay for new hires. This would provide agencies with flexibility to provide new hires with two pay periods of advance pay prior to beginning of work. This helps new hires with moving expenses and costs of settling in a new city.

Travel and transportation expenses for employment interviews and new hires. This matches private sector policy with regard to recruitment of new employees.

Exemption of up to 400 positions governmentwide from the pay ceiling to help recruit in the hardest areas. This is primarily for scientists and engineers. For instance, Secretary Watkins at the Department of Energy is still having a very difficult time recruiting nuclear scientists to help with the cleanup of DOE's nuclear facilities.

Authority to establish geographic differentials, of up to 25 percent of basic pay, for employees in areas where the government is experiencing recruitment and retention difficulties. This authority would be provided to the President's pay agent.

Mr. President, if we fail to address comprehensive pay reform, we run the risk of an increasingly fragmented civil service, with different departments and agencies of government being paid on different scales and competing with each other for employees. This was how the system operated prior to 1949, when the current general schedule and classification system was enacted. That same year, a task force of the original Hoover Commission reported that under the various pay and classification systems at the time, > inequality and inconsistency result from the absence of uniform pay policies for all employees and the organization for the control of pay administration in the Federal Service is incomplete and cumbersome.

Mr. President, I fear a return to these problems if we fail to act. Increasingly, the Governmental Affairs Committee is approached by various groups and agencies which want a separate pay scale and authority to develop their own system. While this legislation does provide increased flexibility for individual agencies to use special recruitment tools and retention bonuses, these flexibilities are being offered in the context of a governmentwide approach instead of on an ad hoc, agency by agency, basis.

Having said this, there is another aspect to the reform effort which must be mentioned. We cannot ignore the budget implications of our actions, yet we must not be too immoderate to simply shift the pay rates without providing greater incentives to recruit and retain employees. Perhaps, we should look to the National Commission on Public Service for direction, which recommended:

> In determining the appropriate (pay) increase, the Commission concludes that the current goal of national comparability between public and private pay is simplistic and unworkable, and is neither fair to the civil service nor to the public it serves. The Commission recommends a new civil service pay-setting process that recognizes the objectives fact that pay differs by occupation and by localities characterized by widely different living costs and labor market pressures.

In the context of Federal pay reform, I would like to bring to my colleague's attention legislation I introduced early in the 101st Congress, S. 68, which would provide an early retirement window for Federal employees. This is not part of the legislation I am introducting today, but I strongly believe the two ideas can go together. I envision the early retirement legislation as a transition for the Federal work force, a transition to a leaner, but better paid work force. As we move through the 1990's, the Federal Government must begin to take advantage of the technological advances in the workplace, to help improve worker productivity. Work stations, advanced communications, faxes, can all help improve productivity in the workplace. And the early retirement bill could provide the transition to this more productive, better paid work force.

At the same time, we will have shifts within the Federal Government. Some Departments will be increasing their work force, while others, like Defense, will be slimming down. Budget savings from the early retirement bill could be partially used to help fund some of the increases in spending for higher salaries under any of the pay reform proposals.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to commend the Bush administration for putting its efforts into addressing this quiet crisis—a crisis which will continue until remedies are enacted to meet the challenges ahead. This is a complex task, but like the reform of the Federal Employee Retirement System several years ago, it is a task this Congress must consider if we are going to remain competitive with the private sector in attracting and retaining valued employees.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of purpose and justification, key features of the Federal Pay Reform Act of 1990, a sectional analysis, and the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2547

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Pay Reform Act of 1990".

(O) in paragraph (14) by striking out "Grade GS-14 includes" and inserting in lieu thereof "Grade LS-14 and grade NS-19 include";

(P) in paragraph (15) by striking out "Grade GS-15 includes" and inserting in lieu thereof "Grade LS-15 and grade NS-20 include";

(Q) by striking out paragraphs (16), (17), and (18);

(4) in section 5105(a) by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The standards shall specify the pay system under which the Office has determined each class of positions shall be placed under section 5106(d).";

(5) in section 5106 by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) The Office of Personnel Management shall determine in its sole discretion whether each class of positions shall be placed under the Federal National Pay System or the Federal Locality Pay System in order to best meet the personnel management needs of the Government. Classes of positions under the Federal National Pay System shall typically be those classes for which the Government recruits nationally, whose incumbents are usually college graduates, and which are generally professional or administrative in nature. Classes of positions under the Federal Locality Pay System shall typically be those for which the Government recruits locally, whose incumbents are not usually expected to be college graduates, and which are generally clerical or technical in nature.";

(6) section 5108 is amended to read as follows:

"§ 5108. Classification of positions above NS-20

"(a) Subject to subsections (b) and (c), a position the duties of which exceed in difficulty and responsibility the level described for NS-20 shall be paid under section 5310.

"(b) In the case of an Executive agency, the Office of Personnel Management may require the agency to obtain the approval of the Office for the classification of a position above NS-20, or may impose numerical limitations on the number of positions which each agency may classify above NS-20.

"(c) The President, rather than the Office of Personnel Management, shall exercise the authority under subsection (b) in the case of positions proposed to be placed in the Federal Bureau of Investigation and Drug Enforcement Administration Senior Executive Service.";

(7) in section 5109(a) by striking out "GS-14" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-19";

(8) by repealing section 5109(b);

(9) in section 5115 by striking out "and 5114"; and

(10) in the analysis for chapter 51 by amending the item relating to section 5108 to read as follows:

"5108. Classification of positions above NS-20.".

AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER 53 OF TITLE 5, UNITED STATES CODE

SEC. 3. (a) Subchapter I of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"SUBCHAPTER I—FEDERAL NATIONAL PAY SYSTEM

"§ 5301. Establishment; definitions

"(a) The Federal National Pay System, the symbol for which is "NS", is the pay system under which positions designated as "NS" under chapter 51 are paid. It is the policy of the Government that pay for the NS Pay System be based on the principles that—

(1) NS pay rates be competitive (within the comparability range as defined in subsection (c)(3)) with the pay of employees in the non-Federal sector for the same levels of work;

(2) pay for individual employees be tied to performance;

"(3) there be equal pay for substantially equal work under the NS Pay System; and

"(4) pay distinctions be maintained in keeping with work distinctions.

notwithstanding the principle set forth in paragraph (1), the President, having considered the likely effect on the ability of agencies to recruit and retain well-qualified employees, may establish minimum and maximum NS pay rates below the level described in paragraph (1) when he determines that such action is necessary because of national emergency or serious economic conditions affecting the general welfare.

"(b) The NS Pay System shall consist of—

"(1) 11 grades, designated NS-10 through NS-20, each of which shall have a range of rates of basic pay under which the maximum rate of basic pay shall exceed the minimum rate of basic pay by no more than 40 percent of the minimum rate of basic pay; and

"(2) a range of rates of basic pay described in section 5310 for positions above NS-20.

No rate of basic pay under this subchapter may exceed the rate paid for level V of the Executive Schedule under subchapter II.

"(c) For the purposes of this subchapter—

"(1) 'agency', 'employee', 'position', 'class', and 'grade' have the meanings given them by section 5102;

"(2) 'NS Pay System' means the Federal National Pay System;

"(3) 'comparability range' means the range encompassing amounts 10 percent above and below the trend line describing the central tendency of appropriately weighted non-Federal pay data reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics survey;

"(4) 'trend line' means a line developed by statistical techniques determined appropriate by the President's Pay Agent (as designated under section 5302(b)(1);

"(5) 'consult' means to seek and give consideration to the views of one or more labor organizations through a procedure, which shall be in lieu of any procedure or requirement under chapter 71, under which an agency shall—

"(A) inform a labor organization of any proposed substantive change;

"(B) afford the labor organization a reasonable opportunity for the presentation of views and recommendations;

"(C) consider such views and recommendations before taking final action; and

"(D) provide to the labor organization a written statement of the agency's reasons for taking such final action; and

"(6) 'Office' means the Office of Personnel Management.

"§ 5302. Adjustment of NS Pay System

"(a) The President, in accordance with the provisions of this section but otherwise in his sole discretion, shall adjust the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay of grades NS-10 through NS-20 of the NS Pay System each year, effective on the first day of the first applicable pay period beginning on or after January 1. The President shall fix such rates so that the midpoints of the ranges of rates of basic pay will generally be within the comparability range unless he determines in his sole discretion, under subsection (b)(3), that such levels are inappropriate, in which case he shall make such adjustment as he considers appropriate.

"(b) The President shall—

"(1) designate such official or officials of the executive branch as he considers appropriate as the 'President's Pay Agent';

"(2) direct the Pay Agent to prepare and submit to him, by November 1 of each year, a report recommending minimum and maximum rates of basic pay to take effect 14 months later for each grade of the NS Pay System that will result in the midpoints of the ranges of rates of basic pay generally being within the comparability range. The report shall include an explanation of the reasons for the particular rates recommended, and shall include the views submitted by the National Employees Pay Council under subsection (d);

"(3) include in the President's budget for the fiscal year during which the pay adjustment will take effect the President's decision as to the minimum and maximum pay rates the President will put into effect for the NS Pay System. If, in any year, the President decides in his sole discretion that national emergency or serious economic conditions affecting the general welfare require that the pay adjustment be less than would be needed for the midpoints of the ranges of rates of basic pay to be generally within the comparability range, the President shall report to Congress his reasons therefor and his assessment of the impact of such decision on the Government's ability to recruit and retain well-qualified employees; and

"(4) put into effect, effective as required by subsection (a), the pay adjustment for the fiscal year in question, and report to Congress thereon.

"(c) The President's Pay Agent, as designated under subsection (b)(1), shall—

"(1) direct the Bureau of Labor Statistics to prepare such surveys as the President's Pay Agent, in its sole discretion, determines appropriate, of non-Federal rates of pay for work that may be compared with work performed by employees covered under the NS Pay System;

"(2) on the basis of such survey, determine, in the President's Pay Agent's sole discretion, what minimum and maximum pay rates for the NS Pay System would be necessary for the midpoints of the ranges of rates of basic pay generally to be within the comparability range and further determine in the President's Pay Agent's sole discretion, what rates within such comparability range would be appropriate in order to allow agencies to recruit and retain well-qualified employees, taking into consideration such factors as—

"(A) turnover and vacancy rates and patterns of career progression for employees under the NS Pay System;

"(B) unemployment rates and trends for non-Federal workers;

"(C) indicators of trends in the quality of employees under the NS Pay System; and

"(D) the need to provide Government services economically.

"(3) give thorough consideration to the views of the National Employees Pay Council established under subsection (d) in carrying out the responsibilities under paragraphs (1) and (2);

"(4) convene one or more public hearings under such procedures as the President's Pay Agent may, in its sole discretion, determine to be appropriate to obtain the views of interested parties on the Pay Agent's responsibilities under paragraphs (1) and (2), and give appropriate consideration to such views; and

"(5) submit to the President the report required by subsection (b)(2).

"(d) The President's Pay Agent, as designated under subsection (b)(1), shall establish a National Employees Pay Council. Each labor organization which has been granted consultation rights by the Office under section 7117(d)(1) shall, at the request of the Pay Agent, designate a representative to serve on the Council. The Pay Agent shall provide for meetings with the Council to discuss the matters within the Pay Agent's purview under this subchapter, and shall include any views submitted by the Council, or by individual members thereof, on the Pay Agent's responsibilities under subsections (c)(1) and (c)(2) in the report to the President under subsection (b)(2).

"§ 5303. Setting individual rates of basic pay

"(a) New appointments shall be made at the minimum rate of the appropriate grade. However, under regulations prescribed by the Office which provide for such considerations as the existing pay or unusually high or unique qualifications of the candidate, or a special need of the Government for the services of the candidate, the head of an agency may appoint, with the approval of the Office in the case of an appointment in an Executive agency, an individual at a rate of basic pay above the minimum rate of the appropriate grade.

"(b) The rate of basic pay to which an employee is entitled is governed by regulations prescribed by the Office in conformity with this subchapter and chapter 51 when—

"(1) the employee is transferred from a position in the legislative, judicial, or executive branch to which this subchapter does not apply;

"(2) the employee is transferred from a position in the legislative, judicial, or executive branch to which this subchapter applies to another such position;

"(3) the employee is demoted to a position in a lower grade;

"(4) the employee is reinstated, reappointed, or reemployed in a position to which this subchapter applies following service in any position in the legislative, judicial, or executive branch;

"(5) the employee's type of appointment is changed;

"(6) the employee's employment status is otherwise changed; or

"(7) the employee's position is changed from one grade to another grade.

For the purposes of this subsection, an individual employed by the Appalachian Regional Commission under section 106(2) of title 40, Appendix, who was a Federal employee immediately prior to such employment by the Commission and within 6 months after separation from such employment is employed in a position to which this subchapter applies, shall be treated as if transferred from a position in the executive branch to which this subchapter does not apply.

"(c) Unless a higher rate of basic pay is paid under subsection (b), an employee who is promoted or transferred from a position under this subchapter to a position in a higher grade under this subchapter is entitled to basic pay at the lowest rate of the higher grade which exceeds the employee's existing rate of basic pay by an amount prescribed by regulation of the Office, but not less than 6 percent. If, in the case of an employee so promoted or transferred who is receiving basic pay at a rate in excess of the maximum rate of the employee's grade, there is no rate in the higher grade which exceeds the employee's existing rate of basic pay by such prescribed amount, the employee is entitled to—

"(1) the maximum rate of the higher grade; or

"(2) the employee's existing rate of basic pay, if that rate is higher.

If an employee so promoted or transferred is receiving basic pay at a rate saved to the employee under subchapter VI on reduction in grade, the employee is entitled to—

"(A) basic pay at a rate that exceeds the rate which the employee would be receiving if subchapter VI were not applicable by the amount prescribed under the first sentence of this subsection; or

"(B) the employee's existing rate of basic pay, if that rate is higher.

However, in the case of an employee who is repromoted or transferred to a grade in which the employee formerly served, unless a higher rate of basic pay is paid under subsection (b), the employee is entitled only to basic pay at the lesser of—

"(i) the rate determined under the preceding three sentences, as applicable; or

"(ii) the rate in the grade the employee would have attained had the employee remained continuously in that grade.

"(d) An employee in the legislative branch who is paid by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and who has completed two or more years of service as such as an employee, and a Member of the Senate or House of Representatives who has completed two or more years of service as such a Member, may, on appointment to a position to which this subchapter applies, have the employee's initial rate of pay fixed—

"(1) at the minimum rate of the appropriate grade; or

"(2) at a rate of the appropriate grade that does not exceed the highest previous rate of pay received by the employee during that service in the legislative branch.

"(e) The rate of pay established for a teaching position as defined by section 901 of title 20 held by an individual who becomes subject to subsection (b) of this section is deemed increased by 20 percent to determine the yearly rate of pay of the position.

"(f) An employee of a county committee established pursuant to section 590h(b) of title 16 may, upon appointment to a position subject to this subchapter, have the employee's initial rate of basic pay fixed at the minimum rate of the appropriate grade, or at any higher rate of such grade that does not exceed the highest previous rate of basic pay received by the employee during service with such county committee.

"§ 5304. Merit increases

"(a) Effective on the same day that any increase in the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay of the grades of the NS Pay System takes effect under section 5302, the rate of basic pay of an employee whose most recent performance rating was at the fully successful level or a higher level shall be increased by the same dollar amount that the minimum rate of basic pay of an employee whose most recent performance rating was below the fully successful level may not be increased.

"(b)(1) Effective on the same day that any adjustment in the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay of the grades of the NS Pay System takes effect under section 5302, the rate of basic pay of an employee whose most recent performance rating was at the fully successful level or a higher level may be increased, in addition to the increase under subsection (a), by an amount determined under this subsection, but in no case may the rate of basic pay be increased above the maximum rate of basic pay of the employee's grade.

"(2) The amount of any additional pay increase under this subsection shall be determined by the head of the agency, subject in the case of an Executive agency to such regulations and criteria as the Office may prescribe. The aggregate amount of additional pay increases paid by an agency under this subsection shall, in the case of an Executive agency, be within minimum and maximum limitations prescribed by the President's Pay Agent, as designated under section 5302(b)(1), in its sole discretion.

"(3) If a labor organization representing employees of an agency under the NS Pay System has been accorded exclusive recognition under section 7111 or has been granted national consultation rights under section 7113, the agency shall consult with that labor organization on any criteria the agency will use at the level of recognition for determinig eligibility for and the amount of additional pay increases under this subsection.

"(4) An employee may request reconsideration of a decision not to provide an additional pay increase to the employee under this subsection, or of the amount of such an increase. Such reconsideration may be made only by an employee who is in a higher position in the agency than each employee who made, reviewed, or approved the decision. The failure to receive an additional pay increase under this subsection, or the amount of such an increase, may not be appealed.

"(c)(1) Under regulations which the Office shall prescribe, the benefit of increases in rates of basic pay under this section shall be preserved for an employee whose continuous service is interrupted in the public interest by service in the Armed Forces, or by service in essential non-Government civilian employment during a period of war or national emergency.

"(2) Under regulations which the Office shall prescribe, the benefit of increases in rates of basic pay under this section shall be preserved for an employee whose position the Office has determined should not be covered under subsections (a) and (b) because of the adjudicatory responsibilities of the position or for other reasons of good administration.

"(d) The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section in Executive agencies.

"§ 5305. Geographic differentials

"(a) The President's Pay Agent, as designated under section 5302(b)(1), may from time to time, in its sole discretion, authorize payment of a differential for employees under the NS Pay System in any geographic area or locality where the Pay Agent determines the Government would, in the absence of such a differential, encounter serious difficulty in recruiting or retaining employees. The Pay Agent may adjust the amount of or terminate such a differential at any time.

"(b) In determining whether a geographic differential is needed in an area or locality, and what the amount of such differential should be, the Pay Agent shall consider the pay rates being paid by non-Federal employers in the area or locality, as shown by surveys the Pay Agent may request the Bureau of Labor Statistics to conduct, as well as other factors the Pay Agent considers appropriate, such as the factors described in section 5302(c)(2). The Pay Agent shall give thorough consideration to the views of the National Employees Pay Council, as established under section 5302(d), in carrying out the Pay Agent's responsibilities under this section.

"(c)(1) A geographic differential, which shall be stated as a percentage of the rate of basic pay of the employee to whom it is payable, may not exceed 25 percent of the employee's rate of basic pay. A geographic differential shall be payable to each employee in the area or locality for which the differential is established.

"(2) A geographic differential may not be considered to be part of the basic pay of an employee, and the reduction or elimination of a geographic differential may not be appealed.

"(3) A geographic differential shall be paid in the same manner and at the same time as the employee's basic pay is paid.

"(4) The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary governing the payment to employees of geographic differentials established by the President's Pay Agent.

"§ 5306. Staffing differentials

"(a) The President may from time to time, in his sole discretion, authorize payment of a differential for employees under the NS Pay System in one or more classes in one or more areas or locations when he determines that the Government would, in the absence of such a differential, encounter difficulty in recruiting or retaining employees. The President may, in his sole discretion, adjust the amount of or terminate such a differential at any time.

"(b) In determining whether a staffing differential is needed, and what the amount of such differential should be, the President shall consider the pay rates being paid by non-Federal employers, as well as other factors he considers appropriate, such as the factors described in section 5302(c)(2).

"(c)(1) A staffing differential, which shall be stated as a percentage of the rate of basic pay of the employee to whom it is payable, may not exceed 60 percent of the employee's rate of basic pay.

"(2) A staffing differential may not be considered to be part of the basic pay of an employee, and the reduction or elimination of a staffing differential may not be appealed.

"(3) A staffing differential shall be paid in the same manner and at the same time as the employee's basic pay is paid.

"(d) The President shall prescribe such regulations as he considers necessary for the administration of this section. The President may authorize the exercise of the authority conferred on him by this section by the Office of Personnel Management.

"§ 5307. Supervisory differentials

"(a)(1) The Office may from time to time authorize payment of a differential for an employee under the NS Pay System who has supervisory responsibility for one or more employees not under the NS Pay System, if—

"(A) the midpoint of the range of rates of basic pay for the subordinate employees is higher than the midpoint of the range of rates of basic pay for the supervisory employee; and

"(B) one or more of such subordinate employees would, in the absence of such a differential, be paid more than the supervising employee.

"(2) For the purposes of comparing the pay of a supervising employee under the NS Pay System with the pay of subordinate employees not under the NS Pay System, additional pay, differentials, and allowances that are not a part of basic pay may be taken into consideration.

"(b)(1) A supervisory differential, which shall be stated as a percentage of the supervising employee's rate of basic pay or as a dollar amount, may not cause the supervising employee's pay to exceed the pay of the highest paid subordinate employee by more than 3 percent.

"(2) A supervisory differential may not be considered to be part of the basic pay of an employee, and the reduction or elimination of a supervisory differential may not be appealed.

"(3) A supervisory differential shall be paid in the same manner and at the same time as the employee's basic pay is paid.

"(c) The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.

§ 5308. Recruitment and relocation bonuses

"(a) The Office may authorize the head of an agency to pay a bonus to an employee who is newly appointed to a position under the NS Pay System, or to an employee under the NS Pay System or under any other pay authority in the executive, legislative, or judicial branch who must relocate to accept a position under the NS Pay System, if the Office determines that the agency would be likely, in the absence of such a bonus, to encounter difficulty in filling the position.

"(b)(1) The amount of a bonus under this section shall be determined by regulations of the Office, but may not exceed 25 percent of the annual rate of basic pay of the position to which the employee is being appointed or relocated.

"(2) Payment of a bonus under this section shall be contingent upon the employee entering into an agreement with the agency to complete a period of employment with the agency, with the required period determined pursuant to regulations of the Office. If the employee voluntarily fails to complete such period of service or is separated from the service before completion of such period of service for cause on chages of misconduct or delinquency, the employee shall repay the bonus on a pro rata basis.

"(3) A bonus under this section shall be paid as a lump sum, and may not be considered to be part of the basic pay of an employee.

"(4) Under regulations of the Office, a recruitment bonus may be paid to a newly-hired employee before the employee enters on duty.

"(c)(1) The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.

"(2) If a labor organization representing employees of an agency under the NS Pay System has been accorded exclusive recognition under section 7111 or has been granted national consultation rights under section 7113, the agency shall consult with that labor organization on any criteria the agency will use at the level of recognition for determining eligibility for and the amount of relocation bonuses under this section.

"§ 5309 Retention allowances

"(a) The Office may authorize the head of an agency to pay an allowance to an employee under the NS Pay System—

"(1) if the unusually high or unique qualifications of the employee or a special need of the agency for the employee's services makes it essential to retain the employee, and

"(2) if the agency determines that the employee would be likely to leave in the absence of a retention allowance.

"(b)(1) A retention allowance, which shall be stated as a percentage of the rate of basic pay of the employee, may not exceed 25 percent of such rate of basic pay.

"(2) A retention allowance may not be considered to be part of the basic pay of an employee, and the reduction or elimination of a retention allowance may not be appealed.

"(3) A retention allowance shall be paid in the same manner and at the same time as the employee's basic pay is paid.

"(c)(1) The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.

"(2) If a labor organization representing employees of an agency under the NS Pay System has been accorded exclusive recognition under section 7111 or has been granted national consultation rights under section 7113, the agency shall consult with that labor organization on any criteria the agency will use at the level of recognition in determining eligibility for and the amount of allowances under this section.

"§ 5310. Pay for senior NS positions

"(a)(1) This section applies to employees in positions that are classified above NS-20 under section 5108, but that are not—

"(A) Senior Executive Service positions under section 3132; or

"(B) positions in the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Drug Enforcement Administration Senior Executive Service under section 3151.

This section shall also apply to scientific and professional positions established under section 3104.

"(2) An employee paid under this section shall not be covered by sections 5302, 5303, and 5304, but shall be subject to the other provisions of this subchapter.

"(b) Subject to regulations and criteria prescribed by the Office of Personnel Management, the head of an agency may set the rate of basic pay of a position to which this section applies at not less than 120 percent of the minimum rate for NS-20 under section 5302 nor more than the rate for level V of the Executive Schedule.

"§ 5310a. Performance-based cash awards

"(a)(1) Effective on the same day that any increase in the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay of the NS Pay System takes effect under section 5302, an employee whose most recent performance rating was at the fully successful level or a higher level may be paid a cash award under this section.

"(2) A cash award under this section shall be of an amount determined appropriate by the head of the agency, but may not be more than 10 percent of the employee's rate of basic pay. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the head of the agency may authorize a cash award under this section of more than 10 percent of the employee's rate of basic pay if the head of the agency determines that exceptional performance by the employee justifies such an award, but in no case may an award under this section exceed 20 percent of the employee's rate of basic pay.

"(b) A cash award under this section may not be considered to be part of the basic pay of an employee, and the failure to pay a cash award, or the amount of such an award, may not be appealed.

"(c)(1) The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.

"(2) If a labor organization representing employees in an agency under the NS Pay System has been accorded exclusive recognition under section 7111 or has been granted national consultation rights under section 7113, the agency shall consult with that labor organization on any criteria the agency will use at the level of recognition for and the amount of cash awards under this section.

"§ 5310b. Aggregate limitation on pay

"The aggregate amount of basic pay, differentials, bonuses, allowance, and performance-based cash awards paid under this subchapter to any employee in any calendar year, including any allowance under section 5948, may not exceed the rate payable for level I of the Executive Schedule at the end of such calendar year. The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.".

(b) Subchapter II of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, is amended in section 5318—

(1) by striking out "section 5305 of this title in the rates of pay under the General Schedule" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 5302 in the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay of the Federal National Pay System"; and

(2) by striking out "rates of pay under the General Schedule" and inserting in lieu thereof "minimum and maximum rates of basic pay of the Federal National Pay System".

(c) Subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"SUBCHAPTER III—FEDERAL LOCALITY PAY SYSTEM

"§ 5331. Establishment; definitions

"(a) The Federal Locality Pay System, the symbol for which is "LS", is the pay system under which positions designated as "LS" under chapter 51 are paid. It is the policy of the Government that pay for the LS Pay System be based on the principles that—

"(1) LS pay rates be competitive (within the comparability range as defined in section 5301(c)(3)) with the pay of employees in the non-Federal sector for the same levels of work in the pay area;

"(2) pay for individual employees be tied to performance;

"(3) there be equal pay for substantially equal work in each pay area under the LS Pay System; and

"(4) pay distinctions within pay areas be maintained in keeping with work distinctions.

Notwithstanding the principle set forth in paragraph (1), the President, having considered the likely effect on the ability of agencies to recruit and retain well-qualified employees, may direct that the overall percentage adjustment in LS pay rates be held below the level described in paragraph (1) when he determines that such action is necessary because of national emergency or serious economic conditions affecting the general welfare.

"(b) The LS Pay System shall consist of 15 grades, each of which shall have a range of rates of basic pay in each pay area established under section 5332. For each grade in each pay area, the maximum rate of basic pay shall exceed the minimum rate of basic pay by no more than 40 percent of the minimum rate of basic pay. No rate of basic pay under this subchapter may exceed the rate paid for level V of the Executive Schedule under subchapter II.

"(c) For the purposes of this subchapter—

"(1) 'agency', 'employee', 'position', 'class', and 'grade' have the meanings given them by section 5102;

"(2) 'LS Pay System' means the Federal Locality Pay System;

"(3) 'comparability range', 'trend line', and 'consult' have the meanings given them by section 5301;

"(4) 'Office' means the Office of Personnel Management; and

"(5) 'President's Pay Agent' means the President's Pay Agent as designated under section 5302(b)(1).

"§ 5332. LS pay areas; adjustment of LS Pay System

"(a)(1) The Office, in accordance with the procedures in subsection (c), shall in its sole discretion establish a number of pay areas, which shall encompass all locations in which employees under the LS Pay System have their official duty stations. The boundaries of the pay areas shall be determined by the Office on the basis of such factors as local labor market patterns, commuting patterns, and practices of other employers.

"(2) The Office, in accordance with the procedures in subsection (c), shall request the Bureau of Labor Statistics to prepare each year such surveys as the Office in its sole discretion considers appropriate, of non-Federal rates of pay in each pay area for work that may be compared with work performed by employees covered under the LS Pay System.

"(b)(1) The Office, in accordance with the procedures in subsection (c), shall report to the President's Pay Agent by October 1 of each year the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay the Office, in its sole discretion, recommends take effect 15 months later for each grade of the LS Pay System in each pay area that will result in the midpoints of the ranges of rates of basic pay generally being within the comparability range. The Office shall further recommend, in its sole discretion, where within the comparability range the midpoints should be located for each pay area in order to allow agencies to recruit and retain well-qualified employees, taking into consideration such factors as—

"(A) turnover and vacancy rates and patterns of career progression for employees under the LS Pay System in the pay area;

"(B) unemployment rates and trends for non-Federal workers in the pay area;

"(C) indicators of trends in the quality of employees under the LS Pay System in the pay area; and

"(D) the need to provide Government services economically.

"(2) The Office shall include in its report the recommendations of the Federal Labor-Management Pay Committee under subsection (c).

"(c)(1) In carrying out its responsibilities under subsections (a) and (b), the Office shall give thorough consideration to the views of the Federal Labor-Management Pay Committee. The Committee shall consist of—

"(A) the Chairman, who shall be the Chairman of the Federal Prevailing Rate Advisory Committee under section 5347(a)(1);

"(B) five members designated by the Office from among individuals nominated by the heads of agencies having employees under the LS Pay System; and

"(C) five members designated by the Office from among individuals nominated by labor organizations certified under chapter 71 as exclusive representatives of employees under the LS Pay System.

In designating the members nominated by labor organizations, the Office shall take into consideration the relative numbers of employees represented by such organizations, but no more than 2 members may be from any labor organization, nor more than 4 members from any council, federation, alliance, association, or affiliation of labor organizations.

"(2) The Committee shall advise the Office on the Office's responsibilities under subsections (a) and (b), and on any other matters relating the LS Pay System on which the Office may seek the Committee's advice.

"(3) Conclusions and recommendations of the Committee shall be formulated by majority vote. The Chairman of the Committee may vote only to break a tie vote of the Committee. The Committee shall make an annual report to the Office for transmittal to the President's Pay Agent under subsection (b). Any member of the Committee may include in the annual report recommendations and other matters the member considers appropriate.

"(4) The Committee shall meet at the call of the Chairman. However, a special meeting shall be called by the Chairman if 5 members make a written request to the Chairman to call a special meeting to consider matters within the purview of the Committee.

"(5) Members of the Committee described in paragraphs (1)(A) and (1)(B) shall serve without additional pay. Members described in paragraph (1)(C) may not be considered employees of the United States for any purpose by reason of their membership on the Committee, and are not entitled to pay from the Government of the United States for services rendered to the Committee.

"(6) The Committee, with the approval of the Office, may establish one or more subcommittees, on a regional basis or otherwise.

"(7) The Office shall provide such clerical and professional personnel, as appropriate and necessary to carry out the Committee's functions under this subchapter. Such personnel shall be responsible to the Chairman of the Committee.

"(d) The President's Pay Agent, after reviewing the report submitted by the Office under subsection (b), including the report submitted by the Federal Labor-Management Pay Committee under subsection (c), shall report to the President by November 1 of each year the overall average percentage by which the President's Pay Agent recommends, in its sole discretion, that basic pay under the LS Pay System be adjusted 14 months later so that the agencies will be able to recruit and retain well-qualified employees and so that the midpoints of the ranges of basic pay for all pay areas will generally be within the comparability range.

"(e)(1) The President shall, in his sole discretion, determine each year the overall average percentage by which basic pay under the LS Pay System shall be adjusted so that the midpoints of the ranges of rates of basic pay for all pay areas will generally be within the comparability range, unless he determines in his sole discretion, under the following sentence, that such overall average percentage is inappropriate, in which case he shall determine such overall average percentage as he considers appropriate. If in any year, the President determines, in his sole discretion, that national emergency or serious economic conditions affecting the general welfare require that the overall percentage adjustment for the LS Pay System be less than would be needed for the midpoints of the ranges of rates of basic pay for all pay areas to be generally within the comparability range, the President shall report to Congress his reasons therefor and his assessment of the impact of such decision on the Government's ability to recruit and retain well-qualified employees.

"(2) The President shall include the overall average percentage determined under paragraph (1) in the budget for the fiscal year during which the pay adjustment will take effect and shall communicate such overall average percentage to the Office for implementation under subsection (f).

"(f) The Office shall put into effect such adjustments of minimum and maximum rates of basic pay for each grade of the LS Pay System in each pay area, effective on the first day of the first applicable pay period beginning on or after January 1 of the fiscal year in question, that the Office, in its sole discretion, determines appropriate so that the overall average percentage adjustment for all pay areas will equal the percentage determined by the President under subsection (e). The Office shall report thereon to the President and Congress, and shall include in its report the report submitted by the Federal Labor-Management Pay Committee under subsection (c).

"(g) In pay areas where employees under the LS Pay System receive an allowance under section 5941, the amount of such allowance, and any tax advantage thereon, shall be taken into consideration in setting minimum and maximum rates of basic pay for the pay area.

"(h) The Office shall determine, by such means as it determines appropriate in its sole discretion, minimum and maximum rates of basic pay for each grade of the LS Pay System for areas outside the United States, as defined in section 5921(4).

"§ 5333. Setting individual rates of basic pay

"(a) New appointments shall be made at the minimum rate of the appropriate grade for the pay area. However, under regulations prescribed by the Office which provide for such considerations as the existing pay or unusually high or unique qualifications of the candidate, or a special need of the Government for the services of the candidate, the head of an agency may appoint, with the approval of the Office in the case of an appointment in an Executive agency, an individual at a rate of basic pay above the minimum rate of the appropriate grade in the pay area.

"(b) The rate of basic pay to which an employee is entitled is governed by regulations prescribed by the Office in conformity with this subchapter and chapter 51 when—

"(1) the employee transferred from a position in the legislative, judicial, or executive branch to which this subchapter does not apply;

"(2) the employee transferred from a position in the legislative, judicial, or executive branch to which this subchapter applies to another such position;

"(3) the employee is demoted to a position in a lower grade;

"(4) the employee is reinstated, reappointed, or reemployed in a position to which this subchapter applies following service in any position in the legislative, judicial, or executive branch;

"(5) the employee's type of appointment is changed;

"(6) the employee's employment status is otherwise changed; or

"(7) the employee's position is changed from one grade to another grade.

For the purposes of this subsection, an individual employed by the Appalachian Regional Commission under section 106(2) of title 40, Appendix, who was a Federal employee immediately prior to such employment by the Commission and within 6 months after separation from such employment is employed in a position to which this subchapter applies, shall be treated as if transferred from a position in the executive branch to which this subchapter does not apply.

"(c) Unless a higher rate of basic pay is paid under subsection (b), an employee who is promoted or transferred from a position under this subchapter to a position in a higher grade under this subchapter is entitled to basic pay at the lowest rate of the higher grade for the pay area which exceeds the employee's existing rate of basic pay by an amount prescribed by regulation of the Office, but not less than 6 percent. If, in the case of an employee so promoted or transferred who is receiving basic pay at a rate in excess of the maximum rate of the employee's grade, there is no rate in the higher grade in the pay area which exceeds the employee's existing rate of basic pay by such prescribed amount, the employee is entitled to—

"(1) the maximum rate of the higher grade in the pay area; or

"(2) the employee's existing rate of basic pay, if that rate is higher.

If an employee so promoted or transferred is receiving basic pay at a rate saved to the employee under subchapter VI on reduction in grade, the employee is entitled to—

"(A) basic pay at a rate of the employee's grade in the pay area that exceeds the rate which the employee would be receiving if subchapter VI were not applicable by the amount prescribed under the first sentence of this subsection; or

"(B) the employee's existing rate of basic pay, if that rate is higher.

However, in the case of an employee who is repromoted or transferred to a grade in which the employee formerly served, unless a higher rate of basic pay is paid under subsection (b), the employee is entitled only to basic pay at the lesser of—

"(i) the rate determined under the preceding three sentences as applicable; or

"(ii) the rate in the grade the employee would have attained had the employee remained continuously in that grade.

"(d) An employee in the legislative branch who is paid by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and who has completed two or more years of service as such an employee, and a Member of the Senate or House of Representatives who has completed two or more years of service as such a Member, may, on appointment to a position to which this subchapter applies, have the employee's initial rate of pay fixed—

"(1) at the minimum rate of the appropriate grade for the pay area; or

"(2) at a rate of the appropriate grade for the pay area that does not exceed the highest previous rate of pay received by the employee during that service in the legislative branch.

"(e) The rate of pay established for a teaching position as defined by section 901 of title 20 held by an individual who becomes subject to subsection (b) of this section is deemed increased by 20 percent to determine the yearly rate of pay of the position.

"(f) An employee of a county committee established pursuant to section 590h(b) of title 16 may, upon appointment to a position subject to this subchapter, have the employee's initial rate of basic pay fixed at the minimum rate of the appropriate grade for the pay area, or at any higher rate of such grade that does not exceed the highest previous rate of basic pay received by the employee during service with such county committee.

§ 5334. Merit increases

"(a) Effective on the same day that any increase in the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay of the grades of the LS Pay System for the pay area takes effect under section 5332, the rate of basic pay of an employee whose most recent performance rating was at the fully successful level or a higher level shall be increased by the same dollar amount that the minimum rate of basic pay of the employee's grade is increased. The rate of basic pay of an employee whose most recent performance rating was below the fully successful level may not be increased.

"(b) The rate of basic pay of an employee under the LS Pay System shall be increased by an amount prescribed by the Office in its sole discretion, but not less than 3 percent of the employee's rate of basic pay, upon the completion of—

"(1) each year of service in the employee's current grade, if the employee's rate of basic pay immediately before such increase is in the bottom one-third of the range of rates of basic pay for the grade in the pay area; and

"(2) each two years of service in the employee's current grade, if the employee's rate of basic pay immediately before such increase is above the bottom one-third of the range of basic pay for the grade in the pay area, but less than the dollar amount that is midway between the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay for the grade in the pay area, provided that the employee's most recent performance rating immediately prior to each such increase was at the fully successful level or a higher level. No increase in an employee's pay under this subsection may increase the employee's rate of basic pay above the dollar amount that is midway between the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay for the employee's grade in the pay area.

"(c)(1) In addition to any increase under subsection (a) or (b), the head of the agency may grant an increase in the employee's rate of basic pay in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

"(2) The amount of any additional pay increase under this subsection shall be determined by the head of the agency, subject in the case of an Executive agency to such regulations and criteria as the Office may prescribe. The aggregate amount of additional pay increases paid by an agency under this subsection shall, in the case of an Executive agency, be within minimum and maximum limitations prescribed by the President's Pay Agent, in its sole discretion.

"(3) An employee's rate of basic pay may not be increased under this subsection higher than the maximum rate of basic pay for the employee's grade in the pay area.

"(4) If a labor organization representing employees of an agency under the LS Pay System has been accorded exclusive recognition under section 7111 or has been granted national consultation rights under section 7113, the agency shall consult with that labor organization on any criteria the agency will use at the level of recognition in determining eligibility for and the amount of additional pay increases under this subsection.

"(5) An employee may request reconsideration of a decision not to provide an additional pay increase to the employee under this subsection, or of the amount of such an increase. Such reconsideration may be made only by an employee who is in a higher position in the agency than each employee who made, reviewed, or approved the decision. The failure to receive an additional pay increase under this subsection, or the amount of such an increase, may not be appealed.

"(d) Under regulations which the Office shall prescribe, the benefit of increases in rates of basic pay under this section shall be preserved for an employee whose continuous service is interrupted in the public interest by service in the Armed Forces, or by services in essential non-Government civilian employment during a period of war or national emergency.

"(e) The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.

§ 5335. Staffing differentials

"(a) The President may from time to time, in his sole discretion, authorize payment of a differential for employees under the LS Pay System in one or more classes in one or more locations or pay areas when he determines that the Government would, in the absence of such a differential, encounter difficulty in recruiting or retaining employees. The President may, in his sole discretion, adjust the amount of or terminate such a differential at any time.

"(b) In determining whether a staffing differential is needed, and what the amount of such differential should be, the President shall consider the pay rates being paid by non-Federal employers, as well as other factors he considers appropriate, such as the factors described in section 5302(c)(2).

"(c)(1) A staffing differential, which shall be stated as a percentage of the rate of basic pay of the employee to whom it is payable, may not exceed 60 percent of the employee's rate of basic pay.

"(2) A staffing differential may not be considered to be part of the basic pay of an employee, and the reduction or elimination of a staffing differential may not be appealed.

"(3) A staffing differential shall be paid in the same manner and at the same time as the employee's basic pay is paid.

"(d) The President shall prescribe such regulations as he considers necessary for the administration of this section. The President may authorize the exercise of the authority conferred on him by this section by the Office of Personnel Management.

§ 5336. Supervisory differentials

"(a)(1) The Office may from time to time authorize payment of a differential for an employee under the LS Pay System who has supervisory responsibility for one or more employees not under the LS Pay System if—

"(A) the midpoint of the range of rates of basic pay for the subordinate employees is higher than the midpoint of the range of rates of basic pay for the supervisory employee; and

"(B) one or more such subordinate employees would, in the absence of such a differential, be paid more than the supervisory employee.

"(2) For the purposes of comparing the pay of a supervising employee under the LS Pay System with the pay of subordinate employees not under the LS Pay System, additional pay, differentials, and allowances that are not a part of basic pay may be taken into consideration.

"(b)(1) A supervisory differential, which shall be stated as a percentage of the supervising employee's rate of basic pay or as a dollar amount, may not cause the supervising employee's pay to exceed the pay of the highest paid subordinate employee by more than 3 percent.

"(2) A supervisory differential may not be considered to be part of the basic pay of an employee, and the reduction or elimination of a supervisory differential may not be appealed.

"(3) A supervisory differential shall be paid in the same manner and at the same time as the employee's basic pay is paid.

"(c) The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.

§ 5337. Recruitment and relocation bonuses

"(a) The Office may authorize the head of an agency to pay a bonus to an employee who is newly appointed to a position under the LS Pay System, or to an employee under the LS Pay System or under any other pay authority in the executive, legislative, or judicial branch who must relocate to accept a position under the LS Pay System, if the Office determines that the agency would be likely, in the absence of such a bonus, to encounter difficulty in filling the position.

"(b)(1) The amount of a bonus under this section shall be determined by regulations of the Ofifce, but may not exceed 25 percent of the annual rate of basic pay of the position to which the employee is being appointed or relocated.

"(2) Payment of a bonus under this section shall be contingent upon the employee entering into an agreement with the agency to complete a period of employment with the agency, with the required period determined pursuant to regulations of the Office. If the employee voluntarily fails to complete such period of service or is separated from the service before completion of such period of service for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency, the employee shall repay the bonus on a pro rata basis.

"(3) A bonus under this section shall be paid as a lump sum, and may not be considered to be part of the basic pay of an employee

"(4) Under regulations of the Office, a recruitment bonus may be paid to a newly-hired employee before the employee enters on duty.

"(c)(1) The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.

"(2) If a labor organization representing employees of an agency under the LS Pay System has been accorded exclusive recognition under section 7111 or has been granted national consultation rights under section 7113, the agency shall consult with that labor organization on any criteria the agency will use at the level of recognition in determining eligibility for and the amount of relocation bonuses under this section.

"§ 5338. Retention allowances

"(a) The Office may authorize the head of an agency to pay an allowance to an employee under the LS Pay System—

"(1) if the unusually high or unique qualifications of the employee or a special need of the agency for the employee's services makes it essential to retain the employee, and

"(2) if the agency determines, in its sole discretion, that the employee would be likely to leave in the absence of a retention allowance.

"(b)(1) A retention allowance, which shall be stated as a percentage of the rate of basic pay of the employee, may not exceed 25 percent of such rate of basic pay.

"(2) A retention allowance may not be considered to be part of the basic pay of an employee, and the reduction or elimination of a retention allowance may not be appealed.

"(3) A retention allowance shall be paid in the same manner and at the same time as the employee's basic pay is paid.

"(c)(1) The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.

"(2) If a labor organization representing employees of an agency under the LS Pay System has been accorded exclusive recognition under section 7111 or has been granted national consultation rights under section 7113, the agency shall consult with that labor organization on any criteria the agency will use at the level of recognition in determining eligibility for and the amount of allowances under this section.

"§ 5339. Performance-based cash awards

"(a)(1) Effective on the same day that any increase in the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay of the LS Pay System takes effect under section 5332(b), an employee whose most recent performance rating was at the fully successful level or a higher level may be paid a cash award under this section.

"(2) A cash award under this section shall be of an amount determined appropriate by the head of the agency, but may not be more than 10 percent of the employee's rate of basic pay. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the head of the agency may authorize a cash award under this section of more than 10 percent of the employee's rate of basic pay if the head of the agency determines that exceptional performance by the employee justifies such an award, but in no case may an award under this section exceed 20 percent of the employee's rate of basic pay.

"(b) A cash award under this section may not be considered to be part of the basic pay of an employee, and the failure to pay a cash award, or the amount of such an award, may not be appealed.

"(c)(1) The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.

"(2) If a labor organization representing employees in an agency under the LS Pay System has been accorded exclusive recognition under section 7111 or has been granted national consultation rights under section 7113, the agency shall consult with that labor organization on any criteria the agency will use at the level of recognition for determining eligibility for and the amount of cash awards under this section.

"§ 5340. Aggregate limitation on pay

"The aggregate amount of basic pay, differentials, bonuses, allowance, and performance-based cash awards paid under this subchapter to any employee in any calendar year may not exceed the rate payable for level I of the Executive Schedule at the end of such calendar year. The Office shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.".

"(d) Subchapter IV of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

"(1) in section 5343(b)—

(A) by striking out "2 years" and inserting in lieu thereof "3 years"; and

(B) by striking out "between each 2" and inserting in lieu thereof "each year between";

(2) in section 5343(e)(1)—

(A) in paragraph (A) by striking out "96 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "92 percent";

(B) in paragraph (B) by striking out "100 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "96 percent";

(C) in paragraph (C) by striking out "104 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "100 percent";

(D) in paragraph (D) by striking out "108 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "104 percent"; and

(E) in paragraph (E) by striking out "112 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "108 percent";

(3) in section 5344(a) by striking out "45th day, excluding Saturdays or Sundays," and inserting in lieu thereof "150th day";

(4) by inserting a new section 5345, to read as follows:

"§ 5345. Wage limitations

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this subchapter, the President may direct the Office of Personnel Management to impose a limitation on the maximum adjustment that will be made in wage rates in any wage area during a calendar year, if the President determines in his sole discretion that such a limitation is required by considerations of equity with employees under the NS Pay System and the LS Pay System. In making such a determination, the President shall take into consideration any effect such limitation is likely to have on the ability of agencies to recruit and retain well-qualified employees.";

(5) in section 5347(a)(1) by inserting after "States" the following: "(other than as Chairman of Federal Locality Pay Advisory Committee)"; and

(6) in section 5347(g) by striking out "equal to the maximum rate currently paid, from time to time, under the General Schedule" and inserting in lieu thereof "of the Senior Executive Service".

(e) Subchapter VI of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in section 5361 by amending paragraph (5) to read as follows:

"(5) 'covered pay schedule' means the Federal National Pay System, the Federal Locality Pay System, or any prevailing rate schedule established under subchapter IV;";

(2) in section 5362(c)—

(A) by striking out "chapters 54 and" and inserting in lieu thereof "chapter";

(B) by inserting "or" after the comma at the end of paragraph (2);

(C) by striking out paragraph (3); and

(D) by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (3);

(3) in section 5363(a)—

(A) by inserting "or" after the semicolon at the end of paragraph (1);

(B) by striking out paragraph (2); and

(C) by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (2); and

(4) in section 5363(c)(2) by striking out "subchapter or chapter 51, 53, or 54 of this title" and inserting in lieu thereof "chapter or chapter 51".

(f) Subchapter VII of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by amending section 5371 to read as follows:

"§ 5371. Health care positions

"(a) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) 'employee' and 'position' have the meanings given them by section 5102; and

"(2) 'health care' means direct patient-care services or services incident to direct patientcare services.

"(b) The Office of Personnel Management may, in its sole discretion and notwithstanding any provisions of subchapter I or III or chapter 51 or 61, make applicable to an employee in a position involving health care responsibilities any provision of chapter 73 of title 38, concerning employees in the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs.";

(2) by amending section 5372 to read as follows:

"§ 5372. Pay for administrative law judges and board of contract appeals judges

"(a) For the purposes of this section, 'judge' means an administrative law judge appointed under section 3105 and a member of a board of contract appeals established under the Contact Disputes Act of 1978.

"(b)(1) The President shall, in his sole discretion, establish and from time to time adjust 3 or more rates of basic pay for judges, of which the minimum rate may not be less than the minimum rate for NS–20, as in effect from time to time, and the maximum rate may not be more than the rate for level IV of the Executive Schedule, as in effect from time to time.

"(2) The rates of basic pay that are established and adjusted under this subsection shall be printed in the Federal Register and shall supersede any prior rates of basic pay for judges.

"(c) The Office of Personnel Management shall determine, in its sole discretion, at which rate of basic pay each judge shall be paid. In making such determination, the Office shall consider the complexity and variety of the cases assigned to the judge, and any administrative responsibilities of the judge, and may consider the judge's length of service as a judge. Notwithstanding section 1104(a)(2), this authority may not be delegated to the head of any agency.

"(d) The Office of Personnel Management shall prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this section.";

(3) in section 5373 by striking out "maximum rate for GS–18" and inserting in lieu thereof "rate for level V of the Executive Schedule";

(4) in section 5374 by striking out "and step of the General Schedule set forth in section 5332 of this title" inserting in lieu thereof "of the Federal National Pay System";

(5) in section 5375—

(A) in paragraph (1) by striking out "GS–7, Step 5" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS–12";

(B) in paragraph (2) by striking out "GS–8, Step 5" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS–13";

(C) in paragraph (3) by striking out "GS–9, Step 5" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS–14"; and

(D) in paragraph (4) by striking out "GS–10, Step 5" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS–15"; and

(6) by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§ 5376. Pay for critically needed positions

"(a) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) 'agency' has the meaning given it by section 5102;

"(2) 'employee' means—

"(A) an employee under section 5102; and

"(B) an employee in a position under the Executive Schedule under sections 5312-5317;

"(3) 'position' means—

"(A) a position under section 5102; and

"(B) a position under the Executive Schedule under sections 5312-5317.

"(b) Notwithstanding subchapter II of chapter 31, chapter 51, or subchapter I, II, III, or VIII, the Office of Management and Budget, in consultation with the Office of Personnel Management but otherwise in the Office of Management and Budget's sole discretion, may authorize the head of an agency to set the rate of basic pay for an employee under this section rather than under subchapter I, II, III, or VIII, as otherwise applicable.

"(c)(1) An employee's rate of basic pay may be set under this section only if the employee's position—

"(A) requires expertise of an extremely high level in a scientific, technical, professional, or administrative field; and

"(B) is critical to the agency's successful accomplishment of an important mission.

"(2) No more than 400 positions may be paid under this section at any time. No more than 30 of these 400 positions may be positions that would otherwise be paid under subchapter II. The Office of Management and Budget, in consultation with the Office of Personnel Management but otherwise in its sole discretion, shall allocate these positions among the agencies, and may change such allocations at any time.

"(d) The head of the agency may set an employee's rate of basic pay under this section at any rate that exceeds the rate that would otherwise be applicable under subchapter I, II, III, or VIII, but that does not (in combination with any bonuses; performance, rank or cash awards; differentials; allowances; or other cash payments during the calendar year) exceed the rate payable for level I of the Executive Schedule at the end of the calendar year, unless the President approves payment of a higher rate for the employee.

"(e) The Office of Management and Budget, in consultation with the Office of Personnel Management, may by regulation permit the payment to employees whose pay is fixed under this section of recruitment and relocation bonuses under section 5308.

"(f) The Office of Management and Budget, in consultation with the Office of Personnel Management, may prescribe such regulations, criteria, and guidelines as may be necessary for the administration of this section. The Office of Management and Budget may require the agency to obtain the prior approval of the Office of Management and Budget before paying an employee under this section.

"§ 5377. Differentials, bonuses, and allowances for other positions

"(a) At the request of the head of an Executive agency, the President may in his sole discretion authorize the payment to one or more categories of employees of the agency who are not subject to subchapter I or III of—

"(1) geographic differentials in accordance with section 5305;

"(2) staffing differentials in accordance with section 5306 or 5335, as appropriate;

"(3) supervisory differentials in accordance with section 5307 or 5336, as appropriate;

"(4) recruitment and relocation bonuses in accordance with section 5308 or 5337, as appropriate; and

"(5) retention allowances in accordance with section 5309 or 5338, as appropriate.

"(b) No differential, bonus, or allowance may be authorized under this section that would cause an employee's aggregate compensation (including basic pay, differentials, bonuses, allowances, performance-based awards, and other cash payments) to exceed the rate payable for level I of the Executive Schedule at the end of the calendar year.

"§ 5378. Bar to judicial review

"There shall be no judicial review of determinations entrusted to the sole discretion of the President, the President's Pay Agent, the Office of Management and Budget, or the Office of Personnel Management or the Director thereof, by any provisions of this chapter, chapter 54, or section 5532(g), 8344(i), or 8468(f). For the purposes of such chapters and sections, 'sole discretion' means exclusively that there shall be no judicial review.".

(g) Subchapter VIII of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in section 5382(b)—

(A) by striking out "the minimum rate of basic pay payable for GS-16 of the General Schedule" and inserting in lieu thereof "120 percent of the minimum rate of basic pay for NS-20 of the Federal National Pay System"; and

(B) by striking out "section 5308 or"; and

(2) by amending section 5382(c) to read as follows:

"(c) Subject to subsection (b), effective at the beginning of the first applicable pay period commencing on or after the effective date of an adjustment in the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay of the Federal National Pay System or of the rates of pay of the Executive Schedule, each rate of basic pay for the Senior Executive Service shall be adjusted by an amount determined by the President in his sole discretion to be appropriate.";

(3) in section 5383(b)—

(A) by striking out "fiscal" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "calendar"; and

(B) in subsection (b)(1) by inserting "subsection (e) or" after "under".

(h) The analysis for chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out the items relating to subchapter I and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SUBCHAPTER I—FEDERAL NATIONAL PAY SYSTEM

SPECIAL OCCUPATIONAL PAY SYSTEMS

SEC. 4. (a) Chapter 54 of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 54—SPECIAL OCCUPATIONAL PAY SYSTEMS

"Sec.
"5401. Definitions.
"5402. Establishment of special occupational pay systems.

"§ 5401. Definitions.

"For the purposes of this chapter, 'agency', 'employee', and 'position' have the meanings given them by section 5102.

"§ 5402. Establishment of special occupational pay systems

"(a) The President's Pay Agent, as designated under section 5302(a)(2)(A), may in its sole discretion establish one or more special occupational pay systems under this chapter for positions in occupations or groups of occupations that the Pay Agent determines, for reasons of good administration, should not be classified under chapter 51 or paid under subchapter I or III of chapter 53.

"(b) In establishing special occupational pay systems, the President's Pay Agent shall—

"(1) identify occupations or groups of occupations for which chapter 51 and subchapter I or III of chapter 53, as applicable, do not function adequately;

"(2) consider alternative approaches for determining the pay for employees in positions in such occupations or groups of occupations;

"(3) give thorough consideration to the views of agencies employing such employees and labor organizations representing such employees, as well as other interested parties;

"(4) publish a proposed plan for determining the pay of such employees in the Federal Register;

"(5) conduct one or more public hearings;

"(6) notify each House of Congress of the establishment of a special occupational pay system at least 90 days in advance of the date the system is to take effect; and

"(7) publish in the Federal Register a final plan setting forth the details of the special occupational pay system.

"(c) A special occupational pay system may not—

"(1) provide for a waiver of any law, rule, or regulation that could not be waived under section 4703(c);

"(2) provide a rate of basic pay for any employee in excess of the rate for level V of the Executive Schedule; or

"(3) provide a combination of basic pay and any form of additional pay, differential, bonus, allowance, or performance-based cash award for any employee in any calendar year, in excess of the rate payable for level I of the Executive Schedule at the end of such calendar year.".

(b) The item relating to chapter 54 in the table of chapters at the beginning of part III of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"54. Special Occupational Pay Systems ..... 5401".

TIME OFF DUTY AS AN INCENTIVE AWARD

SEC. 5. Section 4502 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) The Office of Personnel Management may by regulation permit agencies to grant employees time off duty, without loss of pay or charge to leave, as an award in recognition of superior accomplishment or other personal effort that contributes to the quality, efficiency, or economy of Government operations.".

ADVANCES OF PAY

SEC. 6. Section 5522 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (d);

(2) by inserting after subsection (b) the following:

"(c) Under regulations prescribed by the Office of Personnel Management, an agency may provide for the advance payment of basic pay, covering not more than 2 pay periods, to any individual who is newly appointed to a position in the agency and who has to relocate to accept such appointment."; and

(3) in subsection (d), as redesignated, by striking out "subsection (a)" both times it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (a) or (c)".

PREMIUM PAY AMENDMENTS

SEC. 7. Subchapter V of chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in section 5541(2)(C) by striking out "subchapter III" and inserting in lieu thereof "subchapter I or III";

(2) in section 5542—

(A) by striking out "GS-10" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-15 in the case of an employee under the NS Pay System, or LS-10 for the applicable pay area, in the case of an employee under the LS Pay System,";

(B) by striking out "GS-14" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-19"; and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) This section shall not apply to an employee who is subject to the overtime pay provisions of section 7 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended. In the case of an employee who would, were it not for the preceding sentence, be subject to this section, hours of work in excess of 8 hours in a day shall be deemed to be overtime hours for the purposes of such section 7 and hours in a paid non-work status shall be deemed to be hours of work.";

(3) in section 5543 by striking out "subchapter III" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-15 in the case of an employee under the NS Pay System, or LS-10 for the applicable pay area, in the case of an employee under the LS Pay System,";

(4) in section 5544—

(A) by adding at the end of subsection (a) the following: "This section, other than the sixth sentence, shall not be applicable to an employee who is subject to the overtime pay provisions of section 7 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended. In the case of an employee who would, were it not for the preceding sentence, be subject to this section, hours of work in excess of 8 hours in a day shall be deemed to be overtime hours for the purposes of such section 7 and hours in a paid non-work status shall be deemed to be hours of work."; and

(B) in subsection (b) by striking out "subchapter III" and inserting in lieu thereof "subchapter I or III";

(5) in section 5545—

(A) in subsection (c) by striking out "GS-10" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-15 in the case of an employee under the NS Pay System, or LS-10 for the applicable pay area, in the case of an employee under the LS Pay System,"; and

(B) in subsection (d)—

(i) by striking out "irregular or intermittent";

(ii) by striking out "subchapter III" and inserting in lieu thereof "subchapter I or III"; and

(iii) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) may apply to an employee in a position which by its nature inherently involves physical hardship or hazard only if the Office determines such application to be appropriate; and";

(6) in section 5546a—

(A) by striking out "GS-9" and "GS-09" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-14";

(B) by striking out "GS-11" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-16"; and

(C) by striking out "GS-12" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-17"; and

(7) in section 5547—

(A) by striking out "GS-15" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-20"; and

(B) by amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Subject to regulations prescribed by the Office of Personnel Management, the provisions of the first sentence of subsection (a) shall not apply to an employee who is paid premium pay by reason of work on, or in support of, an emergency involving a direct threat to life or property, including a forest wildfire emergency.

"(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), no employee (other than an employee subject to the second sentence of subsection (a)) may be paid premium pay under sections 5542, 5545 (a), (b), and (c), and 5546 (a) and (b) to the extent that the aggregate of basic and premium pay for such employee for the aggregate of all pay periods in any calendar year would otherwise exceed the maximum annual rate of basic pay for NS-20 in effect at the end of such calendar year.".

REEMPLOYMENT OF RETIREES

SEC. 8. (a) Section 5532 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) The Director of the Office of Personnel Management may, at the request of the head of an Executive agency, waive the application of the provisions of this section on a case-by-case basis for employees in scientific, technical, professional, or administrative positions for which there is exceptional difficulty in recruiting or retaining a qualified employee. The Office shall prescribe regulations establishing criteria for the exercise of this authority.".

(b) Section 8344 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof of the following new subsection:

"(i) The Director of the Office of Personnel Management may, at the request of the head of an Executive agency, waive the application of the provisions of this section on a case-by-case basis for employees in scientific, technical, professional, or administrative positions for which there is exceptional difficulty in recruiting or retaining a qualified employee. An employee to whom such waiver applies shall not be deemed an employee for the purpose of chapter 83 or 84 while such waiver is in effect. The Office shall prescribe regulations establishing criteria for the exercise of this authority.".

(c) Section 8468 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) The Director of the Office of Personnel Management may, at the request of the head of an Executive agency, waive the application of the provisions of this section on a case-by-case basis for employees in scientific, technical, professional, or administrative positions for which there is exceptional difficulty in recruiting or retaining a qualified employee. An employee to whom such waiver applies shall not be deemed an employee for the purposes of chapter 83 or 84 while such waiver is in effect. The Office shall prescribe regulations establishing criteria for the exercise of this authority.".

TRAVEL AND TRANSPORTATION EXPENSES FOR CANDIDATES AND NEW APPOINTEES

SEC. 9. Chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in section 5703—

(A) in the catchline by inserting after "pay" the following: "; interview expenses"; and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following: "An individual being considered for employment by an agency may be paid travel or transportation expenses under this subchapter to travel to and from pre-employment interviews determined necessary by the agency."; and

(2) in section 5723—

(A) in the catchline by striking out "; manpower shortage positions"; and

(B) in subsection (a) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) travel expenses of a new appointee or a student trainee when assigned on completion of college work; and"; and

(3) in the analysis—

(A) by amending the item relating to section 5703 to read as follows:

"5703. Per diem, travel, and transportation expenses; experts and consultants; individuals serving without pay; interview expenses."; and

(B) amending the item relating to section 5723 to read as follows:

"5723. Travel and transportation expenses of new appointees and student trainees.".

UNIFORM ALLOWANCES

SEC. 10. (a) Subchapter I of chapter 59 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in section 5910(a) by striking out "$125" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$400";

(2) by amending section 5902 to read as follows:

"§ 5902. Increase in maximum uniform allowances

"Notwithstanding section 5901, the Office of Personnel Management may from time to time, by regulation, adjust the maximum amount for the cost of uniforms and the maximum allowances for uniforms under section 5901, and such adjustment shall also adjust the amount prescribed under the first sentence of section 5901."; and

(3) by amending section 5903 to read as follows:

"§ 5903. Regulations

"The Office of Personnel Management may prescribe such regulations as it considers necessary for the administration of this subchapter.".

MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 5, UNITED STATES CODE

SEC. 11. Title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in section 575(c)(10) by striking out "grade GS-15 as provided in section 5332 of this title" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-20";

(2) in section 2301(b)(3) by striking out "private" and inserting in lieu thereof "non-Federal";

(3) in section 3104(a) by striking out "outside of the General Schedule" and inserting in lieu thereof "above NS-20 without regard to the provisions of chapter 51";

(4) in section 3109(b)—

(A) by striking out "subchapter III" both places it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "subchapters I and III"; and

(B) by striking out "highest rate payable under section 5332 of this title" and inserting in lieu thereof "rate for level V of the Executive Schedule";

(5) in section 3132(a)(2) by striking out "in GS-16, 17, or 18 of the General Schedule" and inserting in lieu thereof "classified above NS-20";

(6) in the analysis for chapter 33 by amending the item relating to section 3324 to read as follows:

3324. APPOINTMENTS ABOVE NS-20.";

(7) in section 3304a(a) by striking out "in GS-16, GS-17, or GS-18" and inserting in lieu thereof "classified above NS-20";

(8) in section 3313 by striking out "GS-9" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-14";

(9) in section 3324—

(A) by amending the catchline to read as follows:

"§ 3324. Appointments above NS-20";

(B) by striking out "in GS-16, 17, or 18" and inserting in lieu thereof "classified above NS-20"; and

(C) by amending clause (1) to read as follows:

"(1) in the United States Tax Court";

(10) in section 3594(c)(1)(A) by striking out "GS-15 or above of the General Schedule" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-20 or above";

(11) in the analysis for chapter 43 by striking out the item relating to section 4302a;

(12) in section 4302(b)—

(A) by redesignating paragraphs (1) through (6) as paragraphs (2) through (7), respectively;

(B) by inserting before paragraph (2), as redesignated, the following new paragraph;

"(1) three or more levels of summary performance ratings, including a fully successful level and at least one level above the fully successful level and at least one level below the fully successful level;"; and

(C) by amending paragraph (4), as redesignated, to read as follows:

"(4) evaluating each employee annually in writing on such standards;";

(13) by repealing section 4302a;

(14) in section 4304 by amending subsection (b)(1) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Each agency shall submit to the Office for review each performance appraisal system under this subchapter, and may operate such system unless directed otherwise by the Office under paragraph (3).";

(15) in section 4501(2) by amending paragraph (A) to read as follows:

"(A) an employee as defined by section 2105; and";

(16) in section 5595(a)(2)(i) by striking out "minimum rate for GS-18" and inserting in lieu thereof "rate for level V of the Executive Schedule";

(17) in the analysis for chapter 57 by striking out the item relating to section 5752;

(18) by repealing section 5752;

(19) in section 5941 by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) For the purposes of this section, rates of pay under section 5372, subchapters I, III, and VIII of chapter 53, the Foreign Service Act of 1980, and chapter 73 of title 38 are deemed to be fixed by statute.";

(20) in section 5948(g)(1)—

(A) by amending paragraph (A) to read as follows:

"(A) subchapter I of chapter 53, relating to the NS Pay System;";

(B) by striking out paragraph (C); and

(C) in paragraph (D) by striking out "specially qualified scientific or professional personnel" and inserting in lieu thereof "senior personnel";

(21) in section 6301(2)(x) by striking out "highest rate payable under section 5332 of this title" and inserting in lieu thereof "rate for level V of the Executive Schedule";

(22) in section 7201(a)(2)(A) by striking out "General Schedule" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS Pay System or the LS Pay System";

(23) in section 8133(e)—

(A) by striking out "GS-2" and inserting in lieu thereof "LS-2 for the applicable pay area"; and

(B) by striking out "GS-15" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-20";

(24) in section 8141(b)(1) by striking out "rate of basic pay payable for step 1 of grade GS-9 in the General Schedule under section 5332 of this title" and inserting in lieu thereof "minimum rate of basic pay for NS-14";

(25) in section 8142(c)—

(A) in paragraph (1) by striking out "GS-7" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-12"; and

(B) in paragraph (2) by striking out "GS-11" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-16";

(26) in section 8143(a)(1) by striking out "GS-2" and inserting in lieu thereof "LS-2 for the applicable pay area";

(27) in section 8143(b) by striking out "GS-7" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-12";

(28) in section 8340(g)(1)—

(A) by striking out "GS-15" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-20";

(B) by striking out "General Schedule" and inserting in lieu thereof "NS Pay System";

(29) in section 8431 by striking out "5308 and 5382(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "5301(a), 5331(a), 5372(b), 5373, 5376(d), 5382(b), and 5402(d)"; and

(30) in section 8476(d)(1) by striking out "grade GS-18 of the General Schedule" and inserting in lieu thereof "level V of the Executive Schedule".

REFERENCES IN OTHER LAWS

SEC. 12. In the case of any provision of law not amended by this Act that makes reference to the General Schedule or a grade or rate of pay thereof, or to a provision of law amended by this Act, the Office Personnel Management shall determine the appropriate successor reference under the amendments made by this Act.

RELATED PAY SYSTEMS

SEC. 13. (a) Section 403 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "The President";

(2) by striking out "GS-15 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5. Salary rates established under this section shall be adjusted in accordance with subchapter I of chapter 53 of title 5." and inserting in lieu thereof "NS-20 of the Federal National Pay System."; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection.

"(b) Effective on the first day of the first applicable pay period beginning on or after the effective date of an adjustment in the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay of the Federal National Pay System under section 5302 of title 5, the President shall, in his sole discretion, adjust the rates of basic pay for the Foreign Service Schedule by amounts consistent with the adjustment under section 5302. There shall be no judicial review of such adjustment.".

(b) Section 4107 of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by striking out "chapter 53 of title 5" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (k)";

(2) in subsection (b)(1) by striking out "chapter 53 of title 5" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (k); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) Effective on the first day of the first applicable pay period beginning on or after the effective date of an adjustment in the minimum and maximum rates of pay of the Federal National Pay System under section 5302 of title 5, the President shall, in his sole discretion, adjust the rates of basic pay for positions provided in section 4102 and paragraph (1) of section 4104 by amounts consistent with the adjustment under section 5302. There shall be no judicial review of such adjustment.".

(c) Section 1009 of title 37, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by amendment subsection (a) to read as follows:

"(a) Effective on January 1, 1991, and on the first day of January of each year thereafter, the President shall make an adjustment, by a percentage determined by the President, in the current rates of—

"(1) the monthly basic pay authorized members of the uniformed services pursuant to section 203(a) of this title;

"(2) the basic allowance for subsistence authorized members of the uniformed services pursuant to section 402 of this title; and

"(3) the basic allowance for quarters authorized members of the uniformed services pursuant to section 403(a) of this title.";

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) by striking out paragraph (1);

(B) by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (1); and

(C) in paragraph (3)—

(i) by redesignating that paragraph as paragraph (2); and

(ii) by amending that paragraph, as so redesignated, to read as follows:

"(2) subject to subsections (c) and (d) of this section, provide all eligible members with the same overall percentage increase in each element of compensation set forth in subsection (a) of this section.";

(3) in subsections (c)(1), (c)(2), and (d)(2)(A) by striking out "(b)(3)" each place that it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "(b)(2)";

(4) in subsection (d)(2)(B) by striking out "in the General Schedule rates of basic pay for civilian employees" and inserting in lieu thereof "described in subsection (b)(2) of this section"; and

(5) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) Basic pay authorized for members of the uniformed services may not be paid at a rate in excess of the rate of basic pay payable for level V of the Executive Schedule under title 5.".

EFFECTIVE DATES AND TRANSITION

SEC. 14. (a)(1) Except as otherwise provided by this section, the amendments made by this Act shall become effective on such dates as the President in his sole discretion may determine appropriate, but not later than the first day of the first applicable pay period beginning on or after January 1, 1995. The President shall direct his Pay Agent to take such actions as may be necessary to ensure that appropriate Bureau of Labor Statistics surveys and other necessary data are available on a timely basis for the implementation of this Act.

(2) In putting the amendments made by this Act into effect, the President may make applicable to employees under the General Schedule any provision of these amendments that, by the terms of such provision, will apply to employees under the Federal National Pay System or the Federal Locality Pay System. In putting the amendments made by this Act into effect before the rates of basic pay of the Federal National Pay System or the Federal Locality Pay System take effect, the President or his designee may direct that any reference in such amendments to such rates of basic pay be deemed to refer to a rate of the General Schedule the President or his designee determines in his sole discretion to be appropriate.

(b) No employee's rate of basic pay may be reduced below the rate in effect on the date of enactment of this Act by reason of the amendments made by this Act.

(c) Effective on the first day of the first applicable pay period beginning on or after January 1, 1991, the President may establish geographic differentials of up to 8 percent of basic pay (except as provided in the last sentence of this subsection), which may be paid to each General Schedule employee whose duty station is in—

(1) the New York-Northern New Jersey-Long Island, NY-NJ-CT Consolidated Metropolitan Statistical Area;

(2) the San Francisco-Oakland-San Jose, CA Consolidated Metropolitan Statistical Area; and

(3) the Los Angeles-Anaheim-Riverside, CA Consolidated Metropolitan Statistical Area.

Geographical differentials under this subsection shall be administered in a manner consistent with section 5305(c) of title 5, United States Code, as amended by section 3 of this Act, and may be reduced or eliminated as the amendments made by this Act are put into effect. No such reduction or elimination shall have the effect of reducing the total amount of pay, determined by adding basic pay and geographic differential, which any employee is receiving. In the case of any employee whose rate of pay is fixed under section 5303 of title 5, United States Code, as in effect prior to the enactment of this Act, the Office of Personnel Management shall determine in its sole discretion what, if any, geographic differential shall be payable under this subsection.

(d) Effective on the first day of the first applicable pay period beginning on or after January 1, 1991, the President may establish staffing differentials equal to 5 percent of basic pay, which may be paid to each General Schedule employee whose position—

(1) is in GS-5 or GS-7; and

(2) is in a class that is determined by the Office of Personnel Management in its sole discretion as likely to be included under the Federal National Pay System under the criteria in section 5106(d) of title 5, United States Code, as added by section 2 of this Act.

Staffing differentials under this subsection shall be administered in a manner consistent with section 5306(c) of title 5, United States Code, as amended by section 3 of this Act, and may be reduced or eliminated by the Office of Personnel Management in its sole discretion as the amendments made by this Act are put into effect. No such reduction or elimination shall have the effect of reducing the total amount of pay, determined by adding basic pay and staffing differential, which any employee is receiving.

(e) Section 5948(d) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "September 30, 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1995"; and

(2) by striking out "September 30, 1992" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1997".

(f)(1) Effective on the first day of the first pay period beginning on or after January 1, 1994, the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay for each grade of the Federal National Pay System (the rates of basic pay of which System shall be put into effect on such date) shall be set at rates that exceed the corresponding rates of the General Schedule as in effect immediately prior to such date by amounts determined under the procedure set forth in subchapter I of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, as in effect prior to the enactment of this Act. Corresponding adjustments shall be made under section 403(b) of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 and section 4107(k) of title 38, United States Code. Such adjustments shall be the only adjustments under such procedure during fiscal year 1994, and shall be the last adjustments under such procedure.

(2)(A) Effective on the first day of the first pay period beginning on or after January 1, 1994, the rates of basic pay of the Federal Locality Pay System shall be put into effect. The minimum and maximum rates of basic pay for each grade in each pay area shall be the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay of the corresponding grades of the General Schedule, as in effect immediately prior to such date, as further adjusted under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, as amended by this Act.

(B) Beginning on January 1, 1994, the rates of pay of the Federal Wage System shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of subchapter IV of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, as amended by this Act.

(g) There shall be no judicial review of actions taken under this section.

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE AND JUSTIFICATION

To accompany a draft bill "To reform the Federal pay system, and for other purposes."

PURPOSE

The primary purpose of this draft bill is to modernize and reform the Federal pay system. Key objectives of the proposal include:

Restructuring the pay system to reflect diverse labor markets;

Instituting a credible, effective, and enduring pay adjustment process;

Increasing flexibilities in the pay system to adapt to special situations and circumstances;

Strengthening the link between the performance of an employee and his or her pay; and Providing immediate relief for critical pay problems.

No employee's basic pay would be reduced as a result of any of these reforms.

JUSTIFICATION

The Federal white-collar pay system is exhibiting widespread problems that can no longer be ignored. The popularity of pay demonstration projects, accelerating growth of special salary schedules, inability to recruit and retain critical personnel, widely reported dissatisfaction, and continuing legislative efforts to take specific agencies or occupations out of the General Schedule are all testimony to the need for reform.

The General Schedule is 40 years old; it was created by Congress in 1949 to provide uniformity in pay practices for all Federal white-collar employees across the country. In 1962 the comparability principle was added to the General Schedule, making comparability with a private sector, national labor market the theoretical basis for schedule adjustments.

Labor markets and work force demographics have changed markedly in recent years and the pace of such changes is expected to accelerate in the years ahead. The General Schedule system with its monolithic structure and rigid underpinnings is incapable of adapting to this increasingly diverse and dynamic economic environment. It is past time to modernize the Government's pay system to make it responsive to such differences; without change, the Government's ability to succeed as an employer in attracting and keeping a high-quality work force at a reasonable cost will be seriously jeopardized.

Proposed alternatives to modernize the Government's pay system are not new. For more than 20 years studies have been recommending change, with recurring themes. Paying employees on the basis of occupational labor market and geographic differences has been recommended by the 1972 report of the Job Evaluation and Pay Review Task Force, headed by Philip M. Oliver; the General Accounting Office's 1975 report titled "Federal White-Collar Pay Systems Need Substantial Changes"; former President Ford's 1976 Panel on Federal Compensation, headed by Vice President Rockefeller; former President Carter's 1977 Federal Personnel Management Project (Ink Task Force) Report; the 1980 report of the American Society for Public Administration, titled "Federal Compensation Reform, an Examination of Issues"; and former President Reagan's 1983 Private Sector Survey of Cost Control headed by Peter Grace. Most of these studies also recommended expanding the survey upon which Federal salaries are based to include many more jobs and State and local governments.

More recently, in its 1989 report, "Leadership in America—Rebuilding the Public Service", the National Commission on the Public Service, headed by Paul A. Volcker, concluded that "the current goal of national comparability between public and private pay is simplistic and unworkable . . . ." The Commission recommended a new pay setting process that recognizes the fact that pay differs by occupations and by localities. It also said the Government must pay competitive salaries if Government service is to remain a viable career choice and in return for competitive pay, the Government should demand competitive performance.

In early 1988, the Office of Personnel Management undertook a comprehensive research initiative to explore alternative approaches for setting white-collar pay. The study involved intensive research conducted within OPM by its compensation specialists and the commissioning of an independent study by the Wyatt Company, an internationally recognized firm known for its compensation expertise. The research conducted by both groups illustrated that the Federal pay system is out of line with the pay practices of other employers and that pay levels for similar work vary widely by geographic area and occupation. Both groups concluded that the current General Schedule is inflexible and cannot be sufficiently responsive to labor market forces and pay variations.

The Wyatt Company specifically recommended the establishment of a national schedule for professional and administrative occupations, supplemented by geographic differentials for employees in high labor cost areas, and local salary schedules for clerical and technical positions. It also advocated movement away from automatic step increases to pay-for-performance for all employees above range midpoints, and identified a need for delegation to agencies of some pay authorities and increased flexibility in program administration. Many of The Wyatt Company's recommendations have been incorporated into this proposal.

In addition to considering the numerous studies that have been done on the Federal compensation systems, in September 1989 the Director of the Office of Personnel Management established a Task Force on Pay Reform to provide an opportunity for a wide spectrum of interested parties to be involved in discussions and to develop options for consideration in developing a pay reform proposal. The Task Force, which met four times, was composed of representatives from Federal agencies, unions and management associations, public interest groups, and private sector experts. Careful consideration was given to the Task Force deliberations in the drafting of this bill.

Mindful of the need to spend scarce resources judiciously, this proposal is designed to allocate payroll dollars so that the Government is no longer substantially overpaying for some occupations and locations while severely underpaying others. The current system relies on the highest common denominator to address all individual problems. The proposed new system is designed to deal with common broad needs then address specific problems separately. Although there are costs associated with the reform, they will be distributed over a five-year period in order to minimize budget impact.

The major features of the draft proposal are:

Two basic white-collar pay systems—the National Pay System for occupations having a national labor market and the Locality Pay System for occupations having local labor markets;

Also, a separate system for Administrative Law Judges and members of boards of contract appeals and authority to establish other separate systems for occupations that are fundamentally incompatible with the basic framework;

New processes for adjusting pay rates and expansion of the salary survey universe to include State and local governments;

New pay flexibilities including new or revised differentials, allowances, and bonuses; expanded authorities to hire above minimum entrance rates; payment of travel and transportation expenses for first jobs; and new pay incentives for critically needed personnel;

Institution of pay-for-performance provisions for most white-collar workers;

Special early relief measures to address the most pressing problems; and Modification of the blue-collar wage system to align Federal rates more closely with prevailing market rates.

INCREASED MARKET SENSITIVITY

The draft bill increases market sensitivity in the Federal pay system by replacing the monolithic General Schedule and the Performance Management Recognition System with two basic pay systems—the National Pay System and the Locality Pay System.

Federal National Pay System: The National Pay System will cover occupations for which recruitment is normally conducted from a national labor market, whose incumbents are usually college graduates, and which are generally professional or administrative in nature. The system will have eleven grades, NS-10 through NS-20, plus a single pay band at the top for senior, nonmanagerial positions that are classified above NS-20. The pay band for the Senior National Pay System positions will be based upon a formula linking it to the rates for NS-20 and Executive Schedule level V.

A National Employees Pay Council will be created, whose views on the National Pay System will be given thorough consideration by the President's Pay Agent.

Under the National Pay System, the President's Pay Agent will be authorized to establish geographic differentials in any areas where the Government would encounter serious difficulty in recruiting or retaining employees without the differential. These differentials may be up to 25 percent of an employee's basic pay.

Federal Locality Pay System: The Locality Pay System will cover occupations for which recruitment is normally conducted from local labor markets and which are generally clerical or technical in nature. The system will have fifteen grades, LS-1 through LS-15. Local pay areas will be defined by the Office of Personnel Management, after giving thorough consideration to the views of a new Federal Labor-Management Pay Committee, in consideration of such factors as local labor market patterns, commuting patterns, and the practices of other employers.

The Federal Labor-Management Pay Committee will have five management and five labor organization members, with an independent Chairman who is also the Chairman of the Federal Prevailing Rate Advisory Committee. The new committee will function much as the Federal Prevailing Rate Advisory Committee does for the Federal Wage System.

Administrative Law Judges and Members of Board of Contract Appeals: There will be a separate pay system for Administrative Law Judges and members of boards of contract appeals, having at least three rates established by the President. The minimum rate will be at least equal to the minimum rate for NS-20, and the maximum rate will be not more than the rate for executive Schedule level IV. The Office of Personnel Management will determine the rate applicable to each judge or member.

Special Occupational Pay Systems: There will be authority to establish special pay and job evaluation systems for occupations that have characteristics that make them fundamentally incompatible with the basic pay system. Although these special occupational systems are expected to be rare, protective services and health care occupations are likely candidates for early consideration.

In order to assure full consideration by all concerned groups, there will be consultation with agencies and labor organizations, as well as other interested parties; publication of the proposed plan in the Federal Register; public hearings; and Congressional notification before a special occupational system becomes effective.

In order to minimize staffing competition between the Department of Veterans Affairs and other agencies for medical personnel, the draft bill also authorizes the Office of Personnel Management to apply any provisions of the pay system of the Department of Veterans Affairs, Veterans Health Services and Research Administration to health care occupations in other agencies.

AN EFFECTIVE, CREDIBLE ADJUSTMENT PROCESS

The current adjustment process of the General Schedule has failed to function effectively. Budget pressures combined with comparability adjustment figures that are neither credible nor realistic have made the current system virtually inoperable. The adjustment process for both the National and Locality Pay Systems will be improved by enhancing the representativeness of surveys used to measure competitors' salary levels through the inclusion of state and local governments, together with other modifications peculiar to each system.

Federal National Pay System: National Pay System rates will be adjusted by the President each January based on non-Federal survey data collected by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The President's Pay Agent will recommend an adjustment that would set National Pay System rate ranges with midpoints generally within a comparability range representing rates between +/− 10 percent of the trend line describing the central tendency of appropriately weighted non-Federal pay data identified in the BLS survey. In determining its recommendation, the Pay Agent will assess the ability of agencies to compete successfully in the labor market, considering such factors as turnover and vacancy rates and patterns of career progression, unemployment trends, indications of trends in the quality of National Pay System employees, and the need to provide Government service economically. The Pay Agent's recommendations will be made after giving thorough consideration to the views of the new National Employees Pay Council and holding public hearings. The President may implement the Pay Agent's recommendation or another amount. If the President's decision falls below the comparability range, the reasons and an assessment of the impact on the Government's ability to recruit and retain well-qualified employees must be reported to Congress.

Under this proposal, the Pay Agent's recommendation regarding pay will be made in time to be incorporated in the budget for the year the increases are to take place. This is a significant improvement over the pay adjustment process for the General Schedule, since the machinery outlined in the current law comes into play only after critical budget decisions have been made.

Federal Locality Pay System: Under the Locality Pay System, all the schedules will be adjusted each January. The Bureau of Labor Statistics will conduct salary surveys of the non-Federal sector in each local area, as directed by the Office of Personnel Management.

The Office of Personnel Management will give thorough consideration to the views of the Fedeal Labor-Management Pay Committee and the Committee will recommend to the Director of the Office of Personnel Management the local adjustments necessary to set Local Pay System rate ranges with midpoints generally within a comparability range representing rates between +/− 10 percent of the trend line describing the central tendency of appropriately weighted non-Federal pay data identified in the BLS surveys of the local areas. Considering the Committee's recommendations and taking into account the same factors as are used in setting National Pay System rates, the Office of Personnel Management will recommend local adjustments and an overall average adjustment figure to the President's Pay Agent. In turn, the President's Pay Agent will recommend to the President an overall average adjustment to the Locality Pay System rates. Both the Office of Personel Management's and the Pay Agent's recommendations must be generally within the comparability range.

As with the National System, the President may implement the Pay Agent's recommendation or another amount. If the President's decision falls below the comparability range, the reasons and an assessment of the impact on the Government's ability to recruit and retain well-qualified employees must be reported to Congress. The decision will be made in time to be incorporated in the budget for the year the increases are to take place. Each January, the Director of the Office of Personnel Management will implement the appropriate adjustments in each local area.

INCREASED PAY FLEXIBILITY

The rigidities of the current pay system provide little leeway for responding to special individual, local, or occupational staffing conditions and circumstances. For example, the current system requires uniform starting salaries for entry-level jobs, regardless of the unique qualifications of an individual, and provides no monetary incentives to attract, retain, and relocate critical workers.

This draft bill includes a number of proposals authorizing new or expanded flexibilities in the white-collar pay system. Except as otherwise noted, these authorities are expected to be delegated to agencies under regulations issued by the Office of Personnel Management.

Staffing Differentials: Staffing differentials may be authorized by the President, or, as delegated, the Office of Personnel Management, to address labor market anomalies for identified occupations, grades, and locations. These would replace special salary rates and could be up to 60 percent of an employee's basic pay, in contrast to the 30 percent maximum that applies to special salary rates.

Recruitment and Relocation Bonuses and Retention Allowances: Agencies could pay recruitment and relocation bonuses of up to 25 percent of basic pay to employees being appointed or relocated. Payment of the bonuses would be contingent upon employees entering into service agreements.

Individuals could be given retention allowances of up to 25 percent of basic pay, based upon unusually high or unique qualifications of the enmployee or a special need of the agency for the employee's services.

Agencies would be required to consult with labor organizations representing employees of the agency through exclusive recognition or national consultation rights on the criteria to be used in determining eligibility for and the amount of these bonuses and allowances. Consult means, in lieu of any other labor relations processes, to inform the labor organization of any proposed substantive change; afford them a reasonable opportunity to make recommendations; consider the recommendations; and, provide the labor organization a written statement of the agency's final action and reasons for it.

Above-minimum Entrance Rates. Authority to hire above the minimum rate, which currently exists for positions at GS–11 and above, will be extended to all grades. As under current law, a candidate's existing pay or unusually high or unique qualifications, or a special need of the Government for the candidate's services will continue to be the considerations in the use of this authority. Delegation of this authority by the Office of Personnel Management to agencies will be permitted.

Travel and Transportation Expenses for Candidates and New Appointees: Currently, payment of travel and transportation expenses incurred in moving to a first Federal job or in a pre-employment interview is restricted to shortage category occupations. In order to allow the Government to be more competitive, especially in college recruitment, this restriction to shortage categories will be eliminated.

Incentives for Critically Needed Personnel: The draft legislation authorizes exemption from current pay ceilings of up to 400 critically needed top jobs filled by world class experts in scientific, technical, professional, or administrative fields, on an as-needed basis. Up to 30 of the positions may be from the Executive Schedule and paid a rate higher than they would otherwise receive. The balance of the exemptions would be from the National Locality and Senior Executive Service systems. The positions would be allocated by the Office of Management and Budget, after consulting with the Office of Personnel Management. The new ceiling on the basic and total pay would be the Executive Schedule level I rate, unless the President, on a case-by-case basis, approves a higher rate.

In addition, the Office of Personnel Management could waive dual compensation restrictions on a case-by-case basis for military or civilian retirees who are reemployed in scientific, technical, professional, or administrative positions for which there are exceptional recruitment or retention problems.

Time Off Duty as an Incentive Award: The Office of Personnel Management may authorize agencies to grant employees time off duty without loss of pay or charge to leave, as an award for superior accomplishment or other personal effort that contributes to the quality, efficiency, or economy of Government operations.

Advances of Pay: Under the proposed legislation, the Office of Personnel Management may prescribe regulations for agencies to provide advance payment of basic pay, covering not more than two pay periods to any newly appointed individual or to any individual who has to relocate.

Uniform Allowances: The Office of Personnel Management may adjust the maximum amount for the cost of uniforms.

Expanded Authority to Pay Supervisory Differentials: Agencies will be authorized to pay supervisory differentials when supervisors have subordinates under different pay schedules who are paid more. Unlike the current authority for General Schedule supervisors of Federal Wage System employees, which is restricted to comparisons of basic pay, it will be permissible to consider total pay in setting the supervisory differential. However, the midpoints of the respective basic pay ranges must also be inverted. The supervisor's differential could not cause the supervisor's pay to be more than 3 percent above the subordinate's pay.

Aggregate Limitation on Total Pay: The aggregate limitation on total pay, including allowances, differentials, bonuses, premium pay and performance awards, for the National Pay System, Locality Pay System, and Special Occupational Pay Systems and any systems established under demonstration projects would be Executive Schedule level I. For the up to 400 critical positions exempted from current pay ceilings, agencies could set basic pay or a combination of basic pay and any bonuses, awards and other payments up to Executive Schedule level I. The President could make ceiling exceptions for any reason he deems appropriate.

Physicians Comparability Allowance Program: The proposed legislation extends the Physicians Comparability Allowance Program, providing that allowances and service agreements may be entered into through September 30, 1995 and extended through September 30, 1997.

STRONGER LINKAGE BETWEEN PERFORMANCE AND PAY

The current General Schedule pay system places a heavy emphasis on entitlement and longevity. Excluding managers under the Performance Management and Recognition System (about 10 percent of the total), the 1.4 million General Schedule workers are entitled to receive the full annual pay adjustment regardless of their performance. Most also receive regular increases that move them through the rate range, based on the amount of time they have spent in the grade.

This draft bill creates a strong relationship between performance and pay. Under both the National and Locality Pay Systems, employees whose performance falls below the Fully Successful level will not be entitled to receive the annual pay adjustment.

Also, under the National Pay System, there will be no automatic progression through the pay range; individuals will be advanced through the range based solely on performance. Under the Locality Pay System, individuals will progress to the midpoint of the pay range based primarily on time spent in the grade; progression beyond the midpoint, however, will be based solely on performance.

Both pay systems will also have provision for performance-based cash awards of up to ten percent of basic pay, or, in exceptional cases, up to 20 percent of basic pay.

Agencies will be required to consult with labor organizations representing employees of the agency through exclusive recognition or national consultation rights on the criteria to be used in determining eligibility for and the amount of merit pay increases and performance-based cash awards. Consult means, in lieu of any other labor relations processes, to inform the labor organization of any proposed substantive change; afford them a reasonable opportunity to make recommendations; consider the recommendations; and, provide the labor organization a written statement of the agency's final action and reasons for it.

The Office of Personnel Management would be authorized to exempt employees from the merit pay and performance-based cash awards provisions of the National and Locality pay systems because of adjudicatory responsibilities or for other reasons.

TRANSITION TO NATIONAL AND LOCAL SYSTEMS AND IMMEDIATE RELIEF FOR CRITICAL PAY PROBLEMS

Under the draft legislation, the current schedule adjustment mechanism will continue to operate for 1991 through 1993. The General Schedule will be split into the National and Locality Pay Systems in January 1994, and implementation of the new schedule adjustment process for the Locality System will begin in 1994. The current schedule adjustment process will be used to set pay for the National System in 1994. In January 1995, the National System will be adjusted by the new survey and schedule adjustment mechanism.

In order to provide immediate temporary relief to several chronic and urgent, pay-related staffing problems while the systems are being implemented, the bill provides that the President may pay, beginning in January 1991:

Geographic differentials of up to 8 percent in the three highest cost metropolitan areas—Los Angeles, San Francisco, and New York; and Nationwide 5 percent staffing differentials for GS-5 and 7 entry-level positions for which the Government normally recruits nationally and whose incumbents are usually college graduates.

Except for the new National and Locality Pay Systems, which have specific implementation schedules, other provisions may be implemented as the President determines appropriate, but not later than January 1995. As indicated in the President's 1991 budget message, the Administration intends to implement recruitment and relocation bonuses, retention allowances, and the extension of authority to hire above the minimum step to all grades in 1991.

Other provisions planned for early implementation include banding of Senior National Pay System positions into one pay range; the new pay system for Administrative Law Judges and members of boards of contract appeals; staffing differentials to replace special salary rates; authority to establish geographic differentials in other high-cost areas; extended authority to pay travel and transportation expenses for new appointees; basic and total pay of up to Executive Schedule level I for up to 400 critical positions; authority to waive limitations on premium pay for emergency and rescue work; advance pay checks for new appointees who relocate; new uniform allowance provisions; and, authority to waive dual compensation restrictions on reemployed retirees in certain positions with exceptional staffing problems.

At the President's discretion, the merit pay and performance-based cash awards provisions of this bill may be implemented prior to the splitting of the General Schedule, for some or all positions. This will facilitate design and testing of various pay-for-performance plans prior to system-wide implementation.

MODIFICATIONS TO THE FEDERAL BLUE-COLLAR WAGE SYSTEM

Four changes are proposed for the blue-collar Federal Wage System, which will make pay practices more consistent with those of the private sector and those proposed for the local white-collar system.

Beginning in 1994, prevailing market rates will be matched to the Federal Wage System midpoint—step 3 of the 5-step system—rather than step 2 as under existing law.

The effective date of wage schedules will be changed from 45 work days after the starting date of surveys to 150 calendar days. This will make permanent the 90-day delay in implementation of Federal Wage System adjustments that has been mandated annually by temporary legislation in recent years. This is consistent with this draft bill's permanent movement of white-collar pay adjustments from each October to January of the following year.

The President may direct the Office of Personnel Management to impose a limitation on maximum adjustments to wage schedules during any year if the President determines such a limit is required by consideration of equity with employees under the National and Locality Pay Systems. In making such a determination, the President will consider the likely effect on the ability of agencies to recruit and retain well-qualified employees.

Finally, in order to lessen the burden on non-Federal employers who participate in surveys, reduce the cost to the Government of conducting surveys, and to be consistent with practice under the Locality Pay System, the current requirement for full scale wage surveys every two years will be changed to at least every three years. Based on experience with Federal Wage System surveys, it is not expected that this change will have any significant effect on survey results.

OTHER IMPROVEMENTS TO EXISTING SYSTEMS

Hazard Pay: The current hazard pay provisions for General Schedule employees will be modified to provide more equitable pay treatment for white-collar workers. This will permit the Office of Personnel Management to correct a current problem under which employees who are exposed to a hazard on an intermittent basis can receive a differential while those who are exposed to the same hazard on a regular and recurring basis often receive no additional compensation. It is not the intent, however, to implement this change in a manner that will lead to compensation of employees for hazardous duty under both the classification of their positions and the hazard pay program.

Overtime Pay: The current duplicative overtime computations for employees covered by both title 5 and the Fair Labor Standards Act will be eliminated, greatly simplifying overtime administration. In order to preserve all existing benefits, the FLSA definition of overtime will be modified for Federal employees to include work in excess of 8 hours per day. Hours in a paid non-work status will also be counted in determining FLSA overtime eligibility.

Allowance, Differentials and Bonuses for Other Pay Systems: The President may authorize the payment of geographic, staffing and supervisory differentials; recruitment and relocation bonuses; and, retention allowances to employees not covered by the National Pay System or the Locality Pay System.

SECTION ANALYSIS, A BILL TO REFORM THE FEDERAL PAY SYSTEM, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

The first section provides a title for the bill, the "Federal Pay Reform Act of 1990."

Section 2 consists of amendments to chapter 51 of title 5, United States Code, concerning position classification. Most of these amendments are technical or conforming in nature. The major substantive amendments are as follows:

Paragraph (3) amends section 5104, where the statutory definitions of General Schedule grade levels have appeared. No change is made in the definitions themselves, but they become applicable to the two new pay systems created by the bill, the Federal National Pay System (the "NS Pay System") and the Federal Locality Pay System (the "LS Pay System"). The NS Pay System has 11 grades designated NA-10 through NS-20, which include positions now classified in GS-5 through GS-15. The LS Pay System has 15 grades, designated LS-1 through LS-15, which include positions now classified at GS-1 through GS-15. Where the two systems overlap, positions are classified as NS or LS in accordance with determinations made by OPM under section 5106, discussed below. The definitions for GS-16, 17, and 18 are eliminated. NS positions which warrant classification above NS-20 are dealt with under section 5108, also discussed below.

Paragraph (5) amends section 5106 to require OPM to determine which classes of positions to place in the NS Pay System and which to place in the LS Pay System to best meet the personnel management needs of the Government. Those placed in the NS Pay System are typically those for which the Government recruits nationally, whose incumbents are usually college graduates, and which are generally professional or administrative in nature. Those placed in the LS Pay System are typically those for which the Government recruits locally, whose incumbents are not usually expected to be college graduates, and which are generally clerical and technical in nature.

Paragraph (6) amends section 5108 to provide for the classification of positions which exceed NS-20 in difficulty and responsibility. In the case of executive agencies, OPM has the authority to require prior approval for such a classification, or to impose numerical limitations on the number of such positions in any agency.

Section 3 consists of amendments to chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, concerning pay rates and systems. Some of these amendments are technical or conforming in nature. The major substantive provisions are as follows:

Subsection (a) amends subchapter I in its entirety to provide for the new NS Pay System. Section 5301 sets the pay-setting policy for the new system, and provides that each grade from NS-10 through NS-20 has a range of rates of basic pay under which the maximum rate exceeds the minimum rate by no more than 40 percent of the minimum rate. No rate of basic pay may exceed the rate for level V of the Executive Schedule.

Section 5302 provides for the annual adjustment by the President of the minimum and maximum rates of basic pay for each grade of the NS Pay System each January. The pay adjustments are based on Bureau of Labor Statistics surveys of non-Federal pay. A Pay Agent designated by the President determines what NS maximum and minimum pay rates are necessary to insure that the midpoint of the rate range for each grade is within the "comparability range," that is, ten percent above or below the rates reported by the BLS survey. The Pay Agent also determines where within the comparability range the NS midpoint should be, based on the consideration of such factors as turnover and vacancy rates and patterns of career progression, labor market conditions, indications of trends in the quality of NS employees, and affordability to the Government.

In performing these functions, the Pay Agent is required to give thorough consideration to the views of the National Employees Pay Council (consisting of all Federal employee unions with which OPM consults on Governmentwide personnel regulations) and to hold public hearings to seek the views of other interested parties.

The Pay Agent submits a report (including the views of the National Employees Pay Council) to the President, who then indicates in his budget, a year in advance of the effective date of the pay increase, exactly what minimum and maximum pay rates he has decided to put into effect for the NS Pay System. If the President decides that national emergency or exceptional economic conditions affecting the general welfare require that pay be held below the comparability range, he is required to assess the effect on the recruitment and retention of well-qualified employees.

Section 5303 provides pay-setting rules for employees under the NS Pay System that are identical to those previously applicable to employees under the General Schedule, with two exceptions: new appointments above the minimum of the rate range for individuals with superior qualifications are permitted at all grades (they were formerly restricted to GS-11 and above) and employees who are repromoted to a grade formerly held are generally entitled only to the rate they would have had if they served continuously in the higher grade.

Section 5304 provides for merit increases for employees under the NS Pay System. Any employee whose performance is rated fully successful or better will, at the time the rate ranges are adjusted under section 5302, receive a merit increase equal in amount to the increase in the minimum rate for the employee's grade. In addition, and effective at the same time, such an employee will receive an additional basic pay increase in an amount determined by the agency head. The Pay Agent prescribes minimums and maximums for the aggregate amount of such additional increases that agencies are required to grant. (It is the intention to set this amount at the level previously spent under the General Schedule for within-grade increases and quality step increases.)

Section 5305 authorize the President's Pay Agent to establish geographic differentials, of up to 25 percent of basic pay, for NS employees in areas or localities where the Pay Agent determines the Government would otherwise encounter difficulty in recruiting or retaining employees. Geographic differentials are paid to every NS employee in a designated area, and are not a part of basic pay.

Section 5306 authorizes the President to establish staffing differentials, of up to 60 percent of basic pay, for NS employees in occupations or levels, in one or more areas or locations, where he determines the Government would otherwise encounter difficulty in recruiting or retaining employees. Staffing differentials are not a part of basic pay.

Section 5307 authorizes OPM to establish supervisory differentials for an NS supervisor of non-NS employees if the midpoint of the rate range of the supervisor's position is lower than the midpoint of the rate range for the subordinates' positions and, without such a differential, the subordinates would actually be paid more than the supervisor. A supervisory differential could increase the supervisor's total pay to exceed the subordinates' pay by three percent. A supervisory differential is not part of basic pay.

Section 5308 authorizes OPM to permit agencies to pay lump-sum bonuses of up to 25 percent of basic pay to a newly appointed NS employee or to an employee who must relocate to an NS position, if the agency would otherwise have difficulty in filling the position. An employee must enter into a service agreement under which he or she agrees to complete a specified period of service with the agency in order to receive such a bonus.

Section 5309 authorizes OPM to permit agencies to pay retention allowances, of up to 25 percent of basic pay, to employees who would otherwise be likely to leave the agency and who have unusually high or unique qualifications or for whose services the agency has a special need. A retention allowance is not a part of basic pay.

Section 5310 provides for pay for NS employees whose positions are classified above NS-20. The head of the agency sets pay for those positions at any rate between 120 percent of the minimum rate for NS-20 and the rate for level V of the Executive Schedule. Employees in these positions are not subject to sections 5302, 5303, or 5304, but are eligible for the differentials, allowances, and bonuses of the NS Pay System.

Section 5310a authorizes the payment of performance-based cash awards to employees under the NS Pay System. Cash awards may be up to ten percent of basic pay, or, in exceptional cases, up to 20 percent of basic pay.

Section 5310b limits to level I of the Executive Schedule the aggregate amount of basic pay, differentials, bonuses, allowances, and performance-based cash awards an NS employee may receive in a calendar year.

Subsection (c) of section 3 amends subchapter III of chapter 53 in its entirety to establish the Federal Locality Pay System. Under section 5331, the 15 grades of the LS Pay System each have a rate range of up to 40 percent. No rate of basic pay may exceed the rate for level V of the Executive Schedule.

Section 5332 provides OPM with the authority to establish LS pay areas on the basis of such factors as local labor market patterns, commuting patterns, and the practices of other employers. This section also directs OPM to recommend to the President's Pay Agent appropriate minimum and maximum rates of basic pay for each LS grade in each pay area, so that LS pay is within the "comparability range" of non-Federal pay in the pay area as shown by Bureau of Labor Statistics surveys, and using the same adjustment factors as the NS Pay System. OPM has authority to set pay for overseas LS employees.

In carrying out these responsibilities, OPM is advised by the Federal Labor-Management Committee, which consists of five members nominated by agency management, five members nominated by Federal employee unions, and a Chairman (who is also the Chairman of the Federal Prevailing Rate Advisory Committee). The Committee operates by majority vote, and submits an annual report to the Office for transmittal to Congress.

After receiving OPM's recommendations, the President's Pay Agent recommends to the President an overall average percentage LS Pay System adjustment, and the President makes the decision on the overall average adjustment. OPM puts the new LS pay rates into effect. Like the NS Pay System, the LS Pay System's general adjustment occurs in January of each year.

Section 5333 provides for setting pay for LS employees, and is the same in substance as section 5303 for NS employees.

Section 5334 provides for merit increases for LS employees. They receive general increases and additional basic pay increases in the same manner as NS employees under Section 5304, but also, if in the lower third of the rate range, are assured of receiving increases in basic pay of three percent each year, or three percent every second year if the employee's pay is above the lower third but below the midpoint of the rate range. An employee's performance must be fully successful or better to receive such an increase, and the increase may not raise the employee's pay above midpoint.

Since LS pay would be locality-based, LS employee may not receive geographic differentials, but are eligible for staffing differentials (under section 5335), supervisory differentials (under section 5336), recruitment and relocation bonsus (under section 5337), and retention allowances (under section 5338). They are eligible for performance-based awards (under section 5339), and are subject to the level I aggregate pay limit (under section 5340).

Subsection (d) of section 3 amends subchapter IV of chapter 53, concerning prevailing rate systems. Aside from conforming changes, these amendments change the full-scale surveys to every 3 years and change the prevailing rate, at which Federal pay is equated with private sector pay, from step 2 to step 3 of the five-step rate range. The changes also delay the effective dates of Federal wage increases, to parallel the new January effective date for the NS Pay System (replacing the old General Schedule October effective date). Adjustments in Federal wage increases are subject to Presidentially-imposed limitation, if equity with NS and LS employees so requires.

Subsection (e) amends subchapter IV of chapter 53, to make grade and pay retention applicable to the NS and LS Pay Systems in the same way they applied to the General Schedule.

Subsection (f) amends subchapter VII of chapter 53. Amended section 5371 authorizes OPM to extend to NS or LS employees any provision of title 38, United States Code, concerning health care personnel in the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Section 5372 is amended to establish a new pay system for administrative law judges and judges of boards of contract appeals. The President would set 3 or more rates for judges which may not be less than the minimum rate for NS-20 or more than the rate for level IV of the Executive Schedule. Judges are placed in the appropriate rates by OPM.

New section 5376 authorizes OMB to permit agency heads to set pay for no more than a Governmentwide total of 400 critical positions without regard to normal pay limits, but the maximum pay may not exceed level I of the Executive Schedule, unless the President approves a higher rate. OMB allocates the 400 positions among agencies and may require an agency to obtain OMB approval before paying an employee under this authority. Up to 30 of the positions could be Executive Schedule positions.

New section 5377 permits the President to authorize the payment of geographic and staffing differentials, recruitment and relocation bonuses, and retention allowances to employees under other pay systems.

New section 5378 bars judicial review of certain authorities entrusted to the President, the Pay Agent, OMB, and OPM by various provisions of the bill.

Section 4 amends chapter 54 of title 5, United States Code, to replace the provisions of the Performance Management and Recognition System (which is eliminated) with a new authority for the President's Pay Agent to establish special occupational pay systems for occupations or groups of occupations that the Pay Agent decides, for reasons of good administrations, should not be under the NS or LS Pay System. The process for establishing such new systems includes consultation with agencies and Federal unions, public hearings, publication of proposals in the Federal Register, and a 90-day delay after Congress has been notified before any special occupational pay system takes effect. A special occupational pay system may not provide for the waiver of any law, rule, or regulation that could not be waived as part of a demonstration project under chapter 47 of title 5. Basic pay under a special occupational pay system may not exceed the rate for level V of the Executive Schedule, and total pay for an individual may not exceed the rate for level I.

Section 5 of the bill authorizes OPM to permit agencies to grant employees time off duty as an incentive award for superior accomplishment.

Section 6 of the bill allows agencies to pay new hires an advance of up to 2 pay periods' basic pay if they have to relocate to accept the job.

Section 7 of the bill consists of amendments, mostly conforming in nature, to subchapter V of chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code, concerning premium pay. Two substantive amendments are to provide that hazardous duty premium pay may be applied to inherently hazardous positions if OPM approves such application, and to eliminate the current duplicative overtime computations for employees covered by both subchapter V and the Fair Labor Standards Act. Such employees will have their overtime computed only under the Fair Labor Standards Act, but hours in excess of eight hours in a day are deemed overtime hours. Another substantive amendment is to allow employees doing emergency work to receive premium pay without regard to the usual biweekly limit on premium pay, although they are subject to an annual aggregate pay limitation of the maximum rate for NS-20.

Section 8 of the bill amends sections 5532, 8344, and 8468 of title 5, United States Code, to permit the Director of OPM to waive, on a case-by-case basis, the normal financial penalties on reemployed military or civilian retirees when there is exceptional difficulty in filling a scientific, technical, professional, or administrative position.

Section 9 permits agencies to pay travel expenses for job interviews and travel and transportation expenses for any new appointee where the agency finds it desirable to do so, rather than just for the limited categories of new appointees for which such payment was previously permitted.

Section 10 increases the maximum uniform allowance from $125 per year to $400 per year, and permits OPM to adjust this maximum in the future by regulatory action when necessary.

Section 11 consists of miscellaneous technical and conforming amendments to title 5, United States Code.

Section 12 permits OPM to determine the appropriate successor reference in the case of any reference to the General Schedule or a grade or rate thereof in any provision of law not amended by this Act.

Section 13 amends the Foreign Service Act and title 38, United States Code, to provide that annual adjustments in the pay schedules for the Foreign Service and for employees in the Department of Veteran Affairs' Health Services and Research Administration are tied to the annual adjustments in the NS Pay System. The President will adjust military pay and allowances each year by amounts he determines appropriate.

Section 14 provides for effective dates and transition provisions relating to the implementation of the bill's provisions. Generally, the President determines when the various provisions are put into effect after enactment, but all of the provisions are required to be effective by January 1, 1995. No employee's rate of basic pay may be reduced by reason of any of the bill's provisions.

Effective in January 1991, the President would be authorized to put geographic differentials of up to 8 percent of basic pay into effect in the New York, San Francisco, and Los Angeles Consolidated Metropolitan Statistical Areas. Effective at the same time, the President would be authorized to put into effect five percent pay increases in the form of staffing differentials, for employees in GS-5 and GS-7 who are in occupations slated for the NS Pay System.

The physicians' comparability allowance program, now slated to expire on September 30, 1990, is extended through the transition period, to September 30, 1995. At that time, a review will be made to see if the program is still needed.

Effective in January 1994, the rates of basic pay of the NS and LS Pay Systems take effect, and the rates of the NS Pay System will be set under the old General Schedule pay adjustment process for the last time. The rates of pay of the LS Pay System will be set under the new law, and rates under the Federal Wage System will be set under the amended prevailing rate law.

Effective in January 1995, with the NS Pay System adjustment under the new procedure, the bill's provisions will be fully effective.

OFFICE OF PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT,
Washington, DC, May 1, 1990.

Hon. DAN QUAYLE,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The Office of Personnel Management submits herewith a legislative proposal entitled the "Federal Pay Reform Act of 1990." This legislative proposal would modernize the system for paying the Government's employees. We request that it be referred to the appropriate committee for early consideration.

It has become more and more evident that the Government's 40-year-old pay structure is in sore need of reform. The monolithic, nationwide General Schedule for all white-collar civilian occupations has shown itself to lack the flexibility needed to respond effectively to diverse and changing labor market conditions. As the Government has come to need more specialized skills for its many functions, we have encountered serious difficulty in recruiting and retaining critically-needed employees. However, the issue of Federal pay must be carefully considered in light of the Government's fiscal situation

This legislative proposal would address these problems with a combination of interim relief provisions and a long-term restructuring of the Federal pay system. As the President indicated in his budget for fiscal year 1991, we would provide immediate pay increases for certain entry-level positions and for three geographic areas where we have encountered the most severe difficulties in hiring, and agencies would be given additional flexibilities to help them in recruiting badly needed workers.

With these interim relief measures in place, we would then proceed with a more fundamental restructuring, which has been developed through discussions with a wide range of interested parties. The process of comparing Federal and non-Federal pay would be made more credible by taking into consideration what the Government needs to pay in order to recruit and retain well-qualified employees. For occupations where labor markets tend to operate on a local basis, we would move to locality-oriented pay-setting. All departments and agencies would be given new abilities to respond to different personnel needs, with a variety of pay differentials and bonuses.

New efforts would be made to link pay and performance, in order to motivate and reward our employees. Special provisions would address the needs of particular groups, such as administrative law judges and our most senior scientists and technical experts, and flexibilities would be included to deal with other special categories in the future.

Taken together, and phased in gradually in order to avoid any sudden increases in budgetary outlays, these changes will assist the Government in recruiting and retaining employees of the caliber necessary to continue our Nation's proud tradition of excellence in the public service.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that the enactment of this legislative proposal would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

CONSTANCE BERRY NEWMAN,
Director.

FACT SHEET—THE FEDERAL PAY REFORM ACT OF 1990

The Administration is submitting legislation to Congress to reform and modernize the Federal civilian pay system covering more than 1.4 million white-collar workers.

In developing the proposal, the goal was to design a pay system which:

Enables the Government to compete for the talent it needs;

Treats employees fairly; and Spends precious taxpayer dollars wisely.

The Administration's proposal reform focuses on four key areas:

1. A STRUCTURE TO REFLECT GEOGRAPHIC AND OCCUPATIONAL VARIATIONS IN PAY

At present, the General Schedule pays employees in the same grade level identical base salaries regardless of where they work in the United States. Non-Federal pay rates vary widely across the country and by occupation, causing Federal employees to be either overpaid or underpaid in relation to their non-Federal counterparts. The Government has an unfair competitive advantage over other employers in some locations and for some occupations and is hampered in its ability to recruit and retain a qualified workforce in others.

The Administration's proposal introduces the concept of market-sensitive pay by replacing the current monolithic General Schedule pay system with two basic pay systems—the National Pay System and the Locality Pay System.

Occupations recruited from a national labor market will be covered under the National System (primarily professional and administrative positions) while occupations normally recruited from local markets will be covered under the Locality System (primarily technical and clerical positions).

The National System will have a nationwide pay scale with opportunity for added geographic differentials in exceptionally high labor cost areas. The Locality System will have different pay scales for different geographic areas. There will also be flexibility to establish separate pay and job evaluation systems for occupations with unique labor market characteristics which do not land themselves to the basic framework (e.g. health care and police). Also, a special pay system will be established for administrative law judges and members of boards of contract appeals.

2. NEW FLEXIBILITIES TO RESPOND TO SPECIAL SITUATIONS AND CIRCUMSTANCES

The lack of flexibility in the current pay system hinders the Government's ability to respond to difficult or unusual recruitment conditions. For example, the current system requires that most new employees be hired at the minimum of the pay grade for the job regardless of the individual's qualifications. The current system also lacks monetary incentives to attract, retain and relocate high quality individuals who are in short supply in the labor market.

The Administration's proposal includes several new or expanded flexibilities including:

Recruitment bonuses and retention allowances which will give agencies tools for getting particularly well-qualified individuals in hard-to-fill occcupations to come to, and remain in, the Federal service;

Relocation bonuses to encourage employees to move from one location to another, particularly from a relatively low cost to a relatively high cost area;

Authority to exempt up to 400 critically-needed top jobs from normal pay limits;

Expanded authority to pay new hires with unique or special qualifications or for whom the Government has a special need, above minimum pay of the grade at all grade levels.

3. A STRONGER LINK BETWEEN THE PERFORMANCE AND PAY OF AN EMPLOYEE

The current pay system places a heavy emphasis on entitlement and longevity increases. Excluding managers currently covered by a merit pay system, the 1.4 million General Schedule workers are entitled to receive the full annual pay adjustment regardless of their performance. Almost all receive regular pay increases based on time-in-grade in addition to the annual pay schedule adjustments.

The Administration's proposal creates a strong relationship between pay and performance. Under both the National and Locality Pay Systems, an employee whose performance is less than fully successful, as measured by performance appraisals, will not receive the annual pay adjustment.

Under the National Schedule, individuals will be advanced through the pay range based solely on performance. Under the Locality System employees' performance must be at least fully successful to progress to the middle of the pay range for their grade; pay increases above the middle of the range can be earned based on exceptional performance. Each agency will have flexibility in designing pay for performance systems tailored to their needs and environment.

4. AN EFFECTIVE PAY SURVEY AND ADJUSTMENT PROCESS

The current pay adjustment process for the General Schedule does not function effectively. Recommendations for annual adjustments now occur after critical budget decisions on the coming year have been made. In addition, budget pressures, combined with comparability adjustment figures that are neither credible nor realistic, have made the current system virtually inoperable. Employee representatives, public interest groups, and the Government itself lack confidence in the process.

Under the Administration's proposal the formal recommendation from the President's Pay Agent involving Presidential decisions on pay will be made in time to be incorporated in the budget. The proposal will also enhance the reliability of the surveys used to measure pay in the labor market by including State and local government workers—a significant and highly relevant portion of the nation's workforce that is currently excluded from the surveys by law.

The Pay Agent's recommendations for pay adjustments will factor in the Government's ability to compete along with measures of what other employers are paying. Thus, the Agent will recommend an adjustment within a "comparability range" of plus or minus 10 percent of the middle of non-Federal pay. Factors to be considered will include turnover and vacancy rates in Federal jobs, unemployment rates, and the quality of recruits to Federal jobs.

Federal employee unions will have the opportunity to contribute their views during the pay adjustment process through two committees; one for the National, and one for the Local Systems. Public hearings will also provide a broad spectrum of views.

Immediate relief

While the Administration's proposal is designed to restore the Government's competitive position in the marketplace, the magnitude of the changes involved as well as budget realities means that full implementation of the new system will take several years. Therefore, the proposal contains several measures to provide immediate relief in the most pressing problem areas. These include:

A differential of up to 8 percent of base pay in 3 high labor cost areas—the Los Angeles, New York and San Francisco Consolidated Metropolitan Statistical Areas;

A 5 percent increase in starting salaries for college-entry level positions;

Recruitment, retention, and relocation bonuses;

Expanded authority to hire above the minimum pay rate of each pay grade;

Exemptions from normal pay limits for up to 400 world class experts; and Authority to pay travel and transportation expenses for new employees and pre-employment interviews.

KEY FEATURES OF THE FEDERAL PAY REFORM ACT OF 1990

I. PURPOSE AND OBJECTIVES

The Administration is proposing a comprehensive measure to modernize and reform the Federal pay system. Key objectives of the proposal include:

Restructuring the pay system to reflect diverse labor markets;

Increasing flexibilities in the pay system to adapt to special situations and circumstances;

Strengthening the link between the performance of an employee and his or her pay;

Instituting a credible, effective, and enduring pay adjustment process; and Providing immediate relief for critical pay problems.

II. BASIC DESIGN/RESTRUCTURING

The monolithic General Schedule (GS) and its associated Performance Management and Recognition System (GM) will be replaced by two basic white-collar pay systems:

Federal National Pay System (NS) with nationwide rates and the opportunity for added geographic differentials of up to 25 percent in exceptionally high labor cost areas with area-wide staffing problems; and Federal Locality Pay System (LS) composed of a number of pay schedules reflecting various local labor markets throughout the country.

Coverage of the two new systems will be along occupational lines:

National system will cover jobs for which recruitment is normally conducted from a national labor market (e.g., clerical, technical, and some administrative jobs).

The essence of the current position classification system will be maintained for these two new pay systems.

No employee's rate of basic pay will be reduced below that in effect upon enactment of the Reform Act by reason of amendment made by the Act.

Special provisions include:

Banding supergrade positions into one senior NS pay range. The minimum rate is set at 120 percent of the minimum NS-20 (GS-15) rate, the maximum rate is set at Executive Schedule level V, and progression through the rate range is based on performance.

A special multi-level pay system for Administrative Law Judges and members of boards of contract appeals (currently GS-15-18). The President will set rates for three or more pay levels and OPM will determine the rate applicable to each judge or member. In determining rates, OPM will consider the complexity and variety of cases and any administrative responsibilities assigned. The minimum rate will be no lower than the minimum NS-20 rate and the maximum rate will be no higher than the Executive Schedule level IV rate.

An exemption from current pay ceilings of up to 400 critically needed top jobs filled by world class experts in scientific, technical, professional, or administrative fields. Up to 30 of these positions may be Executive Schedule jobs. The Office of Management and Budget will allocate the 400 positions to agencies in consultation with the Office of Personnel Management (OPM). Total and base pay for these jobs will be limited to the Executive Schedule level I rate unless the President, on a case-by-case basis, approves a higher salary.

The new minimum rate for the Senior Executive Service (SE) schedule (now no less than the minimum GS-16 rate) will be increased to no less than 120 percent of the minimum NS-20 (GS-15) rate; the maximum rate will remain at no more than the Executive Schedule level IV rate. The SES schedule will be adjusted by the President when either the NS schedule or Executive Schedule is adjusted. The aggregate limitation on SES total pay will remain at the Executive Schedule level I rate.

A provision allowing OPM to exempt certain positions, such as those with adjudicatory responsibilities, from the performance-based pay aspects of the National Pay System.

A provision for waivers, on a case-by-case basis, of dual compensation restrictions when Federal retirees are reemployed in scientific, technical, professional, or administrative positions for which there are exceptional recruitment and retention difficulties.

A provision allowing the President to extend the payment of geographic, staffing, and supervisory differentials; recruitment and relocation bonuses; and retention allowances to employees not under the two new major pay systems.

In addition, the President's Pay Agent will be authorized to establish separate pay and job evaluation systems for those few occupations which are fundamentally incompatible with the national and locality pay systems. The legislation does not mandate which occupations will be covered by these special occupational pay systems. Appropriate consultation, notifications, and hearings are required prior to establishing such systems. The special systems may not waive laws and regulations that cannot be waived for demonstration projects (i.e., merit system principles; discrimination protections; protections from political pressures; and leave, insurance, and annuity programs). Although special occupational pay systems are expected to be rare, protective services and health care occupations are likely candidates for early consideration. A related section allows OPM the option of applying provisions of the Department of Veterans Affairs pay system to health care positions now under the General Schedule.

III. KEY FEATURES OF FEDERAL NATIONAL PAY SYSTEM

Organizational Structure:

A Pay Agent of one or more Executive Branch officials will be designated by the President;

A National Employees Pay Council (NEPC) will be created, giving unions holding government-wide consultation rights with OPM (currently 10, however the number is not limited in law) the opportunity to provide advice on pay matters;

The Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) will conduct appropriate surveys of non-Federal pay rates.

Schedule Adjustment Process (after the transition period):

Each year, the Pay Agent will recommend to the President a schedule adjustment which establishes a Federal pay structure with midpoints generally within a comparability range of +/−10 percent of the trend line describing the central tendency of appropriately weighted non-Federal pay data reported by the BLS survey. This recommendation will be made by November 1 so it can be taken into consideration in the preparation of the President's budget for the following fiscal year. In determining the appropriate amount to recommend within the comparability range, the Pay Agent will:

Assess the ability of Federal agencies to compete in the labor market, considering such factors as Federal turnover and vacancy rates and career progression patterns, quality trends of the existing work force, unemployment trends in the non-Federal sector, and the need to provide Government services economically;

Meet with and give thorough consideration to the views of the NEPC and hold public hearings.

The President may implement the Agent's recommendation or select a different NS adjustment figure within the comparability range. Under circumstances of national emergency or serious economic conditions, the President may determine that a lesser amount is appropriate. In such event, the President will report to Congress his reasons and an assessment of the impact of the decision on the Government's ability to recruit and retain well-qualified employees.

Geographic Differentials:

Geographic differentials up to 25 percent of base pay may be authorized in high labor cost cities.

Pay Range, Pay Progression, and Grades:

Progression through the rate range will be based on performance.

Only employees rated as Fully Successful or higher will receive annual raises reflecting the schedule adjustment.

Pay range width may not exceed 40 percent (currently 30 percent). Formal pay steps within the grade ranges will be abolished.

The 11 grades of NS-10-20 will equate to GS-5-15. (The one senior NS pay band above NS-20, corresponding to GS-16-18, will be part of the National System although basic pay for the band will be set under separate provisions.)

IV. KEY FEATURES OF THE FEDERAL LOCALITY SYSTEM

Organizational Structure:

Local pay areas will be established to encompass all locations in which employees under the LS pay system have official duty stations, on the basis of such factors as local labor market and commuting patterns and practices of other employers. The OPM Director will make the final decision on pay area boundaries after giving thorough consideration to the views of the Federal Labor-Management Pay Committee (FLMPC).

The FLMPC will also recommend salary schedule adjustments to the OPM Director. The Committee will have 5 labor members, 5 management members, and a Chairman. The Chairman of the FLMPC will also be Chairman of the existing blue-collar Federal Prevailing Rate Advisory Committee. With OPM approval, the FLMPC may establish one or more subcommittees on a regional or other basis.

BLS will conduct appropriate local salary surveys of non-Federal pay rates.

Adjustment Process (after the transition period):

By October 1 of each year, the OPM Director will recommend to the President's Pay Agent (1) local schedule adjustments which establish Federal pay structures with midpoints generally within a comparability range of +/− 10 percent of the trend line describing the central tendency of appropriately weighted non-Federal pay data reported by the BLS surveys and (2) a resultant system-wide average LS adjustment figure. In determining the appropriate amounts to recommend within the comparability ranges, the OPM Director will: Consider the same factors used in setting NS rates; and consider the recommendations of the FLMPC on the various local and average adjustments.

The Pay Agent will review the OPM Director's recommendation and recommend an average LS adjustment figure to the President. This recommendation will be made by November 1 so it can be taken into consideration in the preparation of the President's budget for the following fiscal year.

The President may implement the Agent's recommendation or select a different average LS adjustment figure within the comparability range. Under circumstances of national emergency or serious economic conditions, the President may determine that a lesser amount is appropriate. In such event, the President will report to Congress his reasons and an assessment of the impact of the decision on the Government's ability to recruit and retain well-qualified employees.

All local schedules will be adjusted on the same date in January of each fiscal year, to coincide with the adjustment of the National Schedule.

Pay Range, Pay Progression, and Grades:

Only employees rated Fully Successful or higher will receive annual raises reflecting the schedule adjustment.

Pay range width may not exceed 40 percent (currently 30 percent). Formal pay steps within the grade ranges will be abolished.

Time-in-grade increments of 3 percent (similar to steps) will be used up to midpoint of the rate range for employees rated Fully Successful or higher.

Progression beyond the midpoint of the range will be based solely on performance.

The 15 grades of LS-1—15 will equate to GS-1—15.

V. SPECIAL AUTHORITIES COMMON TO BOTH THE NATIONAL AND LOCALITY PAY SYSTEMS

Staffing differentials for identified classes (occupation and grade combinations) of positions in one or more locations will replace Special Salary Rates. These will be used to address labor market anomalies and may be up to 60 percent of the employee's rate of basic pay. They will not be basic pay.

Authority to hire above the minimum rate, which currently exists for positions at GS-11 and above, will be extended to all grades. As under current law, a candidate's existing pay or unusually high or unique qualifications, or a special need of the Government for the candidate's services will continue to be the considerations in the use of this authority. Delegation of this authority by OPM to agencies will be permitted.

Recruitment and relocation bonuses of up to 25 percent of basic pay may be authorized. These new bonuses will be used to address staffing problems and will require employee service agreements in return. They will not be basic pay.

Up to two pay periods of advance pay will be authorized to assist new appointees required to relocate for a job.

Retention allowances of up to 25 percent of basic pay will be authorized to avoid the loss of essential employees who have unusually high qualifications or to meet special agency needs. They will not be basic pay.

New supervisory differentials (not basic pay) will be authorized to alleviate pay inversions when supervisors have subordinates under a different pay system. Differentials will be payable only if the basic pay range midpoint for the subordinate is higher than the basic pay range midpoint for the supervisor and the subordinate is actually higher paid than the supervisor. Unlike the current authority for General Schedule supervisors of Federal Wage System employees, which is restricted to comparisons of basic pay, it will be permissible to consider total pay in setting the new supervisory differentials. A supervisory differential could not cause the supervisor's pay to be more than 3 percent above the subordinate's pay.

Travel and transportation expenses for new appointees may be granted to pay for expenses incurred in moving to a first Federal job. Payment of such expenses will no longer be restricted to shortage category occupations. Payment for expenses associated with pre-employment interviews of job candidates will also be authorized. This will allow the Government to be more competitive, especially in college recruitment.

Hazard pay provisions will be reformed to provide more equitable pay treatment for white-collar workers. The current 25 percent maximum on hazard pay will be retained.

Performance-based cash awards of up to 10 percent of an employee's basic pay may be given at agency discretion to employees rated Fully Successful or higher. In exceptional cases, the award may go up to 20 percent of basic pay. (These awards are separate from those currently authorized under the incentive awards program.)

Time off as a productivity incentive may be granted to employees for contributions beyond job requirements as an alternative to cash awards.

Overtime pay calculation methods for employees covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act will be greatly simplified. No employee will receive less of an overtime benefit than previously provided.

Waivers of limitations on premium pay will be authorized for employees performing emergency or rescue work. This will permit appropriate compensation for employees who engage in emergency and lifesaving operations.

The statutory limit on uniform allowances will be increased from $125 to $400 and OPM will regulate future adjustments to this annual limit on agency payments for employee uniforms.

VI. CHANGES TO FEDERAL WAGE SYSTEM (BLUE-COLLAR PAY SYSTEM)

Prevailing market rates will be matched to step three, the middle step of Federal Wage System (FWS) schedules, instead of the current step two in order to better align average Federal rates with market rates.

Full scale local wage surveys will be conducted at least every three years (instead of every two years), with interim surveys to update pay data conducted in intervening years.

The effective date of wage schedules will be permanently changed to 150 days after the start of wage surveys. This will have the effect of making permanent the 90-day delay in FWS schedule adjustments which has been mandated annually by temporary legislation in recent years. It will also parallel the new January effective date for the NS and LS pay systems (replacing the old GS October effective date).

The President may direct OPM to impose a limitation on maximum adjustments to wage schedules during any year if the President determines such a limit is required by consideration of equity with employees under the National and Locality Pay Systems. In making such a determination, the President will consider the likely effect on the ability of agencies to recruit and retain well-qualified employees.

VII. KEY PROVISIONS FOR 1991 OR EARLY IMPLEMENTATION INCLUDE BOTH TEMPORARY/INTERIM ACTIONS AND SELECTED PERMANENT PROVISIONS

Immediate Relief Temporary Provisions Effective in 1991

In addition to the 1991 across-the-board General Schedule adjustment:

Geographic differentials of up to 8 percent (taking into account special salary rates, as appropriate) for GS workers may be authorized in three high labor cost Consolidated Metropolitan Statistical Areas—New York, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. They will not be basic pay.

Nationwide 5 percent salary increases (differentials) may be authorized at GS-5 and GS-7 for college entry-level occupations. They will not be basic pay.

Early Implementation of Permanent Provisons

In addition to the 1991 across-the-board General Schedule adjustment and immediate relief provisons, the President's 1991 budget also provides for:

Recruitment and Relocation Bonuses;

Retention Allowances;

Authority to hire above the minimum rate at all grades.

Other provisons not mentioned in the 1991 budget but planned for early implementation include:

Travel and transportation expenses for new appointees and pre-employment interviews;

Banding supergrade positions into one pay range;
